THE OLD ROOFTREE.

"Hello, Jim! Where have you been lately?" shouted a broker the other evening to a portly, finely dressed man in the corridor of a New York hotel. The gentleman stopped pocketbook hands with his friend, and replied:

"I've been home to see my old father and mother, the first time in 16 years, and I tell you, old man, I wouldn't have missed that visit for all my fortune."

"Kinder good to visit your boyhood home, eh?"

"You bet! Sit down. I was just thinking of the old folks, and feel talkative, If you have a few moments to spare, sit down, light a cigar, and listen to a story of a rich man who had almost forgotten his father and mother."

They sat down and the man told his story:

"How I came to visit my home happened in a curious way. Six weeks ago I went down to Fire Island fishing. I had a lunch put up at Crook A. Nash's, and you can imagine my astonishment when I opened the hamper to find a package of crackers wrapped in a piece of newspaper. The newspaper was the little patent-inside country weekly published at my home in Wisconsin. I read every word of it, advertisements and all. There was George Kellugg, who was a schoolmate of mine, advertising hams and salt pork, and another boy was postmaster. By George! it made me home-sick, and I determined to go home, and go home I did.

"In the first place I must tell you how I came to New York. I had a tiff with my father and left home. I finally turned up in New York with one dollar in my pocket. I got a job running a freight elevator in the house in which I am now a partner. My haste to get rich drove the thoughts of my parents from me, and when I did think of them the hard words that my father last spoke to me rankled in my bosom. Well, I went home. I didn't see much change in Chicago, but the magnificent depot in Milwaukee I thought was an improvement on the old shed they used to have. It was only 30 miles from Milwaukee to my home, and I tell you, John, that train seemed to creep. I was actually worse than a schoolboy going home for a vacation. At last we neared the town. Familiar sights met my eyes and they filled with tears. There was Bill Lyman's red barn, just the same, but, Great Scott! What were all the other houses! We rode nearly a mile before coming to the depot, passed houses where only occasionally I saw one that was familiar. The town had grown to ten times its size as I knew it. The train stopped and I jumped off. Not a face in sight that I knew, and I started down the platform to go home. In the office door stood the station agent. I walked up and said, 'Howdy, Mr. Collins?"

"He stared at me and replied, 'You've got the best of me, sir,'"

"I told him who I was and what I had been doing in New York, and he didn't make any bones about talking to me. Said he, 'It's about time you came home. You in New York rich, and your father scratching gravel to get a bare living.'

"I tell you, John, it knocked me all in a heap. I thought my father had enough to live upon comfortably. Then a notion struck me. Before going home I telegraphed to Chicago to one of our correspondents there to send one thousand dollars by first mail. Then I went into Mr. Collins' back office, got my trunk in there, and put on an old hand-me-down suit that I used for fishing and hunting. My plug hat I replaced by a soft hat, took my valise in my hand and went home. Somehow the place didn't look right. The currant bushes had been dug up from the front yard and the fence was gone. All the old locust trees had been cut down and young maples were planted. The house looked smaller, somehow, too. But I went up to the front door and rang the bell. Mother came to the door and said, 'We don't wish to buy anythink to-day, sir.'

"It didn't take a minute to survey her from head to foot. Neatly dressed, John, but a patch and darn here and there, her hair streaked with gray, her face thin, drawn and wrinkled. Yet over those eye-glasses shone those good, benevolent eyes. I stood staring at her and then she began to stare at me. I saw the blood rush to her face and with a great sob she threw herself upon me and clasped me about the neck, crying, 'It's Jimmy! it's Jimmy!'

"Then I cried, too, John. I just broke down and cried like a baby. She got me into the house, hugging and kissing me, and then she went to the back door and shouted, 'George,'

"Father came in in a minute and from the kitchen asked, 'What do you want, Car'line?'

"Then he came in. He knew me in a minute. He stuck out his hand and grasped mine and said sternly, 'Well, young man, do you propose to behave yourself now?'

"He tried to put on a brave front, but he broke down. There we three sat, like whipped school children, all whimpering. At last supper time came, and mother went out to prepare it, I went into the kitched with her.

"Where do you live, Jimmy?" she asked.

"'In New York,' I replied.

"'What are you workin' at now, Jimmy?"

"'I'm workin' in a dry goods store.'

"'Then I suppose you don't live very high, for I hear tell them city clerks don't get enough to keep body and soul together. So I'll just tell you, Jimmy, we've got nothin' but roast spareribs for supper, We ain't got any money now, Jimmy. We're poorer than Job's turkey.'

"I told her that I would be delighted with the spareribs, and, to tell the truth, John, I haven't eaten a meal in New York that tasted as well as those crisp roasted spareribs did. I spent the evening playing checkers with father, while mother sat by telling me all about their misfortunes, from old white Mooley getting drowned in the pond to father's signing a note for a friend and having to mortgage the place to pay it. The mortgage was due inside of a week and not a cent to meet it with—just $800. She supposed they would be turned out of house and home, but in my mind I supposed they would not. At last 9 o'clock came, and father said: "Jim go out to the barn and see if Kit is all right, Bring in an armful of shingles that are just behind the door and fill up the water pail, Then we'll go to bed and get up early and go a-fishing.'

"I didn't say a word, but I went out to the barn, bedded down the horse, broke up an armful of shingles, pumped a pail of water, filled the woodbox, and then we all went to bed.

"Father called me at half-past four in the morning, and while he was getting a cup of coffee I skipped over to the depot across lots and got my best brass rod. Father took nothing but a trolling line and spoon hook. He rowed the boat with the trolling line in his mouth, while I stood in the stern with a silver shiner rigged on. Now, John, I never saw a man catch fish like he did. He caught four bass and five pickerel and I never got a bite.

"At noon we went ashore, and father went home, while I went to the postoffice. I got a letter from Chicago with a check for $1,000 in it. I got it cashed, with some trouble, getting paid in five and ten dollar bills, making quite a roll. I then got a roast joint of beef and lots of delicacies and had them sent home. After that I went visiting among my old schoolmates for two hours and went home.

The joint was in the oven. Mother had put on her only silk dress and father had donned his Sunday-go-to-meeting clothes, none too good, either. This is where I played a joke on the old folks. Mother was in the kitchen watching the roast, father was out in the barn, and I had a clear coast. I dumped the sugar out of the old blue bowl, put a thousand dollars in it and placed the cover on again. At last supper was ready. Father asked a blessing over it, and he actually trembled when he stuck his knife in the roast.

"'We haven't had a piece of meat like this in five years, Jim,' he said; and mother put in with, 'And we haven't had any coffee in a year, only when we went visitin'.'

"Then she poured out the coffee and lifted the cover of the sugar bowl, asking as she did, 'How many spoons, Jimmy?'

"Then she struck something that wasn't sugar. She picked up the bowl and peered into it, 'Aha, Master Jimmy, playin' your old tricks on your mammy, eh? Well, boys will be boys.'

"Then she gasped for breath. She saw it was money. She looked at me, then at father, and then with trembling hands drew the great roll of bills out.

"Ha; ha! ha! I can see father now as he stood there on tiptoe, with his knife in one hand, fork in the other, and his eyes fairly bulging out of his head. But it was too much for mother. She raised her eyes to heaven and said slowly: 'Put your trust in the Lord and he will provide.'

"Then she fainted. Well, John there's not much more to tell. We threw water in her face and brought her to, and we demolished the dinner, mother saying all the time, 'My boy Jimmy! My boy Jimmy.'

"I stayed home a month. I fixed up the place, paid off all the debts, had a good time and came back again to New York. I am going to send fifty dollars home every week. I tell you, John, it's mighty nice to have a home."

John was looking steadily at the head of his cane. When he spoke he took Jim by the hand and said, "Jim old friend, what you have told me has affected me greatly. I haven't heard from my home way up in Maine for ten years. I'm going home to-morrow."

The Terror of Riches.

Satisfies of suicide show that, after all, the poor man rarely commits suicide owing to poverty. Hundreds of good fellows, with rarely $50 ahead, and five or six in the family to clothe and feed, go on with more equanimity than men with good bank margins. They are generally looking for a job, and frequently have no work ahead for longer than one to six months. Tens of thousands of day laborers in the United States rarely know what their income is to be three months ahead, yet they are neither depressed nor miserable. They readily spend their last dollar; eat liberally, as long as food can be had, and economize when they must. The terror of poverty is not so overpowering as the terror of riches. The fear of losing is greater than the fear of not getting.—Globe Democrat.

A bushel of corn distilled will make four gallons of whiskey. Government tax on four gallons of whiskey, $3·60. The whiskey made ripe and old by the new Jay Eye See rapid process, sells rapidly for $4 per gallon, making $16 for four gallons. Of this $16 the farmer gets 25 cents, the Government gets $3 60; the railroad gets $2; the manufacturer gets $4; the vender gets $6.25; the user gets the "devil"; while the tax payer and producer foot the bill from the earnings of honest toil not connected with the whiskey trade.—Exchange.

"What do you get for carrying that thing?" I asked a man who was struggling under the weight of an advertising banner that appeared twice too heavy for him. The fellow dropped the handle of the banner on the pavement and looked up with a broad grin.

"A dollar a day," he said.

"It's not much."

"That's so, but,"—and he clutched the handle a little tighter—"it's a hundred cents better than doin' nothin'."

"Doesn't it seem silly to look back and think of your courting days?" remarked Smythe to Browne. "Just think how you used to sit and hold each other's hands in silent rapture. We're all over that now, aren't we?"

"Oh, I don't know about that. Yesterday I sat and held my wife's hand for over an hour."

"Is it possible?"

"Yes. We'd been having some words and I knew mighty well that as soon as I let go she'd reach for the rolling pin."

The car had just stopped at the Priests of Pallas Hall, Kansas City, and a jovial kind of a man assisted a lady to alight. As the car started again he rather earnestly remarked: "Now there goes my wife to hear Sam Jones tell her of her faults," "Yet when I try to tell her of them there is a terrible racket. I can't understand women.

An old law is still extant in Virginia which imposes a fine of fifty pounds of tobacco on a man if he absents himself from church for one month without a valid excuse.

A new rule for removing a cinder in the eye is given by a railroad engineer. It is: "Let the injured eye alone and rub the other one, and the cinder will be out in two minutes."

THE FACE AT THE WINDOW.

When the horrid darkness gathers over all the dreary skies,
And the snow flakes flutter round us like the ghosts of butterflies,
What sweet fancies and fond wishes around the weary heart and brain,
When the face that waits our coming throbs against the window pane.

There's the baby's, soft and rosy as the blush upon the peach,
With her dimpled fingers clutching at the flakes just out of reach,
Till her curly head aweary mamma's loving bosom bears,
And she dreams the dancing snow flakes in her fingers turn to tears.

There's the prince of mother's kingdom in top boots and round-about,
With the melody of childhood ringing in his happy shout;
How the joys that wait to-morrow dance before his sparking eyes,
In the snowy treasures dropping from the melancholy skies.

There's the darling blue-eyed sister, with her curls of shining gold,
Pure as when the angels kissed her farewell from the upper fold—
With that look of wistful longing in her pure angelic face,
For a message in the snow flakes whirling hither out of space.

There's another waits his coming at whose step the blushes start,
Whose faint foot-fall in the gloaming finds an echo in her heart—
Goddess of the wheel and distaff, weaver at life's mystic loom,
In what holiest of holies, in the paradise of home.

Dream ye not in art's atelier of a vision to be caught,
With such holy passions haunted and such soul of love inwrought,
As that glowing picture painted on the throbbing heart and brain,
When the forms we love and cherish crowd the wintry window pane.

CECIL DACRE.

Stories From the Life of a London Artist.

Cecil Dacre was an artist. He was desperately poor, undeniably good looking, and he stood six feet in his stockings. Young Dacre was an Englishman, and he lived with another artist, a young American, as poor as himself, just behind the Church of San Martino, in one of the oldest houses of old Naples. So poor were they that they could hardly ever afford a model, so they used to take it in turn to sit to each other. Cecil Dacre and his friend, Orlando P. Jones, were both rival artists, but Dacre had an additional talent—he was a farceur of the first water. He hadn't been six months in Naples before he attended before the Committee of Monte di Misericordia and suggested that they should pay his debts. "I am poor," he said, "I am deserving, and I am deeply in debt—so deeply that I can get no more credit. Pay my debts, give me a little cash to go on with, and you, gentlemen, will be doing your duty. That is your raison d'etre."

But the committee laughed and bowed Mr. Dacre out, declining to accede to this very modest proposition. On another occasion Dacre, becoming indignant at the pertinacious way in which his movements were watched by one of his neighbors who were accustomed to stare at him from his balcony opposite, drove up to his door late one evening in a street cab. The cabman got down from his box, and a female figure wrapped in a cloak was carried carefully into the house by the artist and cabman; the two men reappeared in the street, the artist mysteriously placed his fingers to his lips, paid the cab-driver, and the man drove off. The little drama was well lighted by the solitary gas lamp that stood in front of the artist's lodgings. The inquisitive neighbor was at his post and carefully noted all the details of this mysterious affair.

At noon the next day four officers, accompanied by the neighbor, presented themselves at Dacre's room door and knocked loudly for admission in the name of the law. Only at the third and very imperative summons was the door opened by Orlando P. Jones. The supposed criminal was discovered seated at his little table, upon which lay a blood-stained dagger; his face was buried in his hands.

"Signor Dacre," said the chief of police, "I call upon you to surrender, and I demand to search your apartments. This gentleman," said he, pointing to the informer, "detected you last night conveying the body of a dead or insensible female into the house." The informer, being an Italian, immediately struck an attitude.

"I yield," said Dacre, in a broken voice; "the proofs of my crime you will find in the next room."

Two of the agents advanced and seized the supposed murderer by either arm.

"I should recognize her at once," cried the informer. "The poor creature wore a dress of a bright blue color; I saw the edge of it from under the cloak in which she was enveloped."

The bedroom door was flung open by the leader of the little party. In the center of the room was a lay figure in a bright blue dress; it was standing on its head.

The police instantly released their prisoner.

"Let this be a lesson to you, sir," said Dacre to his too curious victim, in a voice of thunder, "when you next dare to intrude upon the privacy of gentlemen and men of honor."

And then Messrs. Dacre and Jones executed a ferocious pas de triomphe.

A less sublime but equally ridiculous joke was perpetrated by Dacre upon an unfortunate old lady who had the misfortune to dwell upon the second floor of the great house of which the comrades occupied the sky parlors.

She was a devotee—her one harmless amusement being the keeping of two immense gold-fish in a big glass globe upon her balcony. With diabolical ingenuity Dacre, by means of a piece of string, a bent pin and a small piece of meat, angled for the two finny monsters who formed the joy of the old lady's life, caught them, fried them in egg and bread crumbs, and then restored them to their once happy and transparent home.

In the Cafe Verdi, Cecil Dacre once calmly declared, after a rather hilarious breakfast, that he would cause twenty innocent citizens of Naples to be arrested within the hour. The Cafe Verdi is, as we know, situated in the Plazza del Martiri. Dacre went out and purchased a large ball of string; he made a loop in the end of it, and then he took a mean advantage of the urbane politeness of the Italians. Producing a huge note book, he courteously raised his hat to the first respectable bystander.

"Signor," said he, "will you greatly oblige me by holding this piece of string while I take a few measurements? Thank you so much."

And then with great strides he commenced to pace the plaza. Of course a little crowd collected at once. Dacre selected another victim with the same result.

"Keep it quite taut, if you please," and he bowed politely. Within five minutes thirty individuals were holding the tightly stretched string, an immense crowd had assembled and Dacre had finished his pacings, his string and the careful notes he had appeared to be making.

"Be patient, gentlemen," he said; "I shall not detain you long." Then he disappeared, only to re-enter the Cafe Verdi by the back door to watch the result. He had chosen his time with considerable ingenuity, for he knew that the police patrol always arrived on the Plaza del Martiri punctually at noon. It wanted but two minutes of the hour. Just at that time the peace of Naples was much disturbed by political demonstrations, which were severely put down by the authorities. The hour struck. Twenty policemen, headed by a sergeant, appeared upon the scene; of course they proceeded at once to arrest the thirty mysterious conspirators who were still innocently engaged in holding Dacre's string, Dacre and his friends watching the whole scene from the windows of the Cafe Verdi with delighted merriment.

But the master stroke of Dacre's ingenuity was the artfully arranged plan by which he obtained feloniously £5 5s. from Mr. Donald MacTaggart, of Leith. MacTaggart was an ambitious young fellow of small talent, who had recently arrived in Naples to study art. MacTaggart was well-to-do, excessively stingy, preternaturally ugly and preposterously short. He was one of the "uncouth;" he wouldn't foregather with the other students; his ways were not their ways, and young Mr. MacTaggart, of Leith, was shunned when he was not made a butt of.

MacTaggart had one grievance against Providence upon which he constantly harped; it was his want of stature. It was this weakness of the young Scotchman that the wily Cecil Dacre determined to take advantage of, and at the same time gratify his taste for practical joking. Cecil Dacre was in want of £5 very badly indeed. He was always in want of £5, but the want at this particular time was more than usually urgent.

One day the three young men met by accident in the Cafe Verdi.

"That American doctor's a wonderful fellow," said Dacre, in a loud voice to his friend, Orlando P. Jones. "I wonder whether he's a humbug?"

Now MacTaggart was sitting at the next table consuming a dish of macaroni with great gusto.

"No, I don't think he's a humbug," said Jones; "they say he really does possess the secret of permanently diminishing or increasing the stature at will. I've noticed people who have been to him two or three times, and there was always an extraordinary difference in their height. It's very marvelous."

MacTaggart who had drank in the conversation with greedy ear, now joined in it with manifest interest. The two young fellows gave him a host of circumstantial evidence.

"Yoe ought to try him, MeTaggart, at any rate," said the crafty Dacre. "Any change in your appearance, my Caledonian Apollo, would be a benefit."

"I am thinking it would be very expensive, and I object to extravagance on principle," said the Scotchman.

"Well, you might beat him down; at all events you could try," said Dacre.

"Without a doot. I'll sleep on it," said MacTaggart, and he paid for his breakfast and departed.

It took the Scotchman a whole week to make up his frugal mind, and then he screwed his courage up to the sticking point and informed Dacre that he should visit the American physician the next day.

"D'ye ken where he dwells, Mr. Dacre?"

"Well, he lives in the same house as I do, on the first floor. He's a benevolent old boy; you're sure to like him; the Yankees are almost as clannish as the Scotch, you know. You are sure to find him at home at three," and then they parted.

No sooner had the unfortunate MacTaggart turned the corner than Cecil Dacre triumphantly turned a cellar flap breakdown, to the astonishment of the little crowd of Neapolitan bystanders; then he bowed to his audience, kissed his finger tips to them, and started off as fast as his legs would carry him to his lodgings. The next day Cecil Dacre obtained the loan of his landlord's first floor for the day, and then he began to busy himself in an extraordinary manner. He secured the services of the porter's wife and daughter, black-eyed Pippa; they dusted, arranged and re-arranged the big dismal reception room on the first floor. Dacre rushed out and borrowed a screen and purchased a little bottle of turpentine; and then, in the bath-room, which opened from a little passage which was constructed in the corner where he had placed the screen, he laid out at least half a dozen towels. Then he ran over to the costumer's across the street and came back with a fur robe de chambre, a long gray beard, and a close cap of black velvet, and a pair of big, green spectacles, exactly similar to those worn by the celebrated Dr. Faust in the first act of Gounod's opera. Pippa, her mother and Dacre worked with a will, and then the two women, with many gestures of astonishment from Pippa herself, took their departure, promising that every thing should be ready punctually at three. Then Dacre ran up to the rooms of the medical student on the third floor and borrowed several of his largest and most professional looking books, which he placed in a row upon the writing table. Two gruesome looking anatomical preparations in spirit he also obtained from the Italian Bob Sawyer; with these and a human skull, procured from the same source, he decorated the mantelpiece. Then he put on the dressing gown, the long, gray beard, the velvet cap and the spectacles, and he looked a very tremendous specimen of a quack doctor. When the travestiment was complete he went to the window and waited patiently for young Mr. MacTaggart. He was not kept long in suspense. The great bell of San Giovanni struck three, and, punctual to the hour, MacTaggart appeared on the other side of the street.

In the meantime Orlando P. Jones, on his part, had not been idle, for he called upon at least a dozen of MacTaggart's friends and acquaintances, had a short interview with each, and as he took his leave each of the people he had so honored with a visit, laid his forefinger at the side of his nose and appeared considerably amused.

As has been said, the bell of San Giovanni struck three. A rather timid knock sounded upon the outer door of the first floor where Dacre was lying in wait. Dacre allowed it to be repeated, then he flung the door open suddenly. There stood MacTaggart.

"Have I the honor of addressing the newly-arrived American physician?" he said.

"Enter, my young friend," said he of the gray beard and green spectacles, in a loud but drawling voice. "Take a seat, inquiring stranger," he continued, "and let me hear in what way I can be of use to you. You see before you," he added, "the celebrated old Dr. Jacob Townsend, a physician of world-wide celebrity—a man, sir," he went on, "who has devoted a long life, prolonged by his own skill far beyond the ordinary human span, to the amelioration of the condition of the human race."

"I'm afraid I have come to you on a fool's errand," said the patient uneasily.

"No man who consults me," said the doctor, "is guilty of an unwise act. I read your thoughts, young man," he continued severely; "my eagle eye detects the workings of your puny brain. You are discontented with your stature. Say, is it not so?"

The patient nodded.

"Are you ready to submit to the treatment, young man? Have you every confidence in me?"

"I've every confidence, Doctor," replied MacTaggart, uneasily, "but I heard that your fees were high, and I thought, perhaps, as I'm only an art student you might consent to make a little reduction."

"Young man," said the physician in an indignant tone, "do not trifle. The paltry honorarium I exact is but to cover the cost of the balsamic drugs used in the treatment of such cases; they have been produced from the deserts of Central Asia, after the expenditure of much time, blood and treasure; but be assured, young man, that the trifle wrung from your parsimonious clutch will be immediately distributed by me to the deserving poor."

"And you wont take any less?" said MacTaggart, as he stretched out his reluctant hand and deposited five guineas upon the physician's table. "Is the process very painful, Doctor?" he said.

"There are two means of achieving the object," said the physician, who took no notice of the fee. "The one is purely mechanical; it is gradual extension; considerable pain has naturally to be endured. The other course, which is equally efficacious and quite painless, is by means of a medicated bath, but not more than four inches increase in height can be obtained."

"I shall be perfectly satisfied, doctor, with four inches."

"Very good, young man, very good. You know your own business best. Retire behind that screen, divest yourself of your apparel; in a few moments all will be prepared. So powerful are the effects of the drugs that your clothing, were it exposed to the potent vapors, would be utterly destroyed. Strip, young man," said the doctor, emphatically, and he pointed to the screen.

Mr. MacTaggart retired behind the screen, and did as he was bid, and the venerable benefactor of the human race disappeared into the bath room.

The first thing Dacre did was to empty his bottle of turpentine into the bath, and then he turned on the hot water till the bath was nearly full.

"Are you prepared, young man," he cried in a loud voice as he re-entered the reception room.

"I'm quite ready, sir," said Mr. MacTaggart, from behind the screen. "I can smell the potent odors of the drugs, even here."

"Don't trifle, boy," cried the American physician; take your watch with you and proceed to the bath. You will find it very hot and the odor of the Eastern balsams is pungent; but do not let that deter you; enter it as speedily as possible, for the hotter the bath the more rapid the osseous change. Remain extended in that bath and perfectly still, and every five minutes by your watch, and not more frequently on any account, let your head disappear beneath the balsamic film with which the surface of the water is covered. Do not speak, and breathe only through your nose. I will warn you when the process is complete."

Mr. MacTaggart entered the bathroom, watch in hand. The odor of the balsams made him sneeze violently, the water was evidently very hot, and was covered by a thick oleaginous film. But young Mr. MacTaggart had paid his five guineas, and he was determined to have his money's worth. After a little time he entered the bath.

Every five minutes his head disappeared beneath the steaming, oily surface.

In the meantime Cecil Dacre was not idle. He rang the bell; Pippa and her mother appeared; the one carried a little charcoal brazier and a flat-iron, the other a very small work-bag and a big pair of scissors, They laughed immoderately as they set to work upon the clothes of the young Scotchman. Three inches were cut off from the trousers legs, the sleeves of the coat and of the shirt: Pippa's mother worked with a will with her needles to refashion the extremities of the garments, and as she finished each, Pippa herself carefully pressed the newly made seams with the hot flat-iron. Then the physician dismissed his two assistants; he flung open the bath room door and addressed the bather.

"Come forth, young man," he said. "You entered that bath a miserable and puny specimen of humanity; you will leave it, in all human probability, a well-grown youth of prepossessing appearance."

Mr. MacTaggart did as he was bid. He dried himself to the best of his ability; but the balmy odors of the balsams of the East still clung to his hair. No sooner was he dressed and had emerged from behind the screen than the mock doctor addressed him.

"Young man," said he, and his voice was apparently momentarily choked by emotion, "behold the result of the wondrous bath of Bokhara. There is a considerable change, I think," he said, solemnly.

Mr. MacTaggart had evidently grown out of his clothes; his arms and legs protruded in a portentious manner.

"Don't thank me," continued the American physician, hurriedly; "don't thank me, but hasten home to bed to sleep off the powerful effects of my patent medicaments."

Mr. MacTaggart bowed as gracefully as he could and left the premises.

The very first person he met in the street was his acquaintance, Orlando P. Jones. MacTaggart's appearance was sufficiently striking. His ordinary straight red hair was curly and extremely odoriferous from the effects of the turpentine. His face and hands were the color of a boiled lobster and his eyes were bloodshot from the same cause.

"Goodness me," said Jones, "I wouldn't have known you. What have you been doing to yourself?"

"Don't ask me," said MacTaggart; "my happiness is too great for words," and his scarlet face was illuminated by a smile of celestial beatitude.

Before he reached his own house he had met at least twenty of his acquaintances. Each one interviewed him with a similar result.

But the cup of happiness was rudely dashed from his lips when his extremely plain and elderly sister, Miss Flora MacTaggart, on her arrival, addressed him in these indignant words:

"Eh! Donald, man, is it foul ye are? or simply fatuous? that ye have been making a Merry Andrew of yerself by cuttin' doan yer claithes."

In vain the brother explained his visit to the doctor.

Then the secret came out, and Mr. MacTaggart and his sister left Naples for Rome within twenty-four hours.—C. J. Wells, in N. Y. Graphic.

EMPRESS EUGENIE.

The Court Life of the Third Napoleon's Beautiful Wife.

The life of the Empress soon became utterly monotonous and wearisome. She rose at about half-past nine, and took the late breakfast replacing lunch in France, with the Emperor alone, at half-past eleven. At two her ladies came. In Paris they slept at their own homes, but in the country residences they had their stated turns of waiting, and during that time lived at the palaces. Amongst her ladies, of course some were more agreeable to her than others; but she must accept the inexorable turn of precedence, and could not choose her companions. Day after day she drove out with the lady whose privilege entitled her to a seat in the imperial carriage; day after day she went to the Bois de Boulogne and bowed incessantly to the crowd; day after day she returned just in time to dress for dinner; and then came the weary evening, where nobody had any thing to say, or, if they had, dared to say it. No one could sit down till she gave the gracious permission; but this she did invariably in the case of ladies. Her ready good-nature would have willingly extended the privilege to the gentlemen in waiting, but this was contrary to rule, and must not be. So the ladies sat in a circle and the gentlemen "stood at ease," tired out before the close of the evening. When her Majesty retired, scarcely had the last fold of her skirt passed the door before all the weary attendants threw themselves on the sofas. The presence of Majesty necessarily prevented all animated conversation; every one awaited the pleasure of the sovereigns. The Emperor spoke very little, and in a soft, languid voice; the Empress, feeling that the general chill would be unbearable if she did not take the lead, chatted incessantly with a sort of feverish vivacity. Her voice did not seem to belong to that sweet face; it was the Spanish voice, guttural and harsh. She spoke French with perfect fluency, but with a decided foreign accent.

The weariness of those evenings became so unendurable that all kinds of experiments were tried to vary their monotony. One night the Empress suddenly took a fancy to make artificial flowers, and a chamberlain was immediately despatched, at nine o'clock in the evening, to procure the necessary materials. Another time she, who possessed the most beautiful specimens of ceramic art that France could afford, was seized with a violent desire for "potichomanie," and this again must be satisfied immediately. Reading aloud was proposed. But what book could be chosen for such an assembly? Some one proposed Jane Eyre, the well-known novel; the Empress was amused, but the Emperor utterly wearied. Then they tried Josephus and the Wars of the Jews. Here the Emperor was intensely interested, but the Empress yawned, and the attempt was given up.

The Emperor was in general more popular in the imperial household than the Empress; his languid gentleness was in nobody's way, but the Empress was often irritable and capricious. She was certainly intelligent, but her education had been neglected, and she cared for no intellectual employment or artistic occupation. She hated music; she had no taste for the fine arts; even a well-written play at the Theater Francais did not amuse her. She would have liked the small theaters—any thing, in short, that could make her laugh; but this undignified kind of pleasure could not often be enjoyed. Her life had been one of constant amusement, the empty existence of watering-places, and now she was in fact a prisoner. She gave state balls, but they were filled with such a motley crowd that she could only dance the opening quadrille and walk through the rooms. Then she gave select private balls, but the absence of the French aristocracy obliged her to invite a large proportion of wealthy foreigners—Russians, Wallachians, and also Americans. These were unknown in French society, and splendor of dress seemed the only means of being remarked. To attain this end no extravagance seemed too excessive, and the Empress was blamed as having originated the love of dress, which spread in all classes and became a complete mania.

So far as she herself was concerned, the accusation has been greatly exaggerated. She certainly liked dress, and preferred fragile clouds of tulle and gauze to the heavy but durable magnificence of valuable lace and brocaded stuffs worn by the Bourbon Princesses. But the light clouds in which the fair Empress appeared like an Undine or sylph were very expensive, and could only be worn once. Every one wished to be like the Empress, and at every ball filmy dresses costing fabulous prices were torn to pieces, and had to be replaced. Husbands grumbled, and the Empress was accused of ruining families by setting the example of extravagance.—Anna L. Bicknell, in Harper's Magazine.

—Five years ago the increase of wolves in France had become so serious that the Government found it necessary to raise the awards for killing them. In 1882 423 wolves were killed, in 1883 1,316, in 1884 1,035, in 1885 900, and in 1886 760. The awards are now 200 francs for the killing of a wolf which has attacked human beings, 150 francs for one in young, 100 francs for a male wolf, and 40 francs for a cub.

MASCULINE TRAITS.

Points That a Girl Should Consider Before She Engages Herself.

Much advice has been written to young men on the choice of a wife. In fact, a good many girls are weary of reading that aged, but ever green, paragraph which recurs so regularly in a certain class of family papers, in which the inquiring youth is bidden to take for a wife the patient creature who wastes an hour or more in the endeavor to wind a snarly skein of silk without a single complaint, who smiles perpetually whether there is any thing to smile at or not, and who, after dancing all night, is accustomed to make her appearance at the breakfast-table in an irreproachable toilet, collar and cuffs of snowy whiteness, and every hair in place. Clearly this is expecting too much. Every woman, no matter how patient she may be, experiences a certain relief in pronouncing the word, "Botheration," or some of its synonyms, when more than usually annoyed; if she is sensible "her face has serious sweetness" instead of being wrinkled up into an unending and insipid smirk; and, although after any social excess she will not omit her usual morning bath and hair-brushing, her chief comfort thereafter will be found in a loose wrapper with a soft muslin kerchief at her throat.

The young woman in search of a husband (if such a being exists outside of the usual leap-year references to her, is not so apt to look for supernatural qualities, and perhaps not so apt to find them. If that impossible young lady is in need of advice on this subject let her scan the following rules:

Observe the manner in which the object of your regard treats his horse. If he is a hard driver out-doors he will be a hard driver indoors; if he lashes his horse past the object at which it "shies" he will scornfully deride your nervous fears; if he allows it to stand and investigate the object of its dread he will show a like consideration of your foolish fancies.

Notice the gait of the candidate for your favor. If his step is heavy, he is pronounced in his opinions; if he moves slowly, he is cautious, conservative, slow to anger and apt to let his thoughts dwell on the past rather than the future; if he walks rapidly, he will be sure to "get there," providing he has a clear idea of the object aimed at; if every one turns out for him, while he "keeps straight on" your future days with him will be set to the tune of the line: "Sure I must fight if I would win."

But the dinner-table offers perhaps the best field for discovery. If this hypothetical young man has a marked preference for one viand and an aversion for another, both being equally innocuous to the normal stomach, the indications are that he is a crank; still this is better than that he should pick daintily at every dish and be dissatisfied with all, as by these marks the dyspeptic is known. If he puts all his mind on his plate, with an evident disinclination to take part in the conversation or notice the requirements of those about him, he is possessed of great concentration of purpose, with rudimentary notions of good behavior. If his style of dining reminds you, in ever so slight a degree, of that of the farmer who goes to market at four in the morning and gets nothing to eat until noon, it is a sure sign that there is nothing odd or eccentric about your young man; he belongs to the great brotherhood of mankind. If he begins an anecdote with the soup, allows it to drag its weary length through the various courses and come to a melancholy end with the coffee there is no crime of which he may not be capable. Bachelorhood is too good for him. Let him be shunned as you would shun a pestilence.—Toronto Globe.

THE GOLDEN PAGODA.

Graphic Description of One of Burmah's Famous Structures.

The Golden Pagoda of Rangoon stands upon a hill in the edge of the town. About 170 feet up the hill has been leveled off into a platform about 800 feet square. In the center of this stands the main structure. It is octagonal at its base, with a diameter of over 450 feet. This runs in, by a succession of terraces or high steps, a hundred or more feet, giving it a bell-shape. From the shoulder of this bell springs another member, circular, also in the bell form, but more steep; then another. On this lifts a tall, thin, four-sided lantern on which rests the "htee," or open work metallic receptacle for sacred mementos. This is then surrounded by a half-open metallic umbrella. The whole height from the platform is 370 feet. Around the base are fifty-six small pagodas about 30 feet high. The whole of this vast structure is solid, of well-burned brick, covered over with cement, plaster, and gilded from foundation to pinnacle.

The upper half is freshly gilt, the scaffolding being removed while we were there. At a distance the whole, when the sun is sinking, looks like a mountain of gold. The "htee" is said to be of solid gold and studded with real gems. It was erected by a late king at a cost of $250,000. To repair an ordinary pagoda does not work "merit" for the one making the repair, but the "merit" is relegated to the original founder. But any repairs to this pagoda and to three others in the kingdom avails for "merit" to the repairer. Around the platform are a number of smaller pagodas, and many chapels and "kyoungs," or temples for worship. These are filled with statues of Buddha in gilded plaster or white alabaster. Many of them are much larger than life.—Carter H. Harrison, in Chicago Mail.

AN EXCELLENT MODEL.

How Sentimental Young Women Can Answer Their Own Questions.

"The Art of Conducting Answers to Correspondents" is the title of a little mole-colored volume just issued from the press of Cackleton & Co., Philadelphia. In two hundred and twenty-six pages the author, Mr. P. H. Delmore, tells how the answer-to-correspondents department of a story paper should be conducted. Although his work is praiseworthy, yet we think that he could have disposed of the subject in a few carefully chosen words, and then devoted his energies to some other undertaking. We have given some little thought to this subject, and, as a labor-saving measure, we submit the following model:

"(1) You should consult your mother. (2) Dark brown hair. Your writing could be improved by practice. (3) It is hardly proper, when calling, to ask for a biscuit, even if you are hungry, and we do not think that it is altogether proper for a young lady of good complexion and moderate means to receive callers who have thumped her father. It is not a mark of good breeding for a gentleman to take off his muddy overshoes in the parlor and place them in a plush rocking-chair. (4) Drink sassafras tea for grubs and black-heads. (5) America was discovered on a Friday. (6) Ask your father. (7) The following lines are suitable for the album of a friend:

"The bee may forget to gather the honey,
The miser may forget to count his money;
The birds may forget to sing in the trees,
The dog may forget to scratch at the fleas,
The rose may forget to swallow the dew,
But you may bet your old clothes that I'll not forget you."

"(7) 'Red-Headed George, or, the Cross-Eyed Girl Who Snapped at a Fly,' was begun in October. (8.) You are not too young to get married. In the summer a small family can live on ten dollars per week, if the neighbors are liberal. (9.) We do not know the name of the author who wrote the gem 'The world is round, the sky is blue, sugar's sweet and so are you.'"

It will be seen that by giving this model a little study, almost any young lady may answer her own questions.—Arkansaw Traveler.

FOR OUR YOUNG FOLKS.

GOOD AND POOR LUCK.

"If the face in the moon
Wear a frown—alas,
Luck will be poor till the month shall pass!
If the face in the moon
Wear a smile—why, then,
Luck will be good, till it frown again."

So runs a verse
That I used to say;
I have learned it, since,
In another way.

"If a face be marred
By a frown—alas!
Luck will be poor till the frown shall pass!
If a face be bright
With a smile—why, then,
Luck will be good till it frowns again."

If the first be true
'Twould be hard to say;
But the last, if you will,
You can prove, each day.

TOM'S FAITHFULNESS.

The Spring That Closed the Door of the Safe.

"Don't you worry one bit, mother," kindly declared Tom Sperry. "I can get my own supper just as well as not. Now, you see, I can broil a piece of steak, make a cup of tea, toast a slice of bread, handy as an old cook in a hunter's camp."

"You are a good boy. I feel pretty well used up to-day," said Mrs. Sperry, who, closely bundled up in her big red shawl and nursing a rheumatic affection, occupied a rocking chair before the fire.

"Not a word, mother, not a word!" said the obliging Tom.

Soon the steak was broiled, the bread toasted, the tea made. All the dishes were on the table, and Tom was seated before them, happy as any office-boy eating his supper could be.

"Sakes!" suddenly exclaimed a voice as the door opened and old Miss Bartlett entered. "How comfortable you do look in here!"

"Come in, come in!" cried Tom's mother, glad to have a caller who could help her while away a half hour.

"And, Tommy! what a good time you are having, eating your supper!" exclaimed Miss Bartlett.

"Yes, yes," replied Tom, promptly, charging away with knife and fork on that beefsteak, like a knight with sword and lance on a trophy in the forest.

"He had to get his supper himself, poor boy!" moaned his mother.

"Don't call this boy poor!" said Tom, cheerfully. "I think he is doing first-rate."

"Bless him! I say," exclaimed old Miss Bartlett, admiringly. Tom was a great favorite with the old lady.

"How does Tommy like his place at Dodlins'?" she now inquired.

"Splendid!" declared Tom. "And Dodlins trusts me, too. He leaves a lot of money near me; leaves the safe-door open."

"Yes," said his mother, "but he seems to look out and see that the door can be closed pretty quick. He has got a spring under his desk."

"Not a real bilin' spring?" said old Miss Bartlett. "That's handy if you are thirsty."

"Oh!" explained Tom, "it is a spring to put your foot on, you know, of steel; and that connects with the safe door, and shuts it all of a sudden—that's in case any body came in and wanted to be up to mischief, and run off with what is in the safe; take money, you know. That spring will do the business, you know, pretty quick."

"I should think it would, 'mazin' quick," declared the old neighbor. "What a progressive world we do live in! Things was different when I was a boy—girl, I mean."

"Yes," said Tom, wisely and with the air of one who has seen both Boston and the tip of the north pole; "yes, it is a go-ahead age."

"Dodlins is smart," affirmed Miss Bartlett. "As for that matter, his father before him, Simon Dodlins, was smart in his day. He is a lively old man still. You ever see him?"

"No, ma'am."

"He will give you a call one day. He is a fussy old feller, but a good man, if I do say it. He has notions, you know. What he wants now is somebody he can trust, so he says; yes, somebody he can trust."

"He might take our Tommy," thought Mrs. Sperry, but modestly did not express her opinion. "If Tommy could get more wages it would not go bad at all."

The next day Tom was on duty in the office of William Dodlins. It was noon. Said Tom's employer: "I have plenty of time, and I will run home for a bite; if you need me use the telephone; I will be back in time to close up."

"All right, sir," replied Tom.

Leaving the safe door open, William Dodlins adjourned to his house for "a bite"—a good many of them.

It was very still in the office. The open fire crackled in the grate. A fly came out of his hiding-place and buzzed in the sunshine flooding the window.

"Just two sounds here!" thought Tom.

Hark! A third sound was audible on the stairway leading to the office door, and in walked a man somewhere on the farther side of sixty. Three things were very prominent: an immense red handkerchief swathing his neck, very keen eyes behind his iron-bowed spectacles, and a cane with a crooked head. With this cane he pompously pounded on the floor, and, looking at Tom, said: "Eh, eh, young man!"

"Yes, sir," said Tom; "can I do anything for you?"

"I dunno. Where is your master?"

"At dinner, sir."

"At dinner! Well, we can do without him. I just want to get at his safe."

Tom sprang up. "Who—who—are you, sir?"

"No matter, young man, no matter who I am. I am going to that safe, You go—"

"If you will sit down and wait, Mr. Dodlins will be in, sir; he has only gone home for a bite."

"A bite! Yes, first one and then another, for an hour. Here! you take your seat and be quiet, young man."

"If you will tell me your name—"

"No matter. Take your seat, sir!" With his lifted cane the visitor assumed a threatening attitude.

"I am going to do my duty," muttered Tom. Rushing to his employer's desk, placing his foot on the spring in the floor, and pressing hard, Tom heard the safe door go—slam!"

"Young man!" shouted the old man, angrily, his face reddening.

"I must look after my employer's interests," said Tom, firmly.

"Open that safe door, young man!"

"I can't, sir, I don't know the combination."

"Must I wait till William Dodlins comes back?"

"Yes, sir!"

"Where's the telephone?"

"I'll call up Mr. Dodlins and tell him how it was."

Ding-ding-ding! went the telephone in William Dodlins' dining-room.

"What's that?" said the man, who was enjoying his one hundredth bite. "Pity I can't eat without interruption! however—"

He rose and went to the telephone, bowing down his big red ear.

"Oh!" he muttered, "that's Tom! Well," he called to Tom, "what's wanted?"

"Man here that wouldn't give his name wanted to get into the safe; he was very commanding. Of course I wouldn't let him, and touched off that spring, and—"

"What kind of a man?" asked William Dodlins.

"An old man, and has a red comforter and a crooked-head cane."

"Dear me!" muttered William Dodlins, "if it isn't father!"

He now shrieked through the telephone: "You did all right, but another time let him go to the safe. It is my—my father; I will be down immediately after——"

He stopped. The rest of his sentence he finished at the office. "After—I have a few more bites. Father will calm down and be like a zephyr, I know. He will like the boy for standing up to his duty. Of course, when so many evil-minded people are about, if father won't give his name, he must take the consequences." He then rose, left the house, and hurried to his office.

Night came again. Tom again got his own supper. Miss Bartlett once more called and found a jubilee going on in the Sherry kitchen.

"Just think of it, Miss Bartlett!" exclaimed Mrs. Sperry, still nursing her rheumatism, "if old man Dodlins didn't call on Tom, and Tom touched off the spring—wouldn't let him into the safe, you know—and the old man liked him for it, you see, and says he is the boy who wouldn't swerve a hair—that is his language—not a hair for Queen Victoria, and—and—he is going to employ Tom and give him bigger pay."

A Boy Hero.

"Three! four! five! How funny!" cried the girls. "Hurrah!" shouted the boys. What were they counting? Yes, the patches on poor little Constance's dress. She heard every word, and the boys' loud laugh. Poor little heart! At first she looked down, then the tears came with a great rush; and she tried to run home.

"Cry-baby!" shouted the boys.

"Don't want her to sit next to me," said Ella Gray.

"What right has she to come to our school?" whispered proud Lillie Gross.

"There! don't mind a word they say!" exclaimed Douglas Stewart, leaving the group of rude boys, and trying to comfort Constance. "Let me carry your books," he continued. "It's only a little way to your home, isn't it?"

Constance looked up through her tears, to see the bravest boy in school at her side.

"I live in the little house under the hill," said Constance, "It isn't like your house."

"But it has pretty vines and climbing roses, and it's a nice house to live in," said Douglas. "I dare say you are happy there."

"Yes. I don't want to come to this school again," said Constance, softly.

"Oh, things will be all right in a day or two," said the boy, kindly. "Never mind them just now."

—When breaking in your young colts, put them beside fast walking horses. The first few lessons will make a lasting impression on them.

—To soften water for dish washing and laundry purposes thoroughly dissolve one teaspoonful of granulated lye in four gallons of water.

—It is claimed that wet land may be made to produce fire wood by planting willows thereon, and that it may be made profitable to do so in some sections.

—It is a wasteful practice to haul out manure in winter and leave it in small heaps till spring. The manure often heats and throws off the ammonia, which is lost. If spread at once it will not heat.

—If hot water is poured on raisins or currants to seed them or wash them for cake, dry them between towels and in the oven at once, before putting them into the cake. If added while wet they will make the cake heavy.

—Practical experience has demonstrated in the face of all opposition, even if the fact can not be explained, that the growing and plowing under of crops in the green condition will enrich the soil, and that nitrogen will be thereby increased.

—Give the fowls occasionally a feed of corn that has been charred or burned. It will act as a stimulant and counteract disease. A good way to burn it is to put it an oven, as it will be more equally charred than if in contact with fire.

—Cabbage salad: Cut the cabbage very fine, and put into a dish in layers, with salt and pepper between; then take two teaspoonfuls of butter, two of flour, two of mustard, one cup of vinegar and one egg. Stir all together and let it come to a boil on the stove; pour it hot over and mix well with cabbage. Cover up.

—German pudding: Three-fourths cup of sugar, one large spoonful of butter, mix as for cake, add two eggs well beaten, one cup of milk, flavoring to taste, and enough flour (into which some baking powder has been sifted) to make an ordinary cake batter; beat up very light, pour into a buttered mold, bake in a quick oven, turn out on a dish, sprinkle with a little sugar, serve with lemon juice.

—The idea that the bee invariably dies after stinging is a vulgar error. It will, if allowed time, generally carry its sting away by traveling around upon the wound, giving the instrument a screw movement until it is free. More usually, however, the bee is not allowed to travel around, and she loses not only the sting and the venom gland and sac, but also the lower portion of the bowels, so that her death follows in an hour or two.

DISEASES OF POULTRY.

Prevent Them by Keeping Your Fowls Clean and Well Fed.

"The best and only way in which to prevent fowls from having diseases is to look with unremitting care to the cleanliness of their food and water, of the vessels in which they are fed and watered, as well as to the thorough cleanliness and proper ventilation of their houses, and they be not crowded in their houses, or have a wet floor under them. Then, of course, in confinement or on limited range, one must supply them with what they would find for themselves, if free. A dust bath, part ashes and part dirt, with a little sulphur added; ground shells and bones; fine gravel; meat of some kind, two or three times a week; onions, also, and a supply of charcoal broken up for them, and a constant daily supply of vegetables or green stuff of some kind." This is the doctrine of the poultry business as we have been trying to preach it. Keep the hens clean and well fed, avoid dirt, hunger and wet floors, and you will prevent disease getting a foothold, and prevention is better than cure. If, from exposure to a cold rain, or some such cause, a bird shows signs of roup, administer a slug or two, separate her from the others, keep her warm, give her strengthening food, including some bits of raw meat, or a little milk, and she may be cured; but for an advanced case of roup, or an attack of cholera, I should unsparingly use the hatchet and block, burying the carcasses.—Cackler.

Color in Eggs.

There is a growing demand among townspeople for dark-colored eggs. In certain localities this has been the case for years; and the preference has grown and spread until it has become pretty general. It will pay farmers who live adjacent to towns and sell directly to consumers, to be governed by this fact in their choice of a breed, lest some enterprising competitor, more alive to the popular demand, shall break in upon their market and quietly steal away their trade. Of the fowls that lay dark-colored eggs, there are probably none as desirable as the Langshan and Brahma, either of which is good, although I prefer the Langshan after having tried both. These two breeds lay an egg almost identical in appearance, being a rich dark brown color. There is no doubt that their eggs contain more nutriment to a given amount of weight than those from most other breeds. And even if they possessed no well-founded points of superiority, the fact remains that they are growing in the estimation of the consumer, and as long as you expect him to buy directly of you there can be no doubt but it will pay you to choose your breed with an eye to his favor.—J. Fiero, in Farm and Home.

SUNLIGHT IN STABLES.

The Effect of Absence of Light Upon Growing Animals.

We tried an experiment some years since to test the effect of absence of light upon a calf. We had two deep-red calves, of the same age (sixty days), one weighing 180 pounds and the other 182 pounds. The latter we placed in a dark room, with a trough that could be filled by a spout through a partition. The other was confined in the same amount of space, but in full light, and both were fed exactly for the next three months. The object was to test the affect of light upon such a growing animal. At the end of the time the one in the light weighed 430 pounds and the one in the dark weighed 360 pounds, and its color had faded to a very pale, dirty red. Its eyes were so much effected when admitted to the light that it kept them closed most of the time for the first week or two. The two calves were kept on together, but the one from the dark room never fully recovered from this three months' of darkness. It never recovered its bright red color, although the color improved. Any one who noted these two calves during this experiment would never after doubt the impolicy of a dark stable. Sunlight is indispensable to healthy vegetable and animal life. Every farmer sees his cat and dog select a belt of sunlight to lie and bask in; and if he will watch his cattle when turned out he will find them seeking at once the sunny side of the barnyard. And with all these indications before his eye, still the farmer keeps his animals in a dark stable, much to their discomfort and his pecuniary loss. We do not, of course, include all farmers in this statement, for a small minority fully understand the importance of sunlight in stables, and make ample provision for its introduction.—Practical Farmer.

Fresh Air Society Stories.

The report of the Fresh Air Society of Portland, Me., tells some pathetic incidents connected with the little city waifs' first visit to the country, and other incidents not pathetic. One boy, after a three days' stay, suddenly remembered that he had left his baby sister in charge of a neighbor while his mother went out washing, and he was sure that the woman abused the infant. He must go home and see. And he did go home. When he got to Portland he had a wonderful story to tell of the dangers of life in the country; of the Indians and bears and other wild beasts that he had met. But his mother knew him. She sent him back and in due time he arrived at the farm with a tremendous plug of tobacco in his pocket. As he didn't chew there was a natural curiosity to know why he had brought it. He said that he was "afraid he might need it some time."—N. Y. Sun.

Genteel Quacks.

"Yes, it pays," said a big, fat physician, with a name which is known throughout the medical world. "I have a practice worth $40,000 a year." "Women"? "Yes, you've guessed it first time. They pay $10 every time they come into my office. When one gets on my list I tell you she stays!" and Dr. H—— laughed long and loud. This is quackery—gilt-edged, genteel quackery—to keep suffering woman paying tribute year in and year out, and doing them no good. Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription cures the peculiar weaknesses and diseases of women. It does not lie to them nor rob them.

ST. JACOBS OIL

RHEUMATISM.

The Case Stated.—Jan'y 17th, 1883. Messrs. George C. Osgood & Co., druggists, Lowell, Mass., wrote to the undersigned as follows: "Mr. Lewis Dennis, No. 136 Moody street, wishes to recommend St. Jacobs Oil, and desires especially to say that:

"ORIN ROBINSON, of Grantville, Mass., a boy of 12 years, came to his house in the summer of 1881 walking on crutches, his left leg being bent at the knee for over two months, and could not be bent back. Mr. Dennis had some St. Jacobs Oil in the house, and gave it to him to rub on his knee. In six days he had no use for his crutches, and went home well without them, as he has been ever since."

Corroborative and Conclusive Testimony.—Lowell, Mass., July 9, 1887.—Gentlemen: Mr. Lewis Dennis has just called upon me, and informs me that the boy Orin Robinson, who was a poor cripple on crutches, and was cured by St. Jacobs Oil in 1881; the cure has remained permanent. The young man has been and is now at work at manual labor; the case certainly proves the efficacy of St. Jacobs Oil.—DR. GEO. C. OSGOOD, M. D.

Legislative Notes.

Petitions and letters against the repeal of our local option law are pouring into Annapolis.

Senator McKaig's bill for the ventilation of mines, passed the Senate Tuesday, having received fourteen votes. The bill went to the House and was referred to the Committee on Inspection. The outlook is that the bill will pass the House.

The Oakland bank bill passed the Senate.

The bill authorizing the Governor to appoint a treasurer passed the secono reading in the House.

Mr. McKnight has introduced a bill providing for the appointment by the Governor of a State agent to look after pensions before the pension bureau and other departments at Washington. An ex-Union soldier is to have the preference in the selection of an agent, who is to hold office for four years and receive a salary of $1,500 a year. He is to have an office in Baltimore city, and gets $750 a year for rent and other expenses. He is not to charge any fee for services to claimants.

The Boundary Question.

President Peter, Monday, presented to the Senate the opinion of Attorney-General Whyte, rendered in response to an order of the Senate, in regard to the proper remedy to be pursued to establish the boundary line between Maryland and West Virginia. The Attorney-General says: "In my judgment no definite settlement of that matter can be accomplished by the appointment of commissioners or negotiation between the Legislatures of the two States. The controversy has been going on for more than a century, and the State of Maryland has appointed commission after commission to make such adjustment, but all to no purpose. As far back as 1795 William Pickney, William Cooke and Phillip Barton Key, and subsequently Charles Carroll, of Carrollton, Jeremiah Townly Chase, Gen. Wm. H. Winder, Reverdy Johnson, James Boyle, Judge E. F. Chambers, and still later Col. Thomas J. Lee, were appointed commissioners to settle and adjust the southern and western boundaries of the States, yet the services of these eminent gentlemen were of no avail. The southern boundary between the States was not settled until by the award of arbitrators under the acts of 1874 and 1876. In my judgment, therefore, there are but two courses open to the State to bring the long-pending question to an end. One is for the State to cause proceedings to be taken against the State of West Virginia in the Supreme Court of the United States for the purpose of securing a final legal adjustment and settlement of the boundary line between the two States, and the other is to submit the matter in controversy to arbitrators appointed by the two States, whose award shall be final and binding between the two States. The first course should only be taken when the second has been declined by the State of West Virginia. I should advise the passage of a law at the present session of the Legislature making the formal proposition to the State of West Virginia that the subject of the boundary should be submitted for settlement and adjustment to arbitrators chosen by the respective States." The Attorney-General submitted a bill to carry out this recommendation.

Mr. Browning introduced a bill to designate the arbitrators to ascertain and fix the true boundary between Maryland and West Virginia. The bill provides for the appointment of three arbitrators—one by Maryland, one by West Virginia and one by these two.

What is Being Done for Us at Annapolis.

A consideration of some measures introduced in the General Assembly at its present session, has led some of our good citizens to take a very despondent view of our county's future, and if no remedy existed for these supposed violations of a people's right's, well might we bow our heads in sorrow, and mournfully raise our voices, praying of those we sent to Annapolis to have mercy. American citizens are proverbially patient under political grievances, and it becomes us to cultivate this virtue.

Let us ask ourselves what it is we complain of. What have our representatives done? Are we not to have "Legislative Roads," whatever that may mean? Will not these roads lead to the homes of those we have honored, thus enabling us who visit them to pay our respects (as in duty bound we should) to travel with ease and comfort?

The fish in our streams, and the fowls of the air, rise up to bless them, because they are to be protected from the outside world, and will you find fault with their "Game Laws."

A bridge over Castleman river will cost only about $5,000.00, but three or four of your fellow citizens, farmers in that neighborhood, would save at least two miles in hauling lime stone. Why do you tax-payers, complain?

Grandest of all, is not our Governor to appoint a new Board of School Commissioners for us? What do the Judges of our Circuit Court, who meet us four times a year, know about our fitness for such an office, compared to the man whom the people of the entire State have elevated to the high office of Governor?

You may be careless in selecting the custodian of your funds, and therefore our Chief Magistrate is to appoint a good and careful man to act as County Treasurer. Think how safe your money will be, and murmur not.

In all that has been said, you have not been told the half that is in store for you. You are to have an Academy in Oakland. Let those who read this be silent for half an hour and ponder well the subject, lest some unbecoming expression escape them. Oh! Plato! Oh! Academus! Be silent still. Two years hence let us have four "Legislative Roads" leading from the four points of the compass to this sacred spot, and let the temple be so constructed, that those who come from the North and from the South, from the East and from the West, may pass beneath the imposing superstructure, through magnificent archways, gathering inspiration as we pause for a moment in its shadows. Let us have a "Legislative Road" around the county. Roads! Roads! we say. No common thoroughfares or highways to immortalize McAdam, but "Legislative Roads." Fish, rejoice! Increase and multiply, no eels can here destroy your offspring. Birds, be happy! No prowling sportsman can you molest. Children look upon your Academy, but do not go too near it. Some one will tell you when it is safe to approach. But we are exhausted. Plato, ah there! Academus, we faint, thy grove with its refreshing——

"Awaking with a start, the waters heave around me." So sang the poet, but we are not treating now of songs. We realize, though, as we approach the earth, that we viewed these things from too great an altitude, and next week, we may give them a closer inspection. X.

The Garrett Local-Option Question.

A protest signed by leading Democrats in Garrett county, and petitions signed by hundreds of the best citizens of the county, irrespective of party, have been addressed to the Legislature, requesting that the present local-option law of Garrett be not repealed, as has been proposed. This proposition, it is claimed, would be in direct disregard of a majority vote of the citizens at a special election forced upon them at the last session of the Legislature in the interest of a few liquor sellers. One of the opponents of the repeal movements says: "At the last fall term of court, Judge Alvey presiding, nearly all the violators were indicted, including so-called 'clubs,' and the judge dealt out justice to all alike, claiming that the name of 'club' should not shield a violator of the law from the just penalty due, and accordingly fined and imprisoned offenders found guilty, which has caused the third contest on this question. The petitions for repeal, after months of circulation, only obtained about six hundred signatures, being backed neither by a majority of the Republican nor Democratic voters, nor of both combined, but merely by the liquor element, while the petitions favoring the local-option law have only received an impetus since the newspapers reported the effort to repeal the law, since which time, notwithstanding the 'blizzard,' they have been coming in from places forty or fifty miles apart over the mountains, manifesting a determination to prevent the repeal. Among the signers against the pending bill is Mr. G. W. Delawder, State fish commissioner, and Mr. D. E. Offutt, another staunch Democrat; Judge Hamill, who with Squires Hinebaugh, Winterburg and others rank foremost among the democrats of Western Maryland; Mr. Miller, a school commissioner: Mr. Stanton, another Democrat, and Mr. Getty, the son of old Senator Getty. The only Republican name upon the protest is that of Mr. Van Meter. From lack of funds our county schools are closed, cutting off our children and youth from the advantages of a common school education to a sad extent, yet it is desired by some parties closing our only source of education to open public saloons, a great source of public and private depravity, against which iniquity we ask your powerful aid. The people being too poor to support public schools, are certainly too poor to pay for special elections in the interest of saloons after every session of our Legislature, and too poor to pay for liquor. — Annapolis Correspondent of Baltimore Sun.

Annapolis Letter.

ANNAPOLIS, MD., March 17, 1888.

EDITOR REPUBLICAN:—The long talked of election law has at last passed both houses and may now be regarded as an accomplished fact; and, as was feared and predicted, it falls short of what was so ardently hoped for, viz: a measure that would prevent fraud.

The Republicans, aided by a few few honest Democrats, tried to amend the bills in the house, but in vain. The managers would not accept any amendments calculated to prevent repeating or false counting.

Mr. Graves, of St. Mary's county offered an amendment requiring the word no to be written opposite the name of each qualified voter on the lists who had not voted at the close of the polls. This would prevent the names being marked as having voted, and it is difficult to see what objection could be urged against a precaution so simple, and so effective, as a means of preventing false counting; yet without reason it was voted down.

Mr. Dodson, of Talbot county, also pressed an amendment requiring that after the ballots were counted and the returns completed the ballots should be burned.

This is also a provision of the Tilden act, which the Democracy was pledged to, but instead of burning the ballots and avoiding the possibility of ballotbox-stuffing, the bill provides that a strip of paper shall be pasted over the key-hole, and the hole for the admission of the ballots, and the ballots returned to the clerk's office, where they are to be kept a certain time and then destroyed.

Mr. Laird, a Democratic member from Montgomery, spoke in favor of Mr. Dodson's amendment, and said that it would not take more than ten seconds to soften the paste, so that the strips of paper could be taken off, and that there was a possibility of duplicate keys, and insisted that this would afford no protection whatever; but this amendment was also voted down, although it would be very difficult to find any other reason, only the one which naturally suggests itself: they are not quite ready to close up the avenues of fraud.

In 1875, when Harris was elected over Carroll, if the law had required the destruction of the ballots by the judges, Eugene Higgins would have missed his opportunity to make himself immortal. He succeeded in getting his man counted in, although the boldest deciple of reform does not now deny the methods by which Carroll was made Governor.

Higgins spends most of his time in Annapolis, and his ear-mark is visible in a great deal of the legislation being passed at this session.

There is a move on foot to establish an emmigration bureau at an expense to the state of $20,000 to send commissioners abroad to induce immigration to Southern Maryland, and Higgins is understood to be looking for the appointment. Of course "Gene" must be cared for. He has engineered more political deviltry through the Maryland Legislature than any of Gorman's satelites, and of course "Gene" must be looked after. He is the embodiment of more pure cussedness politically, than any one else, and his influence is not abating. I have no doubt a majority of the county members intended to do the square thing when they came here, but influences are soon brought to bear which makes it seem the proper thing to herd with the crowd, and they are speedily absorbed into it, and losing their individuality and their independence they go, willingly or unwillingly, along the road that is made easy for them.

Dr. Mackall, of Cecil county, is a fair example of how it goes with a Democrat who has the courage of his convictions, and dares to maintain his independence. He is a man of considerable ability, and has generally stood up for what he believes to be right, but his party goes against him and votes down his bills, for no other reason only that he wants his party in good faith to redeem the pledges made prior to last falls election. He said in the House yesterday that hereafter when he wanted a measure to pass he would oppose it.

John K. Cowan's estimate of the value of Democratic promises was correct.

Yours truly,

A Shrewd Trick Exposed.

An insidious Mormon scheme for preserving their power and peculiar institutions has come to light in Washington. How cunning and vigilant are the leaders of these "Latter Day Saints" was pointed out in these columns the other day, in referring to the advantages they would gain for continuing defiance of the laws of the land, by the admission of Utah as a state in the Union. With the executive, judicial and legislative machinery all in Mormon hands, Gentile residents of the state would stand no show whatever.

This view of the probability became so fully recognized that the Mormon leaders abandoned the proposition to change territorial form of government for Utah, and turned their devices in another direction. They began covertly to exert themselves to secure the admission of New Mexico as a state. The Mormons have large settlements in that territory. They have secured possession of hundreds of square miles of its richest soil. That the possession of New Mexico might ultimately be their own, as completely as is Utah, was a dream of the sagacious Brigham Young. It has never been lost sight of by his successors. Hence for years colonies have been established and land secured in every desirable section of the territory.

As it is generally conceded that New Mexico would be a Democratic state, Delegate Caine, of the House, had no difficulty in inducing Representative Springer to include in his "Omnibus" bill a clause for the admission of this territory. The bill was so framed respecting New Mexico as to allow to vote on the question of coming into the Union next fall "everybody who shall have been a resident of the territory sixty days." Herein is the cunning Mormon plan. With plenty of money for missionary purposes, and for the expense of agents everywhere to induce and assist emigration, they could, should the enabling act pass, send thousands of their proselytes into the territory in time to become eligible as voters next fall. The word of the Church autocracy is as potent to-day as it ever was, and would need only to be spoken to send yet other thousands from Utah, across the line in due season. By this means New Mexico would be voted into the Union as a Democratic state, and thenceforward the Mormons would have the same advantages for their evil purposes as though their original territory were clothed with statehood. The scheme was a shrewd and artfully conceived flank movement on the part of the Mormons and Democrats alike, but that the manoeuver is now disclosed it will not subserve the purpose intended. Such a scheme will not be likely to pass the Senate, even should it receive the endorsement of the House.—Baltimore Herald.

Catholics in the G. A. R.

The following is a reply to a letter of inquiry sent by Comrade Edward Schilling, of Tyler Post, G. A. R., of Cumberland.

CARDINAL'S RESIDENCE,
408 CHARLES STREET,
BALTIMORE, March 19, 1888.

To Edward Schilling, Esq., 130 Green street, Cumberland, Md:

My Dear Sir:—I am directed by His Eminence, Cardinal Gibbons to acknowledge the receipt of your favor dated March 15, and in reply thereto to write you that Catholics of the archdiocese of Baltimore are free to join the Grand Army of the Republic, provided their dispositions in so joining, or in remaining in, said organization, are such that they will be willing to conform to any decision respecting membership in the Grand Army of the Republic which may hereafter be made by competent ecclesiastical authority.

I have the honor to remain, dear sir,
Yours faithfully,
P. J. DONAHUE,
Chancellor.

The Cuban fast mail train went through a trestle on the Savannah, Florida and Western Railroad at Hurricane river, seventy miles below Savannah, Saturday morning, and 23 people were killed and between 30 and 40 injured.

OUR WASHINGTON LETTER.

(From our Regular Correspondent.)

WASHINGTON, March 19th, 1888.—Who will be nominated at Chicago? Less than three months from this time the convention will meet, hence all Republicans are getting interested in the above question. It is a much easier question to ask than to answer. It is doubtful if the best informed Republican in Washington would attempt to say who the candidate will be. He may be any one of the dozen gentlemen mentioned or he may be as yet unnamed. Let us consider how the chances stand at present.

Senator Sherman is developing considerable strength in the South, but unless he can make some friends in other states his nomination is extremely doubtful. Senator Harrison and Judge Gresham have both shown themselves to possess much strength in the Northwest, but the ill-feeling that has already cropped out between their followers disposes the chances of both of them. Mr. Chauncy Depew has a considerable following in the Eastern States and just now he is credited with having a real boom in Pennsylvania. So far no one of the other candidates appears to be attempting to antagonize Mr. Depew, but then his following is perhaps too small as yet to make that necessary. That's the situation as it exists to-day. The gentlemen mentioned are the only ones, whose friends have, so far, attempted to boom them for the nomination. All the rest are apparently waiting for that concentration of sentiment that has as yet refused to take place in anyone's favor except Mr. Blaine's.

The pension claim agents of this city got a scoring in the Senate on Thursday. Senator Plumb had read a letter received by an ex-soldier in Kansas and written by a Washington pension agent, which intimated that the writer had special facilities for pushing private pension claims through Congress. The letter asked for a fee of $25, $10 in advance and balance upon passage of bill. Mr. Plumb said he believed that large sums of money were being obtained from ex-soldiers by men who render them no service whatever.

Senator Hale wanted to know the name of the firm which sent the letter; in view of the fact the rules of the pension Committee prohibited all attorneys or claim agents making any arguments before the committee, it was plain that they could render no service to the ex-soldier, therefore the letter was clearly intended to deceive and defraud the man to whom it was written. Mr. Plum preferred not to mention the name of the firm until the whole matter had been thoroughly investigated by the Pension Committee. Senators Davis, Cockrell, Plumb and Hale each took this occasion to denounce the Washington claim agents as "sharks."

The Dependent Pension bill has been under consideration by the House Committee on Pensions, but as yet no action has been taken on it. Petitions have been presented in the House from Pennsylvania and Ohio, asking for the passage of a service pension bill and the per diem pension bill.

Senator Teller, of Colorado, paid his respects to the President's message in a strong speech, on Thursday. He dwelt upon the immense advantage of a protective tariff and contrasted the great prosperity of this country with the poverty of free trade England.

Senator Hale's resolution for the appointment of a special Senate committee of seven, to investigate the many alleged violations, by federal officials, of the civil service law, has been passed by the Senate and the committee appointed. They will begin the investigation as soon as possible. The subject is a large one and includes officials from messengers to Cabinet officers; but the result will pay for all the trouble. It will show the people of the country that in spite of the great professions and promises of Administration, hypocrisy is its ground-work.

Senator Ingalls will, it is understood, write an open letter in reply to one written by an ex-staff officer of Gen. Hancock. It will also answer the charges made by some Democrats with accommodating memories, that the language used by the Senator in referring to the President in his recent speech, was unprecedented. For its severity and personal application, It will be shown that the language complained of was very mild if it be compared with that used by Democratic Senators in speaking of Lincoln, Grant, Hayes, Garfield, and Arthur during their Presidential terms.

Senator Brown, of Georgia, is the latest Democratic Senatorial kicker at the Administration tariff programme. He wants the internal revenue laws repealed at once, and it might be added, so do his moonshiner constituents.

The Ways and Means Committee have commenced night or rather evening sessions, which it seems are necessary in order to make such progress with the tariff bill, as will get it before the House in a reasonable time. It held its first evening meeting Saturday, when the internal revenue portion of the bill was disposed of. It was adopted without amendment. This does not foreshadow a peaceful time, however, many schisms are yet ahead.

HOMŒOPATHY. — Homœopathy, like Gravitation, is a law of Nature; its expression is Similia Similibus Curantur—"like cures like"; a handful of snow cures a frosted ear—snow is like frost but is not frost. Similarly with drugs; each one when taken by a person in health, produces certain "symptoms"—nausea, fever, chills, etc., and when similar symptoms are met in sickness those drugs will cure if it be possible; such, in brief is Homœopathy, the most successful system, or, indeed, the only one, for it is Nature's, and all cures, knowingly or not, must work by the same law. It will pay the reader to write for a copy of our little manual, "The Medical Index," and for our book catalogue. Leading druggists sell our medicines, or we will send a 50 dose vial of any desired remedy for 25 cents. Address BOERICKE & TAFEL, 212 W. Fayette St., Baltimore, Md. Oldest Homœopatic Pharmacy and Publishing House. Established in 1385.

The following from the New York Sun is quite unexpected, but, nevertheless, true: "If ever the lesson was taught to New Yorkers by actual experience that there is an Invisible Power in the universe which can thwart man in all his undertakings, yesterday was the time. Herculaneum and Pempeii were covered with the ashes and lava of Vesuvius. Charleston was wrecked by her earthquake. And now New York has had its life of commerce and of pleasure deadened for two days. We have had a grand opportunity to see with our own eyes how majestic Nature can be in her wrath,"

DEER PARK, March 19, 1888.

MR. EDITOR: — Will you please give space in your valuable paper for the following:

Died, March. 3rd, 1888, aged five years, three weeks and one day, after a lingering illness of pneumonia, Susan Elizabeth, daughter of Benjamin and Mary Spiker, of Summersville, (Wilson's Store.) The body was interred in the Wilson Burial Ground, and the funeral sermon was preached in the Wilson school house, on Sunday last. 18th inst., at 3 o'clock P. M., by Rev, E. A. Paugh, of the U. B. Church. The service was touchingly impressive, and we trust that lasting good may be the result.

Little Susan was a scholar of the Wilson Sunday School, a bright little girl of her years, and loved by all. While we mourn her loss, and sympathize with the bereaved parents, nevertheless our loss is her eternal gain. May we all so live as to meet our young sister in Heaven.

Why should I my loss bemoan;
Though the darling child is dead,
She to early rest is gone;
She to Paradise is fled.

Diamonds!

Now is the time for bargains in Jewelry and Musical Merchandise. I will offer my stock at public auction, commencing Saturday night, March 24th, and continue three nights the following week, Tuesday, Thursday and Saturday. I have a very large stock on hand and wish to reduce it to about one-half. It will pay you to come and buy something, if you don't have occasion to use it for a year to come, as the larger portion of my stock is new and stylish. Stock consists of all kinds of Jewelry, Watches, Clocks, Silverware, Musical Instruments, &c., &c. Come one, come everybody. If you don't get bargains it won't be my fault. Sale to commence about 7 o'clock. (Look out for posted bills everywhere.) Don't forget the date, and don't forget to come. I propose to auction goods that no one will be ashamed to own.

Hoping to see you all out, and wishing you lots of bargains, I am,

Yours respectfully,
F. G. HYDE,
Jeweler, Oakland Md,
N. B.—Terms positively cash.

Swanton.

Mr. C. T. Sweet, who is engaged in the fruit tree business, will shortly have the largest young orchard in this section if not the largest in the county. He is now at work putting up one end of his barn. This part, when completed, will contain stalls for work animals, root cellar, an arch kettle, granary, work shop and room for fodder.

Mr. Wm. E. George was on a visit to relatives at Barton this week.

Mr. C. M. Miller has recently become the possessor of a valuable Irish setter dog.

John A. Wagner, Esq., who a short time ago sold his farm near Barton and went to Kansas, came back to Garrett and located near Swanton, has just completed and moved into his new home. He is a good neighbor and citizen. We would be glad to have some more such settlers come.

Frank Snyder, Esq., with his family, started for Oregon last Saturday. We wish him abundant success in his new home.

Mr. Sol. Harvey, of Wilson's store, is improving his place with a new dwelling house.

Mr. Meshack Harvey is hauling lumber for a new house on his place near Mount Zion.

The cross tie trade is brisk at this time, a great many having been brought to the road this winter.

The B. & O. have now six new "helper" engines on the 17 mile grade. They are heavier than the old engines, their weight being 62 tons, 13 tons heavier than the old ones. The last trial was made with two of the new engines with 22 loaded cars, 13 of them being coal. The run was made in one hour and 58 minutes from Piedmont to Altamont. Sixteen loads were what the old engines hauled. Trials made prove the new engines to be a great improvement over the old ones.

HOOSIER.

Accident.

Mild and pleasant weather has again returned.

The old snow drifts are disappearing fast.

Messrs. John Burkhart and Henry Menhorn went to Hamilton to work on a saw mill.

Messrs. Dr. E. H. Glotfelty and W. B. Glotfelty went to Philadelphia last week.

Mr. George Cropp has returned again from Scottdale, Pa.

Last Thursday evening quite a number of ladies and gentlemen met at Mr. J. W. Boyer's to spend an evening with their departing friends, Mr. John Shartzer and Mr. W. E. Boyer, who are going to California. We feel sorry that they have left us. Mr. W. E. Boyer has been one of the best school teachers we have ever had. As a Sunday school superintendent and teacher he could not be excelled. We wish them much success all through life.

Measles are again coming in this neighborhood.

SWANTON, MD., Mch. 19, 1888.

MR. HAYDEN:—I am going to test the effect of various fertilizing materials applied to my land, but, while I am about it, I wish to do it in such a way that it will benefit our entire county as much as possible:

1st. By creating sufficient public interest that others will perform like experiments in other parts of the county and on different soils, thus making their value greater, both by combination and comparison; and 2d, by provoking thought, discussion and in the end better methods of farming. Our experiments will be as simple as possible, but must be practical and carefully performed to be of any value.

I know that the discussion of these matters in your paper will make it more valuable in a farming county, and that our brief reports through the season of the appearance of the crops and our full report in the fall of the weighed product of each plot, will be discussed and re-discussed, for what is done by those whom we know is always more highly appreciated.

How shall we increase our crops without increasing our labor?

If by applying more manure, what shall we fertilize with?

To be absolutely certain, every farmer must experiment for himself, but twenty farmers with different locations, soils and aspects can settle the thing practically for Garrett county. Now, who will volunteer? Remember they will not be expensive nor very extensive; the crops will probably more than pay, but you will have to do it yourself, unless your hired man is more careful than you are. As to expense, I know of one acre in twenty plots which had altogether $13 88 worth of different manures applied, and which yielded $38.83 more than an adjoining acre without fertilization. And more still, out of those manures, some did actual damage, while others gave a gain of over $65.00 per acre more than they cost. Now, brother farmers, which shall we use? As what is meat to other sections may be poison to ours, we shall have to ask our own fields. Who will help do this for our county? I will be one, and to save time let every one who will help in this good work drop me a postal card this week.

Here is a general outline of the work. We will take our acre, ten rods wide, sixteen long, and divide it into twenty plots, eight and one fourth feet by sixteen rods, and apply the following:

No. 1.—Nothing.
2.—Nitrogen.
3.—Phosphoric acid.
4.—Potash.
5.—Nitrogen and phosporic acid.
6.—Nitrogen and potash.
7.—Phosphoric acid and potash.
8.—Nitrogen, phosphoric acid and potash.
9.—Stable manure.
10.—Ground bone.
11.—Dissolved bone.
12.—Ground S. C. rock.
13.—Dissolved S. C. rock.
14.—Lime.
15.—Plaster.
16.—Guano.
17.—Commercial fertilizer.
18.—Nitrogen, phosphoric acid and potash.
19.—Stable manure.
20.—Nothing.

There is nothing very difficult nor costly about this, and if we are careful about it when we get through we know something. The "Yankees" live a great deal better than we do here on their ten to twenty acre farms, but when they see a thing they don't talk, they act. In fact, the way to accomplish most anything is to do it. Let the postals come. The more the better.

We can get our necessary fertilizers to better advantage if we buy them together, and I shall be glad to give any further information or assistance I can. The experiments should be uniform to be of the most value.

CHAS. T. SWEET,
Swanton.

Flatwoods.

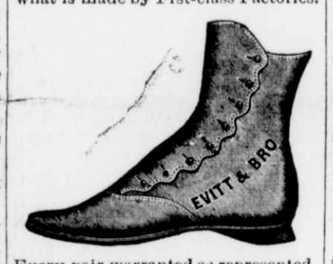
Considering the poor sledding we have had this winter, our energetic farmers have been very successful in hauling large quantities of lime rock upon their farms.

Our school closed with sad countenances upon the scholars. Our teacher has given satisfaction to the scholars and patrons of the School.

Mr. M. L. Fresh has moved from our vicinity, to make his future home in W. Va. He was one of our most energetic farmers. He will be missed by our citizens. We wish him good luck and prosperity in his new home.

Noah Ppsell has lost three yearlings, with the black leg.

Mr. B. F. Keller is preparing to build a home on a part of his father's farm.



We have failed to get Mr. M. L. Mayselles back on this appointment. His presence would have been appreciated very much on this circuit.

The last cold spell was the coldest weather we had this winter.

Foot Wear! Foot Wear!

We have just received a line of Ladies', Misse's, and Children's Fine Shoes, direct from the Factory. We handle nothing in the shoe line but what is made by Frst-class Factories.

Every pair warranted as represented. You are cordially invited to inspect our stock, especially "Evitt's Perfect Fitting Hand-made Shoes."

Senate and President.

WASHINGTON, March 19.—It will be remembered that after the final adjournment of the Forty-ninth Congress there was considerable discussion as to the authority of the President to make during the recess appointments to newly created offices which he had failed to make nominations for prior to the adjournment. Many of the most learned constitutional lawyers in Congress took the ground that no such authority vested in the President. Notwithstanding their opinions the President made the interstate commerce commission appointments, and also appointed Mr. Lacombe as the additional justice for the second judicial circuit. All of these offices had been created at the session that had just closed, and the President had sent no nominations to the Senate to fill them. It was apprehended that the Senate would make an issue with the President as to his action, and intimations were frequently thrown out that the railroads would dispute the acts of the interstate commerce commission, if any were particularly objectionable to them, on the ground that it was not a legal body. Notwithstanding these anticipations, the Senate has not seen fit to make open warfare with the Executive on the point, but the judiciary committee, in reporting recently the nomination of Mr. Lacombe, took occasion to submit and formally place on the files of the executive session a statement of its views on the President's course. The committee expressly deny the constitutional right of the President to fill during a recess of the Senate offices created at the last preceding session, and which had never before been filled, and assert that the only time when any President had ever undertaken to exercise such power was when President Monroe, in 1822, appointed two gentlemen to places in the military establishment newly created. When the Senate again met and the names of these gentlemen sent in, they were rejected. The judiciary committee then go on to say that "the impropriety of this unwarranted action of Mr. Cleveland is much more apparent in the case of political office." Senators Wilson, of Iowa, Ingalls and Pugh unite in an additional comment, saying: "It is against the just philosophy and policy of our constitutional system that judicial offices should be filled in any instance without the advice and consent of the Senate." Senator Vest appends an additional comment to the effect that under no circumstances, however extreme, could he admit the constitutional power of the President to act as he had, and that there were no party divisions in this matter, the Democratic Senators being quite as pronounced as the Republicans in their disapproval of what the President had done. The nomination of Mr. Lacombe was confirmed because technically the terms in which it was made did not show there were any unusual circumstances in the case, but the committee placed its protest on the files, so that hereafter if a similar case should arise the consent of the committee and of the Senate to the appointment of Judge Lacombe should not be construed as a precedent. In transmitting to the President the notification of the confirmation it was accompanied by the comments and conclusion of the committee on his action.

A Gigantic Railway Project.

It has just been discovered that St. Paul, Minneapolis and Chicago railroad men are engineering a stupendous scheme. It is to build a railway from the Twin Cities, via Bismarck, British Columbia and Alaska, to Pekin, China, and Irkouisk, in the Russian empire. The Minneapolis and Pacific, the Aberdeen, Bismarck and Northwestern and the Canada Pacific will carry the road to Victoria. Thence a line will be built to Cape Prince of Wales, on Behring strait, a distance of about eleven hundred miles. This body of water, separating the American continent from Asia, is about thirty-five miles wide, and midway is dotted with islands. The water is only twenty or twenty-five fathoms deep, and can ultimately be bridged, though temporarily a crossing will be made in boats. On the opposite side in Asia is East Cape, whence a road will be constructed to Pekin, China, Yeddo, Japan, and other points in the Russian and Chinese empires. A road is already being constructed by the Russian government to Irkoutsk, and it is expected that this will be extended to form a juncture with the line from East Cape to Pekin, about sixteen hundred miles from the strait.

This project looks huge. It is, and a few years ago would have been deemed a crazy idea and impossible of execution. But scarcely a better country for railroading could be found, with comparatively small exceptions. Through British Columbia a passage is easy. The weather on the proposed line is never severe, and travel is never impeded by snow. There is but one port on the coast that does not remain free of ice during the winter, and that is Westminster, which is sometimes filled with floating cakes. Coal is plentiful and timber inexhaustible. In Alaska there is but one section where cold would prove a drawback, and that is no worse than on the Canadian Pacific. In most of the territory traversed the temperature scarcely ever falls below zero. The extreme upper part of Siberia is almost uninhabitable, but the road will enter that land at about latitude 62, and the country below that is rich in minerals, timber, agricultural productions, furs, etc., and every mile of the road can be made to pay.

The distance between Cape Prince and Pekin is but a little over 1,600 miles, making the whole route from St. Paul and Minneapolis to Pekin but 5,169 miles. Trains are expected to run through in ten days. The time to Yeddo, Japan, will be about the same as to Pekin. — Chicago Times.

Grumbling is a very easy thing to do. It takes less talent to be a good grumbler than would fit a man for any other calling. The man best qualified to engage in this business is the one who does the least and succeeds the worst. Whoever has his hands and heart full of work is no grumbler. If you want to get the best remedy for this malady, get work and do it. You will get well as quick as if you had taken a bottle of patent medicine.

RED AND WHITE.

Uncle Zeke's Investigations and His Courtship.

"How's Northwestern this morning, Unkle Zeke?" asked Dick Spriggs across the restaurant table.

"Slumped off six points, blast it," scowling viciously over his paper at the steak brought by the waiter.

Ezekiel Spriggs laid down his paper and picking up his fork stuck it into the meat. As he withdrew it and saw the rich, red juice ooze out, his face brightened. Spriggs was somewhat of an epicure.

"Six point's a pretty big drop," said Dick, possessing himself of the paper and alternating between it and his breakfast: "How d'ye come out?"

But Spriggs was busily engaged in tearing off huge pieces of steak and chewing them with much the same expression that a chicken exhibits when taking a drink of water. Business was business, but breakfast was breakfast just then, and while Dick chattered and read extracts, Spriggs turned his eyes to the ceiling at every bite and gave himself up to the soulful enjoyment of what was before him. Dick skimmed lightly over the news, took a cursory glance at the editorials and paused at the lower corner of the page; then he read aloud:

"Possibly the reason why, when a red-headed girl appears on the street, a white horse soon makes its appearance, will have to be sought for in history. Away back in the early Greek and Egyptian days, red-haired girls were justly prized above all——"

"Whadz that?" interrupted Spriggs. Spriggs was a bachelor, and though rich, was not especially addicted to the fair sex.

Dick leaned thoughtfully back in his chair. "It's a dodgasted funny thing, Uncle Zeke, but it's a fact, never knew it to fail; straight as a string, too."

"Well, what is it?"

"Why, don't you see, the saying is that where ever you see a red-headed girl there is always a white horse in sight. I believe it now—didn't at first. Why only last Sunday night I went to church with Miss Austin—you ought to see her, Uncle Zeke—— " Dick paused with a piece of steak half-way to his mouth and gazed yearningly at the blank wall. "Well, as I was saying, I went to church; coming out I saw directly in front of us a girl with hair just about as red as you find it. One of the rules of the game is that you must always go some where that is accessible to the horse after seeing the red hair, so I made an excuse about a short cut and dragged Mabel out the side door. I thought I had the white horse sequence dead this time, but just as we came out the door, sure enough the inevitable white horse came trotting around the corner. There wasn't another four-legged animal in sight and I didn't see any the whole way home. I've tried it every chance and never knew it to fail."

Spriggs grunted an inaudible response and rose from the table. By noon he had forgotten all about it but the sight of a red-haired girl brought the subject to his mind. In spite of its evident absurdity, there was something odd and uncanny about the notion and Spriggs almost unconsciously began to scan the passers-by. Turning the corner he came plump against another maid with fiery hair and sure enough there, hitched to a post, was a rather scrawny but an unmistakable white horse. This was the beginning of his downfall, for there and then he determined to see exactly what was in the saying. Now Spriggs was nothing if not methodical. A long life of single blessedness and business training had made him so, and he entered into the investigation in somewhat the same manner as he would some great business question.

The major part of the next day was spent in keeping tally of the horses that passed his office window; and the following day in an extended hunt of red-headed girls without regard to their so-called accompaniments. The result was that while one horse in every fifteen was white, only one female in thirty-one had red hair. A series of afternoon sittings at his club window brought out the remarkable fact that for every seven women that passed, two horses were in sight. This was to be the basis of the test. Spriggs reasoned that the chances against the sequence were about two to one, for, according to his observations, in the ordinary day's run, there were twice as many red-haired girls as white horses. This, of course, did not allow for unusual occurrences or for night travel, when there were fewer horses on the street. At the end of the first week the result was: Failures, one; verifications, forty-eight. Spriggs did not quite believe in the thing yet, but the next week was even more convincing. The record stood: Failures, none; success, seventy-four times. By this time it had become not a definite test to prove the truth of a saying, but a wild hunt after an instance where a failure could be recorded. Night after night Spriggs prowled around the streets, peering into the faces of the pedestrians and frequenting localities where there would be little likelihood of finding quadrupeds. The fever had grown to such an extent that he was forced to admit to himself that there must be something in it, while he professed to believe that the truth needed further investigation.

One day Dick dropped in and taking Spriggs aside, with much hesitation and stammering, confided the fact that he was engaged to be married. "It's Mabel Austin, Uncle Zeke, a beautiful girl ——"

"Light or dark?" asked Spriggs, with a quick look of interest.

"Well, I guess you'll call her a brunette, for she has the loveliest black hair in the world; but I have promised to bring you to see her to-night. Say you'll go, Uncle Zeke—I'll call for you at eight, shall I?"

It had been many years since Spriggs had gone out calling and he was loth to begin now, when he needed all his time for his investigations; however, he promised and sent his nephew away rejoicing.

Spriggs found Mabel all that Dick had claimed for her, and was well pleased with his boy's choice; yet the evening dragged somewhat, and his dress suit made Uncle Zeke overly conscious of his society shortcomings.

He was standing near the window for a moment alone, when he heard his name called. Turning quickly, he saw Dick approaching with a vision of loveliness on his arm.

One look was enough, and the next instant Spriggs had wheeled about and jerked aside the hangings. Trotting slowly past, and directly under the street lamp, was the inevitable white horse.

Then he remembered that Dick possibly wanted to present him, and, dropping the curtain in great haste, he confronted the pair. The vision had a cold and haughty look, and Dick was clearly embarrassed. Spriggs appreciated his awkward position fully, and with a great effort made himself exceedingly agreeable. Indeed, in his abject humiliation, he was so devoted that Dick was led to whisper to his fiancee: "Your sunny-headed friend seems to have caught Uncle Zeke hard."

When Spriggs went home he sat down and went over the events of the evening. The vision was certainly handsome and could talk as few women were able, but he shuddered at the thought of her hair. It was an unmistakable red. Nevertheless, he had asked permission to call and it had been graciously granted. Spriggs called and then called again. In a short time his leisure hours were about evenly divided between his investigations and the vision. Spriggs was struck hard, so hard, indeed, that when in her delightful presence he almost forgot his hobby. He invariably hired a white horse, however, when he took her out driving. Once he had the temerity to try a bay horse, but he never repeated the experiment. He was uneasy the whole time, for while his heart and soul were with his companion his mind and eyes sadly missed the familiar sequence.

One evening as matters were approaching a crisis, Spriggs found himself seated in close proximity to his inamorata. He had fully made up his mind to settle the matter at once and have done with it. There was just enough manly conceit about him to make him feel assured that his suit would not be unsuccessful, but it was with considerable trepidation that he approached the subject. The conversation had drifted, as lovers' talk invariably will, to the personal, and Spriggs was expatiating on early struggles and ambitions.

"I had a hard time of it when I was young," he was saying. "My nature was not one to make friends readily, and female friends were exceedingly rare. Indeed, my mother was the only woman with whom I felt really at ease. Then, as my business grew, I had so much to attend to that social pleasures were almost unknown."

There was silence for a moment; both intuitively felt that the time was almost at hand. The vision was seated facing the deep bay window with her head just touching the curtains, while Spriggs sat so that his back was towards the street. He generally sat that way when in her company to avoid the temptation of looking out when he heard a horse passing.

Then Spriggs meditatively resumed:

"Until lately I thought that I should always move along in the rut I have fallen into, but now I am bold enough to hope for something infinitely better."

As Spriggs in his earnestness leaned forward, his quick ear heard the distant pit-a-pat of a trotting horse. His first impulse was to turn and look out, but with a mighty effort he restrained himself, and, leaning still further, he groped blindly, excitedly for her hand. Nearer and nearer came the horse, but Spriggs now had a firm grasp on her hand.

"I do hope for something infinitely better, and—and——"

"Well," softly breathed the vision, while her glorious eyes gazed dreamily past him into the deepening night.

"And—and now it all rests on a single word. Can you—will you—dear Miss Lucy—is that a white horse?"

Dick Spriggs said the other day that if he did not read the papers for himself every morning he would imagine from Uncle Zeke's appearance that Northwestern had slumped off about six hundred points.—E. A. Custer, in Detroit Free Press.

PRACTICAL FORESTRY.

Tree-Planting a Labor That Returns a Good Rate of Interest.

This much certainly is practicable: That the land grow only valuable trees; and that land which can not be cultivated profitably be put in trees. The average forest growth might be three times as valuable. It is badly distributed—bare spots and crowded spots. On the first, a thick sod prevents a natural growth; but enough trees can soon be planted. Thinning out the dense, stunted growth will much improve it, and usually only nearly worthless trees need be cut out. Our woodlands contain many trees that have no value for lumber, and scarcely any for fuel. Valuable trees ought to be growing in their places, or have the space for their better development. If, to thin properly, valuable trees must be cut, take the worst-formed and least vigorous. No tree that will not make good rails or posts should grow; for a tree that will make good rails and posts will take its place, and the limbs and knotty parts of such trees will furnish all the fuel needed. It is best to foster the growth of valuable trees of the kind growing naturally on the land, for it is certain that the soil and climate are adapted to these trees. Nearly every nut tree makes valuable lumber, and the nuts will bring an income while the trees grow.

Dressing the woodland in the way contemplated above necessitates little extra labor; but it requires that the labor be intelligently applied. Trees for rails, posts and fuel must not be cut by chance. Those of least value and vigor are to be selected for fuel and such uses, and when trees furnishing the best timber must be cut, they should be taken from among the thickest growth. The usual winter timber cutting, thus directed, will accomplish at least two-thirds of the work; and of the other third, a good part can be done in winter and early spring, when there is time for it. Not a little land now cultivated would better be in trees. Hillsides that wash easily, have been cleared of soil by rains, and fertilizers applied to them are half thrown in the creeks. These hillsides are hard to cultivate and yield poor crops. Some of them are so cut up that they can not be cultivated at all with horses. Trees do best in a good soil, yet they will grow on these hillsides. As soon as they have a fair start, grass may be made to grow by using fertilizers, and the grass and roots of the trees will prevent the washing by rain, while the leaves from the trees, and natural forces, will deepen and enrich the soil. Although the best timber growth can never be expected on these hills, yet trees that will yield more profit than cultivated crops can be grown by a little care. He who plants a tree puts labor out at a good rate of interest.—American Agriculturist.

The Very Latest Kink.

"I came in here to ask you," he began as he entered a Grand River grocery. "I came in here to——"

"No, sir!" was the prompt reply.

"I came in here to ——"

"Well, you can go right out, again!"

"Sir! I'm no beggar!" exclaimed the stranger.

"I know it," replied the grocer. "You came in to ask if I had a City Directory. I haven't got one. I never had one. I was trying to save your valuable time."

The stranger stalked stiffly out, and as he related his adventure on the corner he was asked if that really was his object.

"O, no," he replied; "I was going to ask him for credit until Saturday night, and that is the new way of choking a man off. He tried to spare my feelings and secure himself at the same time. It's a new kink among grocers, and I guess I'll have to pay cash."—Detroit Free Press.

A Chinese Dust Storm.

What is described as "a proper dust-storm" recently passed over Pekin The morning opened with a thick fog, damp and raw, and a slight air of wind from the east. In the forenoon the sun partially broke through and showed a strong current from the west in the higher regions of the atmosphere. Then a deep yellow haze obscured the sun for some hours, reminding one of the characteristic London fog. The air was quite still. In the afternoon, suddenly as a shot from a gun, a gale broke out of the west and blew hard till after sunset, when it lulled, but broke out afresh during the night and continued for some hours more. The morning revealed a coating of fine yellow dust over every thing. This dust comes from great distances, and is carried along in a dense cloud at very high altitudes.—N. Y. Post.

—Scientists in England have long sought to have the education of mechanics and other laborers placed on a scientific basis. An effort, backed by half a million of dollars, is now to be made in Manchester to found an institution whereby "the physical energies of the population may be maintained at a proper level, their moral state be cared for, and by which there may be some days of hope and pleasure in their lives, and the sole prospect of a life of labor may not be an old age of penury."

—Cotton, according to a scientific authority, is not a fiber, but a plant hair. It holds to be spun into a thread because of peculiar twists in each hair, shown under the microscope, especially in polarized light. Linen thread may be spun, because the flax fibers have certain roughnesses on their surfaces, which enable them to cling together. Hence it is impossible to make as fine linen as cotton cloth, but it is much stronger.

—Veneer manufacturers having been put to much trouble and expense to secure from the natives of Persia or from French markets, even, fancy wood burls from which to carve out veneers for manufacturing purposes, have demonstrated by recent experiments that red wood stumps possess meritorious qualities for such use, and will undoubtedly be substituted for the more costly woods in the future. The demand for burl and curly red wood for finishing work has already reached large proportions in the West. The large butts of trees now being slain in California forests will be used to a great extent.

FAMOUS BUSYBODIES.

The Three Taylors of Tooley Street Not a Mythical Creation.

It is supposed by many that the three tailors of Tooley street were a mythical creation of Canning (some say of O'Connell) during the agitation for the removal of Catholic disabilities. But this is not so; for, although all three were not tailors, yet the men had a living existence, and the facts associated with them had an actual reality. The three men were John Grose, tailor, Tooley street; Thomas Scatterly, tailor, Netson street, and George Sandham, grocer, Bermondsey street. The last was known by the soubriquet of "Spinmischief," from his irritating interference in other people's affairs. These three men were great local politicians—local dictators, in fact—who met in the evenings after business at a public house in the neighborhood to discuss, over their pipe and glass, the affairs of their neighbors and of the nation, no subject being too great or too insignificant to escape their critical supervision. At the time when the Catholic emancipation movement was at its height the Tooley street politicians were agitated to the highest pitch, and, having a firm belief in their own powers and the righteousness of their cause, they resolved at one of their meetings to petition the houses of Parliament on the subject, and actually prepared a petition which commenced with the words: "We, the people of England." Although the place of meeting and much of Tooley street have been demolished of late years, there are, no doubt, many people still living in Bermondsey who remember these three busybodies.—Notes and Queries.

TEMPERANCE.

THE CRIMSON STAIN.

"Oh! curse this awful appetite for drink,
I feel that I am standing on the brink
Of a precipice, with not a friend around
To draw me back to firmer, safer ground.
Oh, the thirsting! Oh, the craving! Oh, the burning!
Oh, the loathing! Oh, the loving! Oh, the spurning!
Every nerve, every vein
Throbs with pain—
But I've sworn to never touch the stuff again.

"There's a bar-room o'er the way. Hear the clink
Of the glasses as the 'boys' step up to drink.
There is something now a-pulling me that way.
Hear the laughter! Hear the singing! All are gay!
For a moment shall I step across the street?
How hilariously would old companions greet!
Shall I go? How my brain
Throbs with pain!
But I've sworn to never touch the stuff again.

'Ah! who is that a beckoning to me?
'Tis my little sweetheart—none so fair as she.
She is waiting now to take the promised walk.
How I love to watch her smile, and hear her talk.
She it was who plucked me from the 'ragged edge;'
She it was who made her lover sign the pledge.
No more throbbing of the brain,
Vanish pain—
I swear I'll never touch the stuff again."

Hear the bell—hear the clanging marriage bell.
What a tale of hopes and fears doth it tell?
See the bride—see the blushing, tearful bride.
See the proud and happy bridegroom by her side.
'Tis he who cursed his appetite for drink—
'Tis he who stood upon destruction's brink,
Every nerve, every vein
Racked with pain—
'Tis he who swore to never drink again.

See the tears—see the bitter, scalding tears.
See the wife—see the wife of two short years.
See the child—see the puny, starving child.
See the man—see the man, unkempt and wild.
See him raise his hand and strike with savage blow
Her whom he swore to love two years ago.
Hear her beg for life in vain.
See the stain—the crimson stain.
She ne'er will weep o'er broken vows again.

"COME, TAKE A DRINK."

The Custom of "Treating" and What It Leads to—Drink in Commercial and Business Relations.

[The following facts with reference to the "treating" habit are furnished The Voice by a well-known newspaper man of Brooklyn, whose business and social relations have given him a clear insight into the relations of this pernicious social custom to the wide prevalence of inebriety.]:

One must know the facts about the "treating" habit in order to know what an important element it is in the matter of excessive drinking. Let us go to the famous Hoffman House bar. We will sit at a table and drink a bottle of lemon soda as an excuse for being there. In one hour we have seen fifty men drink at the bar; four of them drank alone. Thirty were accompanied by from one to three friends. Each man treated. Sixteen came in parties of two or three, and each member of the party treated. Down town, at Nash & Crook's, we see few men come in singly. In half an hour, while sitting at the lunch counter, we have seen fifteen parties, ranging from two to five persons each, stand up at the bar. In most cases each man has treated and in nine cases out of ten these parties have been joined by other men, some one of whom has been acquainted with some one in the party, and introductions and reciprocal drinks have taken place all around.

You may say this doesn't prove much, and that it only happened so. But I claim that the "treating" habit is responsible for most of the excessive drinking. This is not a pet theory, but is based on personal acquaintanceship with a large number of men who have suffered from the drink habit—men whom I have met while holding official positions in both the State and the National Government, and in a wide acquaintance with men generally, from a very early age.

Let us take a report of 600 cases of inebriety in the King's County (N. Y.) inebriate asylum. Of these 600 cases, 458 became inebriates from association, i. e., from going with drinking men and indulging in the habit of treating. Among other cases given are melancholia, injury, business, disease, trouble, being in the army (meaning, probably, the fatigues and exposure of military life) and hereditary. As to hereditary the specialist in dipsomania does not believe that because a man's father or grandfather was a drunkard he must of necessity be one. What he says is that a man so situated as to relationship will have a standing tendency toward the excessive use of liquor, and that he should not use it at all. The specialist says that there are very few men who really like the taste of alcoholic drink, but there are many men, in our present state of civilization, the condition of whose nervous system is such that they can not escape becoming inebriates if they drink at all.

Many an inebriate, morally speaking, would like to stop the habit, but he drinks from what he believes to be a physical necessity. Hence it is that a man who has once been committed to the inebriate asylum can never drink with safety on his release.

A distinguished artist was lately found dead in a liquor saloon. Three years ago he told me of the great excesses in which he was indulging, and asked me how he could stop. I told him the first thing to be done was, as Falstaff says, forswear "villainous good company." No man could ever break the habit as long as his companions, during social hours, were men as badly off as himself. A year ago two of his quondam companions died from excessive drinking. Soon after this the artist voluntarily went to an inebriate asylum, was cured, and for a time did well. The doctor of the institution met him, and his former patient said he drank nothing but beer at his dinner. "You must stop that," said the physician; "you can drink absolutely nothing intoxicating." The artist failed to heed the order; sure enough, he relapsed into his old habits and died.

The methods of carrying on business resorted to by some firms in the mercantile world lead many men to become excessive drinkers. More than one-half of the "drummers," or commercial travelers, in the United States make it a matter of business to treat their customers to liquor and cigars. It is not absolutely necessary to pursue this custom in order to get trade, and men who are thoroughly businesslike refuse to use any outside inducements. But the more ordinary class of "drummers" do a large amount of "treating," as they believe it helps along trade.

The expense of "treating" goes on their expense account and is rarely questioned. Some travelers make a gross charge for their expenses; others, in the smaller houses, have an itemized expense book, with the various items of expense printed, and a blank space to put in the amount. When they "treat" the expense is put down to that account.

At certain times of the year the country merchant comes to New York to make purchases and see the styles. The drummer meets him at the store and treats him while he is in the city to dinners and plenty of liquid refreshment. In former times some houses were in the habit of employing a special man, whose duty it was to meet the merchants, to take them out and show them the city.

Some years ago there was a country peddler who, in his travels, had made the acquaintance of a large number of business men. He came to New York and was employed by a big mercantile house, though he knew nothing about the business carried on in the establishment. His duty was to induce his friends to patronize the establishment. Whenever they came to the city he would meet them and "entertain" them royally at the expense of his employers.

With such methods prevailing in certain portions of the mercantile world it is not surprising that many business men contract the drinking habit and, sooner or later, become excessive drinkers. Of the six hundred inebriates in King's County Asylum above spoken about, nearly two hundred were merchants, clerks and salesman.

TEMPERANCE ITEMS.

RUM, revelry and revolvers made a ghastly record in a West Virginia town. Two drunken men were flourishing pistols without any deadly intention, and both weapons were discharged by accident, killing one of the men and fatally wounding the other.—Chicago Times.

JAMES ALBERT, the winner of the six-days' walking match in New York City, made a speech in which he expressed the belief that total abstinence from intoxicating drinks was the prime factor in his success. The New York Sun says: "His bit of oratory made a good Temperance appeal."

S. A. HAINES of Netherwood, R. I., for twenty years a commercial traveler, has organized a Temperance organization which he has named the "King's Temperance Army." The requisite for membership is a pledge not to drink intoxicants. Each member is expected to get ten others. The especial object is to help commercial travelers.

CITY MISSIONARY FREAS, of Trenton, N. J., who has been at work among the poor and unfortunates in that city for the last ten years, in his report for 1887, says: "I still find the liquor traffic the fruitful cause of most of the evils in our midst and the chief hindrance to the improvement to the morals of the people and the greatest drawback to the prosperity of our city."

Direful Effects of Rum.

The world's history is but the repeated story of the fall of nations. Not one of the mighty empires of the past is in existence to-day, and rum was the most potent factor in the decay of each and every one of them. Drunkenness is the fruitful parent of the whole brood of debasing vices, and the great nations of antiquity fell through the destruction of the manhood of their people through rum and vice. It is the lessons of the annals of the world that power and wealth give the means to the people of a nation to indulge their appetites, and that through that indulgence inevitably comes the decay of the state. It was so with Assyria, with Egypt, with Greece, with Rome, and it will be so with every nation whose flag proudly floats to-day, including our own loved land, if the curse of rum is not banished. Wherever rum exists, men will drink it—for a large fraction of humanity lacks moral backbone, and is swayed by passion and by appetite rather than governed by reason and obedient to the commands of religion and the behests of common sense; and so long as they drink, intemperance and vice and crime will abound. Men are subject, by the eternal law, to the consequences of their own acts; and this is true of them as individuals and as communities. Individuals will be brought down to pauperism, to vice and to crime, and the Nation will decay in the same proportion.—Toledo Blade.

From force of habit, when he got to his room, he wound his watch, hung it in its usual place, disrobed and went to bed.

THE SENSE OF TUNE.

An Army Officer Who Could Not Distinguish One Note from Another.

That there are many people who are unable either to sing a tune or to recognize one when it is sung is well known. But no musician nor man of science is able fully to account for the phenomenon of one person out of twenty, or one out of forty, according to the nation to which he belongs, being unable to do what all the rest do instinctively, although his hearing is as good as theirs. It has been suggested that people so afflicted have ears that are not, so to speak, mates, inasmuch as they hear the musical sounds differently, and so make a discord and render the effect disagreeable. But this theory seems to be disproved by the circumstance that music is not by any means disagreeable to many people who do not know one note from another. Though they can not distinguish even a tune that has been sung or played to them a great many times, they are nevertheless "moved with concord of sweet sounds." Other people hear all musical sounds alike, and to them music is not discord, but simply noise.

But if the theory of the unlike ears does not explain all cases of "music deafness," it seems to explain some of them. General Grant used to say that all music was torture to him. A certain gallant Major, however, was differently affected. A young lady, who had sung a great many songs to him, finally remarked:

"But, perhaps, Major, you do not like music?"

"O yes, miss; I may say that I like any kind of noise!"

A certain gentleman who is master of a New England high school is very lenient to such of his pupils as declare themselves unable to sing. He remembers an experience which he had in his own youth, when he was required to sing, with others, in school, although he could not distinguish one tone from another. Seeing that his singing seemed to give him a good deal of distress, the teacher called him out and asked him if he could sing the scale.

"I suppose so, sir," said the boy.

"Then let me hear you."

The boy sang "Do, re, mi, fa, sol, la, si, do," but all upon one note, without a particle of difference between them. He had never supposed there was any thing more of it. In after-life this gentleman became an officer in the service of the Union. He found that his entire inability to distinguish one musical note from another caused him difficulty in recognizing the bugle calls. They were all on one note to him. As it was necessary for him to know them, he sent for a bugler and had him practice all the calls, in succession, before his tent. After a series of these studies, he became able to distinguish the calls, but he learned them rather by their rhythm than by the varying notes.—Youth's Companion.

THE SULTAN'S HAREM.

Conspicuous Personages and Officials of the Establishment.

The Sultana Valide is the only inmate of the royal harem who is privileged to receive visits from foreigners. Under a manner of quiet dignity she carries determination, which makes high officials dread her influence and seek her favor. In time of peril and distress she may admit deputations from the army and people; her judgment in affairs is acknowledged, and she has been known to plead for her son with eloquence and pathos. At the festival of Bairam, celebrated by the departure of pilgrims for Mecca, she joins the highest dignitaries and ministers, officers, civil and martial, in kissing the hem of the Sultan's robe. By court etiquette he must stand in her presence, sitting at her request; in return, the place at his right hand, given by Solomon to his mother, is still the reserved seat for the mother of the Padisha. The pontoon bridge spanning the Golden Horn, crossed daily by 100,000 men, is called the Bridge of the Sultana Valide, and leads to a mosque of the same name.

A conspicuous person about the palace is the Bairam Aga, keeper of the maidens, a jet-black Nubian, probably from the Soudan. He wears a gorgeous uniform of scarlet and gold, has the air of authority, and on his ample breast displays a dozen imperial, royal and Christian orders of which he is knight. He ranks with Prime Ministers and Field Marshals, disputes precedence with ambassadors, and is courted for his influence. A genuine African, he loves jewels, and on the hand graciously extended for kisses of the Faithful there glitters a ruby second only to the one for which Kubla Khan offered a city and was refused. From the savings of his income the Guardian of the Lilies has built a mosque for his lordly sepulcher when his term of vigilant service is ended.

The true Oriental is unsurpassed in secrecy, and there is a fascination in his silence which moves the gossip to insatiate curiosity. The foreigner must stop at the carved and gilded portal of the consecrated place. Even Bairam Aga does not pass it. Ambassadors have petitioned and Princesses sued in vain for entrance into the gate of felicity. The outside world hears not the faintest echo of the strange, adventurous life of women whose loves, hates, spites, intrigues, are plays played out with neither audience nor spectator to report. If Bairam Aga knows more than we do, he makes no sign; he is secret as the grave.

Seven female officers preside over the haremlik. Each has her slaves and establishment, and may be often seen shopping in the city, attended by the imperial servants. Seven thousand persons daily eat the bread and salt at the Grand Signor. My brief space forbids enumeration of service or wages. A few items are: 300 cooks, 400 musicians, 200 men in charge of menageries and aviaries, 1,200 female slaves. Properly speaking, there is no civil list, and accurate figures are not easily reached. The ladies, veiled and attended, visit in their walled gardens and palaces, hired musicians play on lutes and almehs dance for their amusement. Donizetti, brother of the famous composer, was at one time director-in-chief of the Sultan's music.—Susan E. Wallace, in Philadelphia Press.

THE MURDERED CZAR.

A Charming Story of the Late Alexander II. of Russia.

There appeared in print a most scurrilous attack upon the morals of the Czar and the Empress, in rhyme, which was discovered to be the work of a young noble, famous for his literary gifts, but strongly suspected of Nihilistic tendencies. When the identity of the author was reported to the Czar he sent for the young man to come and see him. They chatted together for a few moments on commonplace topics, when the Czar invited him to take luncheon with the imperial family. After the luncheon was served and the Czar sat sipping a cup of tea, he turned to the young noble and said:

"I understand you are a very clever poet."

The author blushed and acknowledged that he did some verses now and then.

"And I am informed that you are the writer of a most beautiful tribute to your Emperor and Empress lately—one of the most charming things I have ever seen, so pure and elevated in sentiment, so nobly and beautifully conceived and so honorably published. I have asked you here that you may see the family you have made the subject of your lines, in order that you may judge for yourself how truthful you are, and witness 'the old boar,' as you called me, and 'the old sow,' as you called my wife, 'the litter of pigs,' as you called my children, 'eating from the trough,' as you were pleased to call my table. Now that you for the first time have had an opportunity to see what degraded beasts we are, I must ask you to return the favor by reading your little work aloud in our presence. Here is a copy," said the Czar, drawing from his pocket one of the brutal and obscene pamphlets that had been published anonymously and circulated broadcast.

The young poet dropped upon his knees and begged for mercy. He denied and confessed the authorship in the same breath, and actually fell over in a faint. He said he would rather be hung, rather be sent to Siberia than read the poem in the presence of the family, and tore the pamphlet to tatters. The Czar took him by the hand, bade him ask the forgiveness of the Empress and then with a word of admonition dismissed him.—Chicago News.

THE DOCTOR'S DILEMMA.

The Hard Row Which the Average Physician Has to Hoe.

The individual, no matter what his profession may be, who imagines that he is going to give satisfaction to the general public in any thing he may undertake, is certainly the victim of a delusion. It is impossible to please every body. The man, be his station in life what it may, who comes up to the expectation of the multitude has not yet been born. The editor, in particular, soon makes this discovery. The clergyman also knows that there are people in his congregation who are never satisfied with what he does or eaves undone. The doctor is another professional man who has a hard row to hoe.

If a doctor dresses well and wears a high hat, people say that he is a medical dude. If, on the other hand, he pays little or no attention to his toilet, then he is accused of lack of dignity. If he goes into society, attends balls and parties, then the impression is that he is fishing for popularity. If he does not he is accused of putting on airs.

If the physician visits his patients while they are in good health, he is accused of foisting himself upon them. He comes to the house in order to be invited to dinner. If, on the other hand, he never comes until he is called, the inference is that the only use that he has for his patients is to make money out of them when they are sick. If the doctor attends church, of course he is a hypocrite who is trying to work on the religious feelings of the community. If he does not attend church, nothing can be plainer than that he is an infidel or a socialist. If the doctor's wife does not return the calls that other ladies make on her, then she is stuck up, turning up her nose at her betters, etc. If she does return the calls, then she is flushing patients for her husband to shoot at.

If the doctor's horse is fat, that is a sure sign that he has not got much to do. If the animal is emaciated, he is a brute for not taking better care of his horse. If he drives fast, he is trying to create the false impression that he has been called to the bedside of some important patient. If he drives slowly he does not care a cent whether or not his patients die before he gets to them.

If a patient recovers his health, he is indebted to a kind Providence or a strong constitution, or to the care that was taken of him during his illness. In no case is the doctor entitled to any credit for his recovery. If the patient dies, he was undoubtedly murdered by his physician. If the medical man is sociable and talkative, the people say: "We don't want a doctor who tells every thing he knows." If he is a silent man, then they say a doctor should encourage his patients to be communicative.

If he talks politics, they say that a doctor should have no politics; and if he does not talk politics, then he is a sneak and a time-server who either has no politics or is afraid to own up what his politics really are. If he does not send in his bill, his object is to prevent the patient from engaging another doctor. If he does send in his bill, he is in a fearful hurry for his money, and so on to the end of the chapter.—Texas Siftings.

GLANDERS AND FARCY.

Why Farmers Should Not Attempt to Doctor Diseased Animals.

The prevalence of glanders in quite a number of places in the West prompts a repetition of the warnings given heretofore in our columns, that it is extremely dangerous for any one to attempt the doctoring of such diseased animals. Cases are frequent where this loathsome disease has been conveyed to the attendants, who, after lingering a while in great suffering, have died horrible deaths, the care of such persons being not only repulsive, but dangerous as well. There is only one safe course to follow when animals are found to be affected with glanders, and that is to immediately destroy them, and bury them deeply where they are not likely to be disturbed. The stables shou'd be thoroughly disinfected, and every thing that has been used about the animals, brushes, harness, pails, etc., should be immersed in boiling water, and then, after having been dried, placed in a carbolic acid solution. A safer method is to burn all these things, together with all straw, hay or other food about the mangers, and even the wood-work about the stables. The fatal and very contagious character of this disease calls for the greatest caution, and it is far better to burn every thing from which there is the least danger, rather than take any risk whatever. It is particularly dangerous for any one whose hands the skin is broken or tender to handle such animals, for, as stated, the disease is incurable, and alike fatal to man and beast. Farcy is a similar disease, and either frequently terminates in combination with the other. Although generally spread by infection, these diseases may originate from badly ventilated, unhealthy quarters, from bad food, privation, etc., and hence the importance of providing suitable food and housing for the stock. When the disease breaks out in a stable, the affected animals should be immediately separated from the rest. Those that have been exposed should be carefully watched, and on the first appearance of any indications of the disease should at once be placed where they can do no harm, and when it is evident that the disease is glanders, they should also be killed immediately. Neither horses nor mules should be placed in a stable where glanders has appeared for at least two months afterwards, the building, meantime, having been thoroughly disinfected.—National Live Stock Journal.

IMPROVED FARMING.

How Western Land May Be Made to Produce More Than It Ever Did.

The tilling of soil and growing of crops—that is what one usually characterizes as farming; but that term can scarcely be applied with justice to much of the work done on our farms to-day. Farming should mean the perfect handling of a given portion of land so that it shall produce a maximum amount of products, cereals, roots, vegetables, fruits and grasses, and their secondary products, horses, cattle, sheep, swine, poultry, eggs, butter, cheese and milk. Regarding it in this light, then, can we say that farming, so-called, deserves the name? Is not a great majority of it a mere attempt at farming—a work begun and only half finished; a profession practiced but not thoroughly understood; a pursuit capable of the profitable introduction of more brain work into the mechanism of its machinery, and in short demanding the better education of those employed in it? Years ago when the great Western plains of America lay in undisturbed repose, the prairie grasses gannually growing up and falling down, thus gradually but surely enriching the soil whence they came, the pioneer—the "farmer" of his day—came, saw and settled thereupon. Possessed of limited means and but crude implements for cultivating the soil, with no railroad facilities and few marketing points, his requirements were of necessity those merely of himself and family. Thus no great efforts were needed by him to secure sufficient returns from the soil for the maintenance of himself and children. He merely "tickled" the soil, so to speak, scattered seed and the fertile earth rewarded him an hundred fold. This man was a farmer sufficiently well versed for his day and opportunities, when manual labor alone was almost all that the pursuit required. Since then what a change has come to these Western farms and to the descendants of those pioneer farmers? The present generation inherits, not virgin soil to cultivate, but farms that have been hard run and badly worked; a legacy of poverty this to the man who has not learned more about farming than his forefathers knew, and worse yet to his children after him. With the stern necessities of the farmer's position of to-day, surrounded by thousands of men competing with him in the markets of the country, middlemen, high freight rates and consequent low prices for products, with land no longer rich in nature's store of crop food for the manufacture of farm products, farming has become a most difficult profession. Men, who, finding themselves in these circumstances, surrounded by difficulties and possessed of unprolific soil, content themselves with farming as their fathers did must fail, or at best make but a hard-earned living for themselves and families in the sweat of their brows. Those who would make a success of farming are of an altogether different class. They are men whose headwork precedes their manual labor in every department of the farm; whose manual labor is the carrying of science into practice, and whose practice is perfect in detail and correct in principle. Their farms are farmed in the proper sense of the word. Crops are taken from the land, and in their place something is returned to repair the loss consequent upon cropping. The land is thoroughly worked, every inch of it; the crop is thoroughly removed, no ten-inch stubble being left behind, is thoroughly threshed, no good grain finding its way into the chaff, and is thoroughly fed to "thoroughbred" improved stock. In short, the successful farmer is the thorough farmer, who understands farming principles and practically applies them. Such farmers have not each day to look out upon slovenly surroundings and miserable, unthrifty "scrub" stock, but live comfortably themselves because they have the better feelings of "thoroughbreds," and warmly house and properly feed their stock because it too has a dash of thoroughbred blood in it, enhancing its value, and therefore rendering it worthy of proper attention. Our farming has improved because our farmers have improved themselves, to enable them to cope with deteriorated soil and depreciated prices for products. By proper farming the land may be made to produce more than ever it did, and by improving the quality of its products the prices commanded by them will be greater and more remunerative than before.—Farmers' Review.

—A man named Burdick, who removed from the East to Kansas several years ago, recently found a tax receipt given to his grandfather in Allegany County, New York, thirty-five years ago. He picked up the paper on the prairie forty miles from his own home, and miles away from any settlement. His grandfather never was in Kansas, nor had the finder ever seen the paper before. Now he is puzzling his brains to ascertain how that old receipt traveled so far.

—A hoed crop should be a part of the regular rotation on all farms, for the reason that such a crop requires close cultivation, and when removed leaves the ground clean. Unless this be done the weeds will at some time take possession of the fields, though much benefit will result from the use of the cultivator if a corn crop is grown.

—In case of tomatoes to be grown in new soil, likely to be too rich and send up plenty of vines and blossoms but little or no fruit, start the plants early in the house; transplant at least twice. When the plants begin to bloom, or just before, sink a spade about the roots and within a foot of the stem.

The Funereal Month of March.

An observant metropolitan barber says that he can tell one's physical condition by the state of the hair!

The Bible tells us that with his hair gone Samson lost his strength. The Romans considered baldness a serious affliction and Julius Cæsar was never quite satisfied with himself because his poll was bare.

The face, however, is the open book and one can readily trace in its various expressions, lines, changes and complexion the state of the system.

The eye that is unusually bright and yet has a pallid brightness, the face upon whose cheeks nature paints a rose of singular beauty and flush, more marked in contrast with the alabaster appearance of the forehead and nose and lower part of the face, is one of those whom the skilled physician will tell you will some day dread the funereal month of March, because it is then that consumption reaps its richest harvest. Consumption they tell us is caused by this, that and the other thing, by microbes in the air, by micro-organisms in the blood, by deficient nutrition, by a thousand and one things, but whatever the cause, decay begins with a cough and the remedy that will effectually stop the cause of that cough cures the disease of the lungs.

That is all there is of it.

The cough is an evidence of a wasting. To stop it effectually, a remedy must be used that will search out the cause, remove that and then heal the lung and do away with the cough. This is the power, special to itself, possessed alone by Warner's Log Cabin Cough and Consumption remedy. This is no new-fangled notion of narcotics and poisons, but an old-fashioned preparation of balsams, roots and herbs, such as was used by our ancestors many years ago, the formula of which has been secured exclusively by the present manufacturers at great trouble and expense. It is not a mere "dryer. It is a system-searcher and upbuilder and a consumption expellant. Where others fail, it wins, because it gets at the constitutional cause and removes it from the system.

J. W. Hensaw of Greensboro, Pa., on Jan. 15, 1883, reported that "he had derived more real benefit for the length of time, from Warner's Log Cabin Cough and Consumption remedy than he had for years from the best state physicians."

If you have a cough, night sweats, "positive assurance in your own mind that you, oh—you, have no consumption," and yet lose flesh, appetite, courage, as your lungs waste away, you may know that soon the funereal month of March will claim you, unless promptly and faithfully you use the article named. If other remedies have failed try this one thoroughly. If others are offered, insist the more on trying this unequaled preparation.

Some persons are prone to consumption and they should never allow the disease to become seated.

"Y R U so C D in your dress?" asked the school-teacher of a tramp. "X Qs me, mum," replied he; "I drank 2 X S."—Pittsburgh Chronicle.

Half-Rate Excursions to Kansas and Nebraska.

The Missouri Pacific Railway will run excursions to all points in Kansas and Nebraska forty miles west and south of Missouri River Points, at one fare for the round trip, on the following dates: March 21st, April 4th and 25th, May 9th and 23d, and June 6th. The tickets are good for 30 days, 10 days allowed for going passage and five days for return trip, with stop over privileges in the territory to which these special rates are made.

Disastrous Failure!

We can mention no failure more disastrous than that of physical energy. It involves the partial suspension of the digestive and assimilative processes, and entails the retirement from business of the liver and kidneys. Only through the good offices of Hostetter's Stomach Bitters can the restoration of its former vigorous status be hoped for. When this aid has been secured, a resumption of activity in the stomach, liver and bowels may be relied upon. The Bitters conquers malarial and kidney troubles.

Dr. GREENE'S
NERVURA
NERVE TONIC,
The Great Spring Remedy
FOR THE POSITIVE CURE OF Nervousness, Weakness, Nervous Debility, Nervous and Physical Exhaustion, Severe Prostration, Sleeplessness, Despondency, Paralysis, Numbness, Trembling, Neuralgia, Rheumatism, Pains in Side and Back, Epileptic Fits, St. Vitus's Dance, Palpitation, Nervous and Sick Headache, Tired Feeling, Dyspepsia, Indigestion, Loss of Appetite, Constipation, Kidney and Liver Diseases, Etc.
The Best Spring Tonic.
DYSPEPSIA, Indigestion with Loss of Appetite, Biliousness and Constipation, are the diseases most common at this season of the year. These diseases are generally followed by nervousness, weakness and prostration. Sleepless and restless nights are followed by a tired waking. There is often no appetite for breakfast, there may be a bad taste in the mouth morning, and the person has frequently a dull or bad feeling head. After meals there is in many cases a full, bloated or uncomfortable feeling, with belching of wind. In some cases there is a pain in the side or under the shoulder blade; sometimes there is a pain at the pit of the stomach, while in others there is a faintness, sinking or "all gone" sensation. There is often biliousness and almost always constipation.
In such cases the food does little or no good to the system, does not nourish the body or build up the blood and vitality. The health and strength therefore gradually wane, the person becoming weak, tired and exhausted; after a time there is hardly power and energy to get through the day's work, and there is a cross, irritable or depressed feeling.
For Dyspepsia, Indigestion, Loss of Appetite, Nervousness, Weakness or Exhaustion, the best remedy in the world is that great discovery, Dr. Greene's Nervura Nerve Tonic.
It will certainly and positively cure the above symptoms, and restore strength and vitality, give steady and strong nerves, as well as renewed appetite, good digestion, regular bowels, natural sleep, sound health and perfect vigor. All druggists keep it at $1 per bottle. Do not be persuaded to try something else on which they make a larger profit or recommend as just as good. This is the only remedy absolutely certain in its effects. All pronounce it a wonderful discovery, indeed, and it is acknowledged everywhere the greatest medical discovery of the century. If your druggist does not have it, he will get it for you. Its discoverer, DR. GREENE, 35 West 14th Street, New York, the great specialist in curing nervous and chronic diseases, can be consulted free, personally or by letter. Use his great remedy and write him about your case.

Shocking Accident.

So read the headlines of many a newspaper column, and we peruse with palpitating interest the details of the catastrophe, and are deeply impressed by the sacrifice of human lives involved. Yet thousands of men and women are falling victims every year to that terrible disease, consumption (scrofula of the lungs), and they and their friends are satisfied to believe the malady incurable. Now, there could be no greater mistake. No earthly power, of course, can restore a lung that is entirely wasted, but Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery will rapidly and surely arrest the ravages of consumption, if taken in time. Do not, therefore, despair, until you have tried this wonderful remedy.

A WINDING stare—watching your best girl as you hold her skein of floss.

The Economite Society.

Economy is the quaintest village in the United States. It is situated on the Fort Wayne Railroad, eighteen miles below Pittsburg, yet it is as unlike an American town as if it belonged to another part of the globe. Neither the bustle of the near by city nor the railroad and steamboat lines ever penetrate the heart of the sleepy town. It is the home of the Economites, a society founded by George Rapp in Germany many, many years ago. What all their beliefs were is more than any outsider can ever tell. Their chief aim was to live as the earliest Christians did, as portrayed in the writings of the apostles. Driven from Germany by religious persecutions, they emigrated to America in 1805 and settled in Pennsylvania.

They bought land and built a village which they called Harmony. They dubbed themselves Harmonites, and gave what earthly goods they possessed to their founder and leader, George Rapp, who was their father, banker, adviser and preacher.

George Rapp decided that it would be more in conformity with the teachings of the disciples to live a life of celibacy. Several of the members who had wives and sweethearts rebelled against this. Those who were true to Rapp moved with him to Indiana, where another Harmony was founded. Disease attacked the new village and reduced the number of its inhabitants so greatly that the remaining ones fled back to Pennsylvania. In 1822 they bought 2,500 acres of land in a most beautiful valley near Pittsburg. Here they settled and here those of them who are still alive, live to-day. The misfortunes that befell them in the two Harmony settlements caused them to change the name. They called their new home Economy and themselves Economites. The members who deserted the Harmonites either died out or became as other citizens of the globe. Many of their descendants are well-known people in and around Allegheny City. About one thousand members first settled in Economy, but as their number was never increased by birth or by adoption, and as death occasionally invaded their homes, there remain at the present time not more than eighteen members, the youngest of whom is sixty-two years old. When they first took vows of celibacy they belived that the world was nearing its end, and so they lived simple lives, preparing for the mysterious hereafter. George Rapp, just before he died, told the others the world would surely end before the last member died. They believe it.

On entering the village one sees plain houses, wide, well-kept streets, lined on either side with large shade trees and chickens—nothing else.

The houses are all alike. They are all built with the gable end towards the street, and cannot be entered except through the yards.

Everything in Economy is run by rule and regulation much as at boarding school. At 5 o'clock in the morning the bell on the one church rings, and every one in the village rises. At 6 o'clock every dweller sits down to breakfast, and what is eaten in one house is eaten in all. There is a day for "milk soup" and one for "wine soup" and for every other dish peculiar to the place. The bell rings again at 7 o'clock for all to go to work; at 9 it brings them back to lunch, at 12 to dinner, at 3 to lunch again, at 6 to supper, and at 9 it rings for every one to put out his light and go to bed. No member ever rebels or disobeys.

There is a wine cellar in Economy famous for its old liquors, but it is never sold except to invalids. None of the Economites drink water, and their employes are given wine and cider.

The only paper published in Economy is a novel one on wheels. It is the side of the milk wagon which carries to each dweller, as well as the milk, the work to be done. "The apples will be gathered to-morrow," "The cherries will be gathered to-morrow," or "Such a field will be reaped," is inscribed on the wagon's side, so that when all are supplied with their daily portion of milk they know what labor awaits them.

No family names are used among the members. "Jacob" and "Anna" and "Dorothy" are sufficient. If there are two of a name, they distinguish them by the locality where they live. Thus, there are a "Dorothy near the mill" and a "Dorothy near the orchard."

On Sunday no excuse is accepted for absence from church. Is is a quaint little chapel painted blue and white, and in keeping with the people who gather in it to worship according to their belief.

Miss Gertrude Rapp, the granddaughter of the founder, although at least eighty years old, still plays the organ and leads the singing twice every Sunday. She is yet a petty woman, rather petite, has large blue eyes and the whitest hair, which, tucked under her quaint little blue Normandy cap, makes her a perfect picture of ye olden days. She occupies the Rapp House—the White House of Economy. It contains many costly, beautiful and curious relics.

When an Economite dies he is wrapped in a winding-sheet and buried in the white graveyard near the orchard. No tombstone ever marks his resting-place. In the centre of the orchard is a mound where the Indians buried their fallen after a battle with the French.

The Economy Hotel has many visitors. One large room is always reserved for tramps. They are always treated just as the citizens. They are kept over night, and after being given some money in the morning, are started on their way. No one ever leaves Economy hungry.

People often wonder what will become of their wealth, for they are very wealthy. Everything they engage in prospers, and it has become a saying that an Economite is always wealthy.

The world does not seem nearer its end than it did when George Rapp founded his quaint society, yet his followers are firm in their faith that their last member will see its end. It will not be many years until his disciples will all have followed his footsteps through death's grim portals, as they did through life, and then what will become of Economy and its millions?

Experiments in Mesmerism.

A distinguished professor, speaking of his experiments in mesmerism in the columns of a scientific paper, says: "In this way a great variety of suggestions can be produced, not only in the brain properly so-called, but in all the special senses. Presenting to a somnambulist a leaf of paper perfectly white, I say to him, "Here is a photograph of me." He immediately sees my portrait on that paper—sees it so plainly, so truly, that if I shuffle that particular leaf with any number of leaves exactly like it, he will readily recognize and pick out the one upon which his brain shall, in accordance with my assertion, have impressed my photographic image. So, too, with regard to hearing or to taste. We may cause the somnambulist to hear a concert of harmonious sounds where absolute silence reigns; we can make him drink the bitterest liquids, which he shall deem to be delightful beverage. The sensibility, both general and special, is also lulled to sleep in somnambulists, at least in those that keep the eye closed; but when by definite excitation or suggestion the operator has summoned that sensibility to quit the apparent apathy in which it is sunk, the awakening is comparable to an explosion. The subject's accuteness of sight and of hearing is extraordinary; he will see and hear sights and sounds that he could hardly distinguish in the waking state owing to their distance. This supersensibility has given occasion to the belief in the power of somnambulists to see objects at enormous distances, or through opaque bodies, and the like. The truth is that in the somnambulist every sense is exalted, and the same holds good as to his muscular strength. We have spoken of the strong hold the magnetizer has on the subject. Well, let the subject be a woman possessing as little physical strength as may be. Let several persons stand between her and the operator, and let him summon her to come to him. She will struggle with them if they oppose her movement, and in doing so will display a surprising degree of strength."

Some friends were talking of an old couple not long since, and describing their lives. They have toiled and denied themselves persistently for long years, and now that they have come close upon the evening of their days, the habit of a lifetime is fastened upon them, and though they count wealth by the hundreds of thousands of dollars, they still economize to such an extent as to almost deny themselves necessary comforts. The wife is a cripple from rheumatism, and the husband almost insane with fear of the poor house. They may have enjoyed their life of hard labor, devoid of all pleasure and recreation in a way; it may have been a pleasure to see the dollars accumulating and their wealth growing day by day, but it would seem as though an existence governed by the desire for riches alone, with no other object to attain and no relief or comfort given to unfortunate fellow beings might be placed in the category of misspent years and looked back upon with regret when the wealth is gained and the blessings of health and happiness gone forever. Economy to a certain extent often becomes a necessity, either from reverses in fortune or where it is needful to make a small income cover a multitude of wants. In such cases it is always better to make a virtue out of necessity and the brave man and woman who can deny themselves cheerfully are sure to find some comfort in life and often a few spare dollars to buy some luxury in which the soul delights. To economize when the purse is light is sure in the end to open the road to wealth, but to allow the hoarding of money to be the chief end and aim of existence is to find when the goal is reached that the carefully garnered riches cannot buy back the two greatest blessings of life—health and capacity for enjoyment.

Gems for Thought.

When a man wants to find fault he will do so if he has to spend all his time looking for it.

He who thinks he cannot win is quite sure to be right about it, for he has already lost.

There never was any heart truly great and generous that was not also tender and compassionate.

No man ever got rid of a lie by telling it; it is sure to come home sooner or later to hobnob with its author.

He whose only claim to the title "gentleman" is in his clothes must necessarily be careful as to what he wears.

Reason and kindness are the great promoters of that harmony and hilarity which generate friendship and affections.

There are nettles everywhere, but smooth, green grasses are more common still. The blue of heaven is larger than the cloud.

Nothing but the right can ever be expedient, since that can never be true expediency which would sacrifice a greater good to a less.

The aspirations of the race for further and higher developments nerve the arm which strikes down the barriers of an ignorant past.

More is felt than perceived, and more is perceived, than can be interpreted, and love climbs higher with its lambent flames than art can pile the fagots.

Folly consists in the drawing of false conclusions from just principles, by which it is distinguished from madness, which draws just conclusions from false principles.

There is no longer any question about the removal of Libby prison to Chicago. The final transaction in the deal has been completed, and the building is now the property of a Chicago syndicate whose purpose is to transplant it in that city by the 1st of June. The parties interested declare that it will not be converted into a chamber of horrors, but that it will be made an interesting place of resort, alike unobjectionable to Northern and Southern people. To show the friendly feeling of the leading citizens of Richmond toward this project it is announced that a number of them have signified their willingness to come to Chicago and deliver addresses at the opening ceremonies.

Peter Anderson, of Terre Haute, is a tremendous eater. He says that once in Chicago he went into a restaurant and bargained with the proprietor for all he wanted to eat for fifty cents. After he had eaten enough for half a dozen men and called for more, the proprietor offered to refund the fifty cents and pay him $1 if he'd quit eating. He quit. But it is not as an eater that Peter shines most. He claims to be the world champion water drinker. He can easily drink half a gallon in fifty seconds, and he has drunk five gallons in five hours, and thirty gallons in a day. This beats the record of an ordinary horse.

EIGHT PAGES.

THE rapid advance made by The Morning Herald during the past year, has been a marvel to all familiar with the subject. Not only has the volume of advertising been immensely large, but the increase in circulation is without a precedent in the history of Baltimore journalism. The cause of this is apparent. The Morning Herald was a better paper in 1887 than in the preceding year. It will be a better paper in 1888 than in 1887. It will continue to be the cheapest of dailies—one cent being the price. It publishes all the Associated Press News. It has a complete corps of correspondents throughout Maryland, Virginia, West Virginia, Southern Pennsylvania and other states, thus being able to promptly furnish the news for a widely extended region. Its LOCAL NEWS is preeminently the fullest and most accurate of any Baltimore daily. Its Washington Correspondence is bright, and covers the vast field of National Politics which center at the National Capital. It proposes to publish the most exhaustive and comprehensive reports of legislative doings at Annapolis. It is absolutely independent in politics. Its utterances upon public topics are impartial and fearless. It is cheap, able, bright. These are the reasons for the constantly increasing popularity of The Morning Herald.

THERE is no Sunday paper in any city of the Union, the pages of which are more replete with news, with bright contributions, with able articles especially prepared by writers of national distinction, and with letters on engrossing topics from the leading literateurs of the day. The Sunday Herald is acknowledged to be the gem of Baltimore journalism. Its special cable reports are more complete than those of any paper south of New York. It is the only Baltimore paper that publishes a regular letter from Richmond, the only one that publishes full reports of Society events throughout Maryland and Virginia. Its sporting news is noticeably superior to that of all rivals, and it excels in all the elements that go to make up an attractive, able and readable Sunday journal.

THE Weekly Herald is indisputably the cheapest weekly published in the United States. It consists of eight pages almost entirely devoted to reading matter. Each issue contains a whole page of Maryland news, a full synopsis of the debates in Congress, the laws passed, Senate and House proceedings, and the cream of the news from the National Capital. It will, as usual, publish each week the Talmage sermon, together with a long list of contributions from leading writers. Its market reports are unexcelled for completeness and reliability. Its literary department is bright: It is the paper for the home and the shop, the farmer, the merchant, the lawyer, the artisan, and for all who want the best paper for the price ever published.

☞ At great expense, a complete ART DEPARTMENT has been added to the equipments of the HERALD PUBLISHING COMPANY, and, beginning the fourth week in January, the pages of each edition of the paper will be replete with illustrated articles and sketches. The illustration of the important news of the day has grown to be a necessity which has been promptly recognized by The Morning Herald without regard to outlay. ☜

VALUABLE STOCK FARM FOR SALE.

I am authorized to sell the valuable stock farm, commonly known as the "Willink Farm," situated about four miles from Oakland, and containing 465 acres. About 200 acres are cleared and under a good state of cultivation. The improvements consist of

LARGE DWELLING HOUSE,

Tenant House, Barn and other out-buildings, and a young orchard.

There is also a five-foot vein of excellent coal on the tract. The farm will be sold for $10,000 dollars, in easy payments.

The improvements cost more than the price asked. This is considered to be one of the best stock farms in the county.

CONSTIPATION

IS called the "Father of Diseases," because there is no medium through which disease so often attacks the system as by the absorption of poisonous gases in the retention of decayed and effete matter in the stomach and bowels. It is caused by a Torpid Liver, not enough bile being excreted from the blood to produce Nature's own cathartic, and is generally accompanied with such results as

Loss of Appetite,
Sick Headache,
Bad Breath, etc.

The treatment of Constipation does not consist merely in unloading the bowels. The medicine must not only act as a purgative, but be a tonic as well, and not produce after its use greater costiveness. To secure a regular habit of body without changing the diet or disorganizing the system

"My attention, after suffering with Constipation for two or three years, was called to Simmons Liver Regulator, and, having tried almost everything else, concluded to try it. I first took a wineglassful and afterwards reduced the dose to a teaspoonful, as per directions, after each meal. I found that it had done me so much good that I continued it until I took two bottles. Since then I have not experienced any difficulty. I keep it in my house and would not be without it, but have no use for it, it having cured me."—GEO. W. SIMS, Ass't Clerk Superior Court, Bibb Co., Ga.

THE FACTORY FOREMAN.

It was just such an American village as you see in pictures. A background of superb bold mountain, all clothed in blue green cedars, with a torrent thundering down a deep gorge and falling in billows of foam; a river reflecting the azure of the sky and a knot of houses, with a church spire at one end and a thicket of factory chimneys at the other, whose black smoke wrote ever-changing hieroglyphics against the brilliancy of the sky. This was Dappievale. And it the rosy sunset of this blossoming June day the girls were all pouring out of the broad doorway, while Gerald Blake, the foreman, sat behind his desk, a pen behind his ear and his small, beady black eyes drawn back, as it were, in the shelter of a precipice of shaggy eyebrow.

Only one the girls stopped and received their pay for one week's work, for this was Saturday night. One by one they filed out, with fretful, disontented faces until the last one passed in front of the high-railed desk.

She ws slight and tall, with large, velvety blue eyes, a compexion as delicately grained and transparent as rose-colord wax, and there was something in the way the blue ribbon at her throat was tied and the manner in which the simple details of her dress were arranged that bespoke her o foreign birth.

"Well, Mlle, Annette," said Mr. Blake, "and how do you like factory life?"

"It is not disagreeable," she answered, as she extended her hand for the money the foreman was counting out.

"You have given me but $4," it was to be $8 by the contract."

Mr. Blake shrugged his shoulders disagreeably.

"Hump! he grunted, "you ain't much accustomed to our way of doing things, are you, mademoiselle? Eight—of course; but we deduct two for a fee——"

"A fee, for what!" Annette demanded, with flushed cheeks and flashing eyes.

"For getting you the situation, mademoiselle, to be sure," said Mr. Blake, in a superior sort of way. "Such places don't grow on every tree. And folks naturally expect to pay something for the privilege."

"I did not!" flashed out Annette Duvelle.

"Oh—well—all right. Because, you know, you ain't obliged to stay unless you choose."

"Do you mean," hesitated Annette, "that if I do not pay this money ——"

"You can't expect to stay in the works," said Mr. Blake, hitching up his collar.

"But the other two dollars?"

"Oh," said Mr. Blake, "that's a per centage the girls all pay."

"But what is it for?"

"Mr. Blake laughed.

"Well, it helps pay my salary. Of course, you know, the girls all expect to pay something every week for keeping their situations in a place where there's so many anxious to get in."

"And Mr. Elderslie?"

"Oh, Mr. Elderslie," repeated Mr. Blake, "He hasn't much to do with it. I am master at the Dappievale Calico Works."

"Mr. Elderslie owns it, I believe?"

"Well, yes he owns it. But I manage everything. Mr. Elderslie reposes the utmost confidence in my capacity, ability, and—and—responsibility. And now if you've any more questions to ask —"

"I have none," said Annette, wistfully. "But—I need this money myself. I cannot afford, any more than the others among these poor laboring girls, to pay it to your greed —"

"Eh?" ejaculated Mr. Blake, jumping from his seat as if some insect had stung him,

"And I will not pay it," concluded Annette.

"Very well—very well. Just as you like, mademoiselle," cried the foreman, turning red in the face. "Only if you won't confirm to the rules of the Dappievale Works—"

"Are these the rules?" scornfully demanded Annette.

"Pray consider your name crossed off the books," went on Mr. Blake.

And he slammed down the cover of his desk as if it were a patent guillotine and poor Annette Duvelle's neck were under it.

Two or three of the factory girls who had hovored around the open door to hear the discussion looked with awe-stricken faces at Annette, as she came out with $4 which she had received from the cashier in her hand.

"You've lost your place, ma'amselle," whispered Jenny Purton, a pale, dark-eyed little thing who supported a crippled mother and two little sisters out of her mulcted earnings.

"It matters not," said Annette. "He is a rogue, and rogues sometimes outgeneral themselves."

"And Annette Duvelle went back to the little red brick cottage, all thatched with the growth of woodbine, where she lodged with the wife of the man who tended the engines in the Dappleville Works.

"Does he cheat you, too, of your money?" she asked, when Simon Pettengill came home, smoke-stained and grimy, to his supper.

"One-sixth I have to pay him," said Simon, with an involuntary groan, as he looked at the five little ones around his board. "Yes, miss, he's a villian, but the world is full of such. Mr. Elderslie never comes here, or maybe things would be a bit different. Mr. Elderslie lives abroad; in Paris, they say."

"He is in this country now, said Annette. "I intend to write to him."

"'Twon't do no good, Miss."

"Yes, it will," said Annette quietly.

* * * * * *

The petals of the June roses had fallen, a pink carpet all along the edge of the woods, and the Dappleville Works wore their holiday guise even down to Simon Pettingill's newly brightened steam engine, for Mr. Elderslie and his bride were to visit the works on their wedding tour.

"It's a pity Ma'amselle Annette went away so soon," said Simon to his assistant, "cause they say the master's kind hearted in the main, and she might have spoken up for herself."

Mr. Gerald Blake, in his best broadcloth suit, and mustache newly dyed, stood smiling in the broad doorway as the carriage drove up to the entrance, and Mr. Elderslie, a handsome, blonde-browed man, sprang out and assisted a young lady, in a dove-colored traveling suit, to alight.

"Blake, how are you?" he said with the carelessness of conscious superiority. "Annette, my love, this is Blake, my foreman."

"Mlle. Annette!"

And Mr. Gerald Balke found himself cringing before the slight French girl whom he had turned from the factory door a month before.

"I must beg to look at the books, Blake," said Elderslie, authoritatively. My wife tells me some strange stories about the way things are managed here. It became so notorious that the rumors reached her even at Blythesdale Springs, and she chose to come and see for herself. Annette, my darling, the best wedding gift we can make to these poor working girls is a new foreman. Blake, you may consider yourself dismissed."

"But, sir—"

"Not another word," cried Mr. Elderslie, with lowering brow, and Mr. Gerald Blake crept away, with an uncomfortable consciousness of Annette's scornful blue eyes following him.

And a new reign began for poor Jenny Purton and the other working girls, as well as for Simon Pettengill.

"John," said the butter dealer, "always put in a couple of sheets of paper when you weigh. Customers will think you neat and cleanly in your business. They don't like to have their butter slopped onto a scale that, for all they know, has never been washed. And besides, there's a good profit in buying paper at half a cent a pound and selling it for thirty-five or forty."—Boston Transcript.

THE CHAMPION.

Exultant, proud,
The hero bowed
To the eager, worshiping, countless crowd;

Then stood upright,
Like a victor knight,
A figure of virile grace and might.

From the Temple of Fame
The priestess came
To write on her tablet the hero's name.

And now behold
His name enrolled
On the virgin tablet in script of gold.

Then she asked: "O son,
What hast thou done
For the meed of glory thou hast won?

"From sword and brand,
From traitor's hand
That sought to ruin thy father-land—

"'Twas thine to save?
Thine edict gave Freedom and manhood to the slave?"

The hero heard;
But never a word
Of his the list'ning silence stirred.

"An orator, then,"
She asked again,
"Thou swayest at will thy fellow-men?

"Doth a poet's soul
Thy name enroll,
And crown thy head with its aureole?

"Or dost thou bless,
By Heaven's grace,
With holy counsels a fallen race?"

His dull head hung
And his surly tongue
At the priestess' feet this answer flung:

"That's not my 'lay;'
Ta'n't in my way
To gabble, or scribble, or preach and pray."

Ill pleased, she viewed
The multitude
Adoring, and her quest renewed:

"Then hath thy hand
Wrought out some grand Achievement by thy genius planned?"

His fierce eye shone
As it looked upon
His hand, a hammer of bone and brawn.

She understood:
"'Tis a hand imbrued
In the blood of a slaughtered multitude?

"Some warrior great,
Thou rulest fate
Of pope and emperor, church and state?

"Well, men must die!"
And her sorrowful eye
Gazed on his brute-like majesty.

No flush of shame
With his answer came:
"No, priestess; that is not my game;

"I say with pride,
These fists deiled
The world—at a thousand pounds a side!"

Contemptuous burned
Her eyes, she spurned
Her tablet from her, then home returned.

And there she stood,
From her altitude
Scorning the man and multitude.

But a big, broad zone
With jewels shone
Round his huge bulk of brawn and bone.

THE NEW NEIGHBORS.

Unpleasant Anticipations That Were Not Realized.

"Well, now, Jed, what do you think old Mr. Sims has done? He has rented the little cottage next us. Manday Green told me so this morning, and that ain't the worst of it, either. It is let to a man with a wife and boy, and the boy is one of them smart ones. They can't abide with him in the city, and so they will bring him here to worry the life out of honest and peaceable folks."

"Is that their sole object in coming here, mother?"

"Manday says she is sure that is it, for she heard the man tell Sims that he must get his boy into the country, and what else can you make of it? Sims would rather die than sell you that property, Jed. Now he rents it to a man that owns a harum-scarum boy that will be our especial torment. It does seem too bad," and the old lady set down her cup, and looked as she probably felt, completely put out.

"Don't worry over it, mother; perhaps the mother of the boy may compensate for all his shortcomings, in being neighborly, and company for you. I am sure you need something of that sort. Mr. Sims' family being the only one near, and they choose to feel so bitter toward us, that seems to me a fine thing to have the cottage out here occupied."

"Well, here they'll be within a stone's throw of us, whether we will or wish it. I'm glad its no widow to angle after my boy."

The boy colored slightly and laughed heartily.

"There now, you have found a crumb of comfort, mother. No one wants to angle after your great, awkward boy. I am sorry Mr. Sims feels so towards us. I would like to buy the little place, and add it to mine, as it joins us so nicely. It would save me the building of a new house, for this old one has served others well, and I can not expect it to do duty for us much longer. This dear old home of my grandfather, I feel like clinging to its walls, humble as they may seem to others."

"Yes, the home of Amos Johnson is good enough for us, Jed, or them that come after us."

"Did Manday say Mr. Sims had rented the cottage?"

"Yes, and the family will be here this week."

"Well, strange to say, I know more of the matter than Manday. The family have purchased, not rented. Their name is Orcutt."

"Bought it. O dear! Now there is no hope of their making a short stay," sighed the old lady.

"I don't know of only one loop hole, mother, and that is with Mr. Sims joining them on one side, and Manday Green prying around and making herself generally obnoxious on the other, they may get disgusted, and leave us to rural solitude again. But now, really, mother, I enjoy the prospect of having near neighbors, even if Manday has discovered an imaginary bad boy among them."

"There you go at Manday again, Jed. I do wish you felt more like a Christian should towards her. There is not another woman around here that comes in so often to see how I am gettin' on. Any other woman of her age would be settin' their cap for you, but that is not her way at all. She often remarks that herself."

Bachelor Jed smiled grimly, and rising from the dinner table, strolled out into the yard, picked up his broad straw hat he had flung on the grass before going to dinner, and whistling cheerily, took his way to the barn, while Mrs. Johnson looked after her handsome son with a fond pride.

It was a well known fact in the neighborhood, of which the Johnsons formed a good and prominent part, that the mother of Jed watched with a jealous eye all the unmarried ladies, with the exception of Manday Green; and as the aforesaid Manday had so often declared to her that she thought it would be so cruel in any one to supplant Mrs. Johnson in the affections of her son, that good lady believed Manday free from any designs on her Jed.

"Well, mother," said Jed a few days after the arrival of the new neighbors, "I saw Manday sailing into the house over the way, and I suppose a call has been made."

"Yes, she dropped in here a few miuutes and told me about it. I do think Manday is the most neighborly of any of us. She is the first one to go in there, and it was not from curiosity either, for she said so."

"It was very good of her, of course," drily remarked Jed.

"Manday says Mrs Orcutt is a dreadful pretty little woman, and as pleasant and common like as need be. She says she don't look one bit worried over the idea of having a bad boy to manage. She didn't see the boy; his mother said he was not well, and had kept his room the most of the time. Mr. Orcutt will not be here often, for his business keeps him in the city. That boy will just run wild around here with his capers, you may depend on it, for Manday says Mrs. Orcutt looks too mild to hold him in."

"If the boy is sick I can not see any danger of our being overwhelmed with his pranks. Do go over and see them, mother; don't let her feel as if she was all alone with a sick boy and we so near."

"That I will. I don't want to feel as if they was intruders even if the boy is here. Strange I should feel so put out about one boy, for I well remember when you was a lad, and I dare say this youngster's mother loves him as well as I loved mine, but then you was an extra good boy, Jed."

"Why did you allow me to grow up such a bashful booby then, mother?"

"Now do jest hear. Who ever would think of calling you such a name as that, pray tell? I know you have always kept shy of the girls around here, and I am right glad of that," and Mrs. Johnson spoke from the depths of her heart then.

None of the rustic beauties in that quiet farming district had succeeded in attracting the attention of Jed Johnson. At the death of his father he had come home from a distant college and taken charge of the farm. As he found his company among his books and with his mother, he was looked upon as a bashful bachelor, a title that would not disturb him any if he knew it.

"Jed," said Mrs. Johnson, "I called on Mrs. Orcutt to-day, and she is one of the prettiest little women I have seen for many a day. She seems dretful taken up with her new home and says if Johnnie only improves, she will be perfectly contented. I don't know which she meant, his health or conduct. I dare say it's both. She thinks he will be out in a few days. I wonder if I called her name right? She opened them big blue eyes of hers when I called her Mrs. Orcutt, so wide and inquiring like that I thought may be I was wrong about her name."

"It might be, mother, for I noticed she looked surprised when I used her name in speaking to her to-day. A board was loose on the fence back of the garden, and I saw her trying to nail it on, so I walked over and fastened it for her. It is my opinion we have found some very nice neighbors."

In a few days Johnnie Orcutt was out, and, as nothing terrible seemed to develop in the neighborhood on account of it, Mrs. Johnson quite lost her fear of being terrorized by a bad boy.

"Just you wait until he is well, before you think him so tame," was the quieting (?) remark of Manday.

Things seemed progressing finely with Mrs. Johnson and her pretty neighbor, who dropped in often and chatted so pleasantly, that Miss Manday grew quite jealous and told the old lady she was quite carried away by a pretty face.

"Dear, no, Manday, it's not her face as I knows on, but it's her bright cheery ways that takes my heart."

"O, well," with a toss of the head, "I'm no hand to lay aside old friends for new, as you must know. How do you know she ain't fishing for Jed?"

"Mercy on us, Manday! how you do talk of Mrs. Orcutt."

"Hain't you ever heard of married women flirting? I have, if you hain't."

"I'll never believe any such thing of her, anyway; beside she never comes here when Jed is about home, and they have not got one bit acquainted yet."

"Well, why don't her husband come home oftener, I'd like to know."

"I am sure I don't know, Manday; for some good reason, I dare say."

"Well, I'd ask her, I would, but it's no affair of mine. Good afternoon, Mrs. Johnson."

The following afternoon Mrs. Johnson took her knitting and went over to sit with her little friend the intervening hour before supper getting. She found her busy mending a coat for Mr. Orcutt.

"I'm so glad to have you come in, Mrs. Johnson. It seemed so quiet here, for Johnnie is off to the woods this afternoon. I could not go with him for I had nearly forgotten this coat needed mending, and Edward is coming to-morrow. Johnnie can scarcely wait, he is so anxious to see his papa."

"I found it lonely to sit down without some one to talk to. You are spoiling me about being alone. I am getting childish, I am afraid, Mrs. Orcutt."

"Call me Jenny, will you please? I would so much prefer it. I always allow Johnnie to call me that."

"I see he does, but it don't seem to me the right thing for him, to be calling you Jenny."

"He always has since he could talk at all. Then too," and she blushing slightly, and, laughing, said: "it does not make me seem so old to have Johnnie call me Jenny; I don't mind telling you, Mrs. Johnson, I don't like to appear older than I really am."

"None of us do for that matter. How cozy you look here. Young fingers have such a knack for fixing up things."

And the old lady's eyes traversed the room with it's pretty adorning, and then rested on the fair form of her young friend, dressed with a good bit of taste, and then at the sweet face bending over her mending.

"Do you know, Jenny, I have thought a great many times since you came here how much I have missed in not having a daughter. Not that I wish Jed had been a girl, oh, no; I can't do without Jed, bless his dear, brave heart; but if he had a sister of your age, what a comfort and blessing she would be to me now. I have been so blessed that sickness is almost a stranger to me. I get to thinking nowadays over it, and I think a woman with no kin of her own sex is not very well prepared for sickness."

"None of us feel prepared for that, I think, let our surroundings be what they will," said Jenny; "but please don't go home so soon, Mrs. Johnson."

"O, yes, I must, for I find I am not swift in doin' any more, and I somehow feel tired to-day. I always like Jed to find his supper waiting for him when he comes in at night; but come over dear, and chirk up my old heart often."

"That I will, but don't look for me to-morrow, for Edward is coming, you know."

Jenny walked down to the gate with the old lady, picked a bouquet of sweet peas and pinned on the snow-white 'kerchief Mrs. Johnson wore, and bidding her good afternoon, went singing back to the house, while the old lady went slowly back to her home, which, somehow, seemed quite cheerless and lonely to her this afternoon.

The following morning Jenny Orcutt answered a knock at her door. Jed Johnson stood there with a troubled look on his face, and she saw beneath the brown mustache the tremulous workings of his mouth.

"Will you come over and see mother, please? I fear she is very sick. I knew nothing of it until this morning. She seemed well last evening. If you will kindly stay with her, I will go now for a doctor."

"O, yes, I will go now. Indeed, I am sorry to know she is sick; she seemed well in the afternoon, for she sat with me until tea-time."

In a few minutes Jenny was beside her friend, and Jed was flying on the road to the village. Mrs. Johnson had been seized with an acute rheumatic attack and lay moaning in great distress.

"It is so good of you to come to me, dear," she said. "Jed is almost beside himself, for he never saw me sick before."

"At the rate he went off he will soon be here and bring relief to you, I hope," said Jenny. "I was greatly surprised to hear you were sick, for you were in usual health yesterday, were you not?"

"Yes; only I felt tired and childish," moaned the sufferer.

That day was but the beginning of—that Jenny Orcutt sat at the bedside of Mrs. Johnson, or busied herself about the room to make it cheerful for the invalid, and when she became convalescent, prepared her tempting dishes with her own pretty useful hands.

Mrs. Johnson declared that a glimpse of her face even did her a world of good.

Manday Green shook her head in a very "you'll-see-how-it-will-turn-out" sort of a way, and remarked to the woman in the kitchen while Jed stood conveniently near, that if she got sick she did not want a boy rushing in and out of the house all hours, and she "thought a woman that cared for her husband would keep her own hose and not her neighbor's."

A very amused look came over the handsome face of Jed, and he very pleasantly said:

"A woman that has no husband can do as she pleases, eh, Manday?"

"Yes, thank Heaven," and the little old maid perked her head on one side and looked very independent.

"And very fortunately they are at liberty to do for others," said Jed, in a way that puzzled Manday, and the look on his face perplexed her more. "I don' know what we would have done the pat few weeks without Jenny. Not that we would have wanted for neighbors, Manda, but mother and the doctor says she is one of the best of nurses, and it was very kind in Mr. Orcutt to insist upon her staying with us, and he was here, too, the most of the time during his visit, for of course he could not get along at home without his little housekeeper."

"Dear, me! some folks seen just bewitched over a new face," was the parting shot of Miss Manday, and she sailed out of the house and through the gate at her swiftest pace.

Alas, for poor Manday! Johnnie Orcutt was mounted on his bicycle and coming with all the speed he could muster; the curve in the road hid Manday until he was very near, and she was so full of jealous rage that she did not notice the shrill little signal behind her. In an instant down went the prim spinster and over her head landed Johnnie, while the green parasol left the roadside path and landed into the highway.

"O, you horrid little wretch," shrieked the female, as soon as she could get her breath.

Johnnie sprang after the parasol, captured it and handed it to her, saying:

"Indeed, I am very sorry, Miss Green. If you had only looked back when I gave the signal that I was coming, I think you could have stepped aside, but I could not stop the bicycle quick enough; I tried to do so, indeed I did, truly."

"What right have you to go around here with such a machine as that, I want to know? One of Satan's own inventions, I'll warrant, and none but his own imps would want to be hilarating around on it, either. The signal that you was a-coming was sounded months ago, and I knew, then, just how it would be. But what are you standing there grinning with all your might and main for?"

"You look so funny, Miss Manday; indeed you do. There is some dirt on your face, your bow on the front of your dress is, I think, a little to one side, and something seems to have come off the top of your head."

Miss Green made a quick grab for her false foretop lying in the dirt at her feet, clapped her hat on her head, and skurried off, too full of indignation to utter another word.

"Well, now," said Johnnie, "I don't know what Jenny will say to this. I'll have to tell her, anyway. I am sorry it happened, and she will believe me when I say so, too."

Mrs. Johnson was pleased to see Jed, bashful Jed, so much at his ease of late in the presence of Jenny. In fact, she noticed they often sat apart, and talked so very friendly.

"Jed," said she one day when she had become quite herself again, and Jenny had run over to see her a few minutes, "I think I had not better get well too fast, for I will lose my nurse, and I don't like to think of that."

"I have been talking of a plan to keep her here with us, and she is waiting to know if you object."

"No, I don't object to any of your plans, Jed, you know that very well. But what is this one?"

"I have heard you say you wished you had just such a daughter as Jenny. Now you can have her for your daughter, but I want her for my wife."

At this proposal the old lady's cap nearly flew off her head, and the only thing that prevented her bounding out of her chair, was her rheumatics.

"Good heavens!" she gasped out. "Jed Johnson, what of Mr. Orcutt?"

"He is quite willing to allow his sister to do as she pleases."

"His sister! and I supposed all this time you was his wife, Jenny."

"Dear Mrs. Johnson," and Jenny leaned over the chair, and placed her fresh young cheek close to the pale one of the old lady, "I was not aware of the mistake you had made concerning me, until Jed told me during your sickness. You do not think I wished to deceive you, do you? And can not I have a place in your heart along with Jed?"

Mrs. Johnson drew her down to her in a clasp and said:

"Bless you, Jenny, you have a place there now, and nothing could please me better than to see you Jed's wife. But, deary me, I always said I would never let any woman take Jed from me, and here I be, a-consenting to that very thing."

"I am sure I would not wish to take him from you. You see, you are to take Jed and I."

"Yes, that is it, after all. But, Jed, how in the world did you get over your bashfulness enough to——"

"To court Jenny, mother? You see you did all that yourself, and I am sure it was very kind of you. You have been courting her all summer."

"Well I'm glad I made it out, at all events," said Mrs. Johnson.—Yankee Blade.

JACKSON CITY'S FATE.

An Eastern Town Which Virtually Died Before It Was Born.

Just across the Potomac, near the western end of Long Bridge, a tract of land containing 90 acres, was recently sold for $18,000, which in President Jackson's time was fabulously valuable. A gentleman from New York, widely known as a popular inn-keeper of that day, offered $5,000 for a lot 75x150 feet, upon which he proposed to build the finest hotel then south of Philadelphia. But the owners of the land wanted $10,000, and that settled the business—no hotel was ever built. The land referred to—90 acres—was laid out during Jackson's administration and received the name of "Jackson City." It was owned by a company which issued $100,000 in bonds, and the corner stone was laid by President Jackson with military and civil pomp. But it never make a spurt—never had a population of over twelve souls, and in a few years the corner-stone was dug up and used for years by an old colored "aunty" as a mortar to beat her hominy in.

Not far from the proposed hotel was nature's cause for the origin of the craze to build a city which was to rival Washington—Curtis Spring—which was famed as a picnic and excursion resort. Curtis Spring was the capital's Saratoga, and the little steamer took down thousands of pleasure parties annually. During the late war most of this ground was occupied as forts for the defense of Washington. The locality is now occupied by several brick yards. The only remaining structure of that city "laid out on paper" in 1837, is an old dilapidated brick building, almost directly in front of which is a square post bearing these words: "Center of pike, 19,200 feet from junction." Nobody knows what the words mean nor why the post was placed there, obstructing as it does legitimate travel.

By the way, a little to the north of this is Mason's Island, or Analostan Island, as it is now called, which is separated from the Virginia shore by a small rivulet. This island is the birthplace of James M. Mason, who, with John Slidell, was sent by the Confederate Government to Europe, in 1861, to secure the recognition of the Confederacy by England and France. The ruins of the house in which he was born still remain upon the island.

And then Arlington is almost within a stone's throw of this island. Who has not heard of Arlington, the former home of Robert E. Lee, the chieftain of the Confederacy, and now the resting place—the silent home of more than 16,000 soldiers, who gave their lives for their country? But there is one fact connected with this spot not generally known. The iron flag-staff from which the stars and stripes fly to the breeze stands upon the exact spot once occupied by a charming little summer house erected by Washington for his own use, and frequently occupied by himself and wife during the "heated term" in town. And it was on this spot that the Marquis de La Fayette stood on his last visit to this city about sixty years ago, and pronounced the view from it the finest in the world.—Washington Letter.

POLITE ETIQUETTE.

Some Good Points for Those Desirous of Improving Their Manners.

To bow to a friend or an acquaintance is a simple enough matter, yet all the grades of liking, all the degrees of familiarity, can be expressed quite as surely as by the signature to a letter, and more subtly. If you know people intimately, your bow and smile express intimacy and cordiality; if you have a very slight acquaintance, the bow is less smiling and more formal. A bow no longer requires that inclination of the body which the Turveydrops of other days used to practice—a mere bend of the head is sufficient. No man should bow to a lady without completely lifting his hat from his head.

If he has a cigar in his mouth he will of course withdraw it. It is never good form to smoke while walking or driving with a lady, unless it were in an after-dinner stroll in some quiet country neighborhood. In town it should never be permitted, even if the lady were one's own sister and had no aversion to the odor of tobacco. These facts concerning her would not be known to the people one might meet, and the smoking would to them have all the appearance of a discourtesy.

When walking with a lady a man lifts his hat to all the people whom she recognizes and who bows to her, whether he himself knows them or not. In thoroughfares a man should keep at the left of the lady he is walking with, thus protecting her from the pressure of the crowd and leaving her right hand free to carrying her parasol and lifting her dress. It is an obsolete absurdity for a man to be dancing around a lady whom he escorts, changing the side on which he walks with every crossing of the street. In walking or driving in a park or in any place where you meet the same person again and again, it is not necessary to bow each time. A cordial salutation on the first is quite sufficient.

It is a lady's privilege to be the first to offer her hand. Where an introduction is merely for dancing, there should be no shaking hands—nor indeed it is usual to shake hands on being introduced at a reception; but a married lady should extend her hand, by way of cordial welcome, to her own guests, and especially to any stranger brought to her house and presented by a common friend.—Chicago Journal.

CAKE AND PICKLES.

Pernicious Habits of Eating Practiced by American Children.

"My Jennie has such a dainty appetite I don't know what to do with her! She just won't eat any thing but sweetmeats and the like!"

Thus exclaimed a foolish mother in my hearing the other day. Yes, lamentably foolish is she for allowing such a condition of things to exist. We are told by the matchless bard that desire grows upon what it is fed. The child desires dainties, and the mother oft gratifies that desire. Soon the mischief is done, for the dainty appetite is quickly formed. Apropos of this: A ruddy German girl of seven summers was adopted by childless people of means. The indulging process was early begun by them, for it was a pleasure to give the child all the goodies that she could well eat. Ere long a scorn for substantial food possessed her, and the mere thought of the plain but healthful fare of her German home excited great disgust. Dainties formed her daily living, but think you that her robust German parentage preserved her from paying outraged Mother Nature's penalty? No indeed! She fell a victim to consumption while yet in her teens. The poor abused digestive apparatus could not manufacture good blood; the great waste was not supplied, and "galloping consumption" claimed another victim.

While on the cars, en route to one of Minnesota's beautful lake resorts, I was attracted by an anxious mother and her unfortunate invalid daughter who occupied seats near mine.

The wan cheeks, the hollow eyes and the languid air all told their own sad story of disease and death. The weary one oft had access to the stimulating flask to sustain her to the journey's end. At length the mother and child partook of a morning meal. A large lunch hamper indicated a long journey. I did not observe the mother's choice of fare, but the delicate girl who had so aroused my sympathies made a hearty (?) meal of rich cake and pickles. Yes, she devoured three whole pickles and a piece of cake. Think of it, mothers—of supplying the enormous waste that was apparently going on with only cake and pickles! Could one drop of good blood emanate therefrom? Would disease have attacked the poor child had the mother prevented such unnatural appetite? She seemed a woman of culture and refinement—not always accompanied with common sense, it seems—and I would fain remind her that she could take her loved one to the most healthful clime of earth, but she would not keep her long if her diet consisted of cake and pickles. Indeed, in this instance I fear that nothing could avail, for the blood—which, you know, is the life—had already become impoverished.

See to it, mothers, that your children are not forming pernicious habits of eating what will perchance take them to early graves or render them dyspeptics for life.—Ladies' Home Journal.

FASHIONABLE SILKS.

Varieties Suited for Elegant Demi-Season Toilettes.

Silks are being very largely used for making up dressy toilettes to be worn at afternoon receptions and when paying formal visits. For the demi-season the entire dress will be of any of the repped silks. Bengaline, faille francaise, gros grain or moire, whether of a plain color, or shaded in two or three tones, or glace, or in stripes partly plain, partly twilled or watered, or else in the plain brocades of the last century, with small woven flowers, or the more modern designs with velvet vines, balls, or bars. As the season advances to summer, the simple taffetas of a generation ago will be revived, with their plain lustrous surface showing stripes, or else glace, or in large plaids of the gayest colors together, or a single color with white. The silk surahs are also to be worn again in plain colors, in crossbars, in stripes, and with blocks or balls strewn over them. Sometimes a striped silk will be combined with plain repped silk of the color in the stripe, white or Suede tints being most often alternated with the colored stripes. The plain silk will be used for the front and back of the skirt, while the stripes appear on the sides; the basque of the plain color will have bias side forms of stripes in front, or a girdle giving that effect, with a striped vest, revers and collar. This is prettily illustrated in myrtle green faille combined with green and Suede-colored striped faille. The skirt has four plaits down the front (two each side meeting in the middle) of plain green faille, while the back has three straight breadths of the same, with their sides faced with the striped silk turned over in jabot shells. Two striped breadths of silk form drapery on each side next the plain front; these are plaited in fine plaits at top to the belt, falling straight to the foot, and the side is then rounded up high on the tournure, and caught in a cluster of plaits next the plain green back breadths. The space left uncovered below the curved part in the sides of the skirt has two gathered breadths falling to the foot from under the curved part, and these are cut in sharp points at the edges and faced. This design may also be prettily carried out in moire and plain silk, using the moire in front and back, and the plain repped silk on the sides. Sometimes the lower part on the sides of the skirt is drawn on cords and slightly puffed at the top, with perhaps the standing ruffle of doubled silk. For summer taffetas and checked silks skirts made in this way will have pinked edges on the sides, or there may be a series of pinked flounces set there.—Harper's Bazar.

ARTIFICIAL LIMBS.

The Trade in Legs and Arms Better Than It Ever Was Before.

"Five years after the war was ended and all the maimed soldiers were supplied, there were some makers who thought the wooden leg and arm business was at an end," said an artificial limb maker. "But they were all wrong. There are more manufacturers, big and little, at present than at any time, and the annual sales are larger than ever before. Machinery is responsible for this. The railroads have cut off twice as many limbs as were destroyed by powder and ball from 1861 to 1865."

"Do the makers sell more legs than arms?"

"Yes, many more. An artificial arm is now constructed with a hand the fingers of which will hold a pen, or pick up light articles, such as a handkerchief, hat or a newspaper. A good many men when they lose an arm, tie the empty sleeve to their breasts. But an artificial leg supplies the lost one. A man can work and walk in it. He can follow any ordinary vocation about as well as ever."

"What improvements have been made of late years?"

"The principal one is the substitution of rubber for toes, fingers and ankle joints. This is a patent. The small makers build limbs entirely of wood. The material used is English poplar. Philadelphia is the market for it, and there it is bored and thoroughly seasoned by the jobbers. The price of legs is from $85 to $100, according to the location of the amputation. For arms it is $75 to $100. Legs weigh about five pounds on the average. Six pounds is a heavy weight. The lighter it is the better. It is a fact that many people walk upon artificial legs so well that you could not tell they were on a wooden pin. I know of one young man in town with a wooden leg who has taken a prize for waltzing. Five years is the average time an artificial limb can be worn before it must be replaced. The Government allows crippled soldiers $75 every five years to renew their arms and legs."

"How do maimed people take their infliction?"

"At first the man who loses his leg wishes it had been his life instead. The sudden change from health and strength into a cripple is a terrible thing. But after he gets an artificial limb on and finds how much more easily than he supposed he can get around, his feeling alters completely. Human nature is wonderfully adaptable and some of the jolliest people in the world are among the unfortunate victims of accidents.—Chicago Tribune.

FARM AND FIRESIDE.

—Bran, oats and oilmeal is the food for growing pigs up to the time pumpkins are ripe.—Rural Home.

—Every poultry-yard should have a peach tree planted therein, as the peach thrives well in poultry-yards and is protected from the borer by the hen.

—In removing crops from the soil we take away plant food. This is the chief cause of soil exhaustion. Lack of fertility is commonly due, in large part or entirely, to lack of plant food.

—Keep a spool of linen thread along with your knitting balls. A strand of it knit into mittens and the feet of the men's socks and the children's stockings insures them much longer wear.

—If a farmer has plenty of patience and is willing to give close attention to details in the care of stock he can make more money for food consumed from sheep than from any other stock.

—Nutmeg Sauce: Two tablespoons butter, one tablespoon flour and half a cup of sugar creamed together. Pour on a pint of boiling water and stir until it thickens, grate in half a nutmeg.

—Escalloped Onions: Take eight onions and cook in plenty of water with one tablespoonful of salt two hours; when tender, drain, put in a baking dish, cover with one pint of cream sauce, sprinkle with one cupful of grated bread crumbs and brown in the oven.

—Plant fruit trees, do it well, and give good after care and culture, and you and your family will ere long be abundantly rewarded with an article of diet which, when sound and ripe, can only be conducive to health and longevity.

—Breaded Potatoes: Boil potatoes in their skins until done, but not too soft. Peel them, cut them in thick slices, dip them in beaten egg and roll them in fine bread or zweiback crumbs. Fry the slices in hot butter or drippings until they are a golden brown and serve.

—In boiling meats take the fat from the top of the water and save for cooking or soap. In roasting meat pour the fat out of the pan or dip it out before it gets burned. It will be excellent for use in cooking. But if it stays till the meat is done it will be nearly sure to have a burned, unpleasant flavor.

—A substantial dish without meat is the following: Wash and peel two quarts of potatoes, peel and slice six ounces of onions, skin and bone two large herrings, season with salt and pepper, pour enough water on to cook, bake an hour and a half and serve hot. Any cold gravy, stock or dripping on hand will be better than the water.

—In summer swine graze and do well on clover, and, indeed, are perhaps as healthy and make as cheap and satisfactory growth on that food as on any other. There is no reason why clover should not enter into the winter rations of swine. Sweet clover hay could be cut up into short lengths and fed wet, along with meat and bran, without much trouble and with the best results.

—The liberal use of lime in a fine condition will greatly assist in reducing old sod land that may be plowed for corn. The lime should be divided into two lots, one-third applied before plowing the sod, and the remainder after the ground shall have been turned over, harrowing the surface after the land shall have been plowed. The rains will carry the lime down, and before the corn crop shall be matured the effects of the lime will be very marked.

IMPROVE THE HOG.

A Matter Which Deserves the Attention of Progressive Farmers.

If the margin between the price of corn and pork remains as great as it has been during the past year, the inference is that the demand for a better class of hogs will be greater than it has been for a number of years. There will be new herds built up, and arrangements made for breeding hogs on farms where they have been abandoned for years. Young farmers, casting about for the most profitable product of the farm, will not be long in deciding on this branch, as promising the greatest and quickest returns for the money and labor invested. Our observations force the belief upon us that farmers for a few years have not been as careful about adding new blood to their herds as they should have been, and the consequence is their hogs are not as good as they should be. With the combination of all breeds that is convenient to use, they find themselves possessed of a class of mongrel swine that are not profitable either for market or breeding.

Every step removed from some pure fountain head makes matters worse. But even with these things against the quality of hogs they bring a good profit, and should make the farmer feel able to invest in better stock. And taking all these things into consideration, we can but think the demand for pure bred stock will be better in the near future than for a number of years past. The demand during the past year has started the current that way, making an ambition among farmers to excel once more in the quality of the porker, a laudable desire that benefits the farmer and improves the quality of pork given to the consumer. Years ago it was the opinion among farmers that all that was required to raise good hogs was a fine thrifty sire, no regard being taken as to the breed, for, as I heard a man once say: "A hog is a hog, and that is enough." But this is not enough. As much attention should be given to the breeding of swine as of horses or cattle, and in the end they will be just as profitable.—Cor. Western Plowman

How Alligators Eat.

It is a Southern writer who compares an alligator's throat to an animated sewer. Every thing which lodges in the open mouth goes down. He is a lazy dog, and instead of hunting for something to eat he lets his victuals hunt for him. That is, he lies with his great mouth open, apparently dead, like the 'possum. Soon a beetle crawls into it, then a fly, then a gnat and a colony of mosquitoes. The alligator doesn't close his mouth yet, He is waiting for a whole drove of things. He does his eating by wholesale. A little later a lizard will cool himself under the shade of the upper jaw. Then a few frogs will hop up to catch the mosquitoes. Then more mosquitoes and gnats will alight on the frog. Finally a whole village of insects settle down for an afternoon picnic. Then all at once there is an earthquake. The big jaw falls; the alligator blinks one eye, gulps down the entire menagerie, and opens his great front door again for more visitors.—American Angler.

Attractiveness of Children.

A child's attractiveness is in his being a child. If he seems like a little old man, he is not so attractive as either a real old man or a real child would be. Yet there are parents who are afraid that their children will seem like children in what they say or do; and so they are afraid to let them be themselves in their saying or doing, in their writing a note, or in their expressing their thanks by word of mouth to one who has done them some special favor. The parent who has highest respect for his child's childhood, really helps that child to be at his best by permitting him to be his own self in all simplicity.—S. S. Times.

—London Truth sums up the record of Osman Digna, the famous Arab chief, as follows: Killed, six times; fatally wounded, three times; severely wounded, four times; troops totally dispersed, nine times; permanently discouraged, three times; escaped, once.

"If a woman is pretty,
To me 'tis no matter,
Be she blonde or brunette,
So she lets me look at her."

An unhealthy woman is rarely, if ever, beautiful. The peculiar diseases to which so many of the sex are subject, are prolific causes of pale, sallow faces, blotched with unsightly pimples, dull lusterless eyes and emaciated forms. Women so afflicted, can be permanently cured by using Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription; and with the restoration of health comes that beauty which, combined with good qualities of head and heart, makes women angels of loveliness. "Favorite Prescription" is the only medicine for women, sold by druggists, under a positive guarantee from the manufacturers, that it will give satisfaction in every case, or money will be refunded. This guarantee has been printed on the bottle-wrapper, and faithfully carried out for many years.

Some men are accused of being tight, when, in fact, it is their pocket-books that are "full."—Yonkers Statesman.

Nothing Like It:

Every day swells the volume of proof that as a specific for all Blood diseases, nothing equals Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery. Remember, this is an old established remedy with a record! It has been weighed in the balance and found fulfilling every claim! It has been tested many years in thousands of cases with flattering success! For Throat and Lung troubles, Catarrh, Kidney disease, Liver Complaint, Dyspepsia, Sick Headache and all disorders resulting from impoverished blood, there is nothing like Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery—world-renowned and ever growing in favor!

A plumber never asks: "Is it warm enough for you?" He just hands you his bill and watches the perspiration trickle.

The Demon of the Marsh.

The evil spirit that hovers about stagnant pools and inundated lowlands, is no materialized bogey, no phantasm of a disordered imagination, but a power of evil far more malignant than any familiar anathematized by Cotton Mather. It is Malaria, which has for its destructive progeny fever and ague, bilious remittent and dumb ague, conquerable with Hostetter's Stomach Bitters, as are dyspepsia, constipation, liver complaint, etc.

Perhaps no article has been so frequently "weighed in the balance and found wanting" as coal.

It Never Fails.

The Lessons of "Unser Fritz" Case.

The greatest doctors in Europe don't seem to know what ails "Unser Fritz."

Thus are the Garfield and Grant episodes repeated, and public confidence in "expert" medical knowledge is again shaken.

The effect is a revulsion.

Since the fatal days of 1883, many of the doctrines of the schoolmen concerning extensive medication have been abandoned, and all schools of practice are more and more relying upon old-fashioned simple root and herb preparations and careful nursing—the only reliances known to our ancestors.

These methods and reliances are illustrated to-day in a series of old-fashioned roots and herbs preparations recently given to the world by the well-known proprietors of Warner's safe cure—preparations made from formulæ possessed by many of our oldest families, and rescued for popular use, and issued under the happy designation of Warner's Log Cabin Remedies.

"My son," exclaimed a venerable woman to the writer when he was a boy, "my son, you'r yeller and pale and weak like lookin', you'r needin' a good shaking up with some sas'paril'."

A jug of spring sarsaparilla was just as necessary in the "winter supplies" of fifty years ago as was a barrel of pork, and a famous medical authority says that the very general prevalence of the use of such a preparation as Log Cabin Sarsaparilla explains the rugged health of our ancestors.

While Warner's Log Cabin Sarsaparilla is an excellent remedy for all seasons of the year, it is particularly valuable in the spring, when the system is full of sluggish blood and requires a natural constitutional tonic and invigorator to resist colds and pneumonia, and the effects of a long winter. Philo M. Parsons, clerk of the City Hotel of Hartford, Conn., was prostrated with a cold which, he says, "seemed to settle through my body. I neglected it and the result was my blood became impoverished and poisoned, indicated by inflamed eyes. I was treated, but my eyes grew worse. I was obliged to wear a shade over them. I feared that I would be obliged to give up work."

"Under the operation of Warner's Log Cabin Sarsaparilla and Liver Pills," he says, "The sore and inflamed eyes disappeared. My blood, I know, is in a healthier condition than it has been for years. I have a much better appetite. I shall take several more bottles for safety's sake. Warner's Log Cabin Sarsaparilla is a great blood purifier and I most heartily recommend it."

A few bottles of Warner's Log Cabin Sarsaparilla used in the family now will save many a week of sickness and many a dollar of bills. Use no other. This is the oldest, most thoroughly tested, and the best, is put up in the largest sarsaparilla bottle on the market, containing 120 doses. There is no other preparation of similar name that can equal it. The name of its manufacturers is a guarantee of its superior worth.

While the great doctors wrangle over the technicalities of an advanced medical science that can not cure disease, such simple preparations yearly snatch millions from untimely graves.

They'll never more be missed—the successful fair who dare to leap in 1888.

How's Your Liver?

The old lady who replied, when asked how her liver was, "God bless me, I never heard that there was such a thing in the house," was noted for her amiability. Prometheus, when chained to a rock, might as well have pretended to be happy, as the man who is chained to a diseased liver. For poor Prometheus, there was no escape, but by the use of Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Purgative Pellets, the disagreeable feelings, irritable temper, constipation, indigestion, dizziness and sick headache, which are caused by a diseased liver, promptly disappear.

Dr. GREENE'S NERVURA NERVE TONIC,

The Great Spring Remedy

FOR THE POSITIVE CURE OF

Nervousness, Weakness, Nervous Debility, Nervous and Physical Exhaustion, Nervous Prostration, Sleeplessness, Despondency, Paralysis, Numbness, Trembling, Neuralgia, Rheumatism, Pains in Side and Back, Epileptic Fits, St. Vitus's Dance, Palpitation, Nervous and Sick Headache, Tired Feeling, Dyspepsia, Indigestion, Loss of Appetite, Constipation, Kidney and Liver Diseases, Etc.

SPRING DEBILITY.

Every one needs a spring tonic—a remedy which will strengthen and invigorate the system and tone up the action of all the organs. The spring is the time above all others for the sick to get well; it is the time for the comparatively well to keep in good health by the use of a judiciously selected spring medicine.

With the advent of spring comes malaria, nervousness and debility. A weak and tired feeling, if neglected, always results in nervous and physical exhaustion. Cure these diseases, or guard against them by the use of DR. GREENE'S NERVURA NERVE TONIC, which is the greatest and best of all spring medicines. This wonderful remedy is recommended by physicians, druggists and the people every where as being the most marvelous in its effects of any known medicine. If you are nervous, irritable, dreamy and can not sleep nights, use this remedy at once and your nerves will become strong and your sleep calm, natural and refreshing. If you wake tired mornings, with dull head, bad taste in the mouth, no appetite for breakfast, and feel weak, languid and exhausted, this remarkable remedy will clear your head, give you an appetite, restore your strength, vigor and energies. If you have dyspepsia, indigestion, biliousness, constipation, kidney complaint, pain and weakness in the back, this remedy will give you sure relief and cure. It is a perfect specific for nervous debility, neuralgia, nervous or sick headache, heart disease, palpitation, paralysis, numbness, trembling and all nervous diseases.

Use this Remedy and you will never regret it. It is purely vegetable, and its wonderful effects afford a safe, sure and positive cure. Do not be persuaded to take any thing else, for this remedy has no equal. It is the greatest medical discovery of the age. All druggists keep it. Price, $1 per bottle. If your druggist does not have it, he will get it for you. Its discoverer, Dr. GREENE, 35 West 14th Street, New York, the great specialist in curing nervous and chronic diseases, can be consulted free, personally or by letter.

The treatment of many thousands of cases of those chronic weaknesses and distressing ailments peculiar to females, at the Invalids' Hotel and Surgical Institute, Buffalo, N. Y., has afforded a vast experience in nicely adapting and thoroughly testing remedies for the cure of woman's peculiar maladies.

Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription is the outgrowth, or result, of this great and valuable experience. Thousands of testimonials, received from patients and from physicians who have tested it in the more protracted and obstinate cases which had baffled their skill, prove it to be the most wonderful remedy ever devised for the relief and cure of suffering women. It is not recommended as a "cure-all," but as a most perfect Specific for woman's peculiar ailments.

As a powerful, invigorating tonic, it imparts strength to the whole system, and to the womb and its appendages in particular. For overworked, "worn-out," "run-down," debilitated teachers, milliners, dressmakers, seamstresses, "shop-girls," housekeepers, nursing mothers, and feeble women generally, Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription is the greatest earthly boon, being unequaled as an appetizing cordial and restorative tonic.

As a soothing and strengthening nervine, "Favorite Prescription" is unequaled and is invaluable in allaying and subduing nervous excitability, irritability, exhaustion, prostration, hysteria, spasms and other distressing, nervous symptoms commonly attendant upon functional and organic disease of the womb. It induces refreshing sleep and relieves mental anxiety and despondency.

Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription is a legitimate medicine, carefully compounded by an experienced and skilful physician, and adapted to woman's delicate organization. It is purely vegetable in its composition and perfectly harmless in its effects in any condition of the system. For morning sickness, or nausea, from whatever cause arising, weak stomach, indigestion, dyspepsia and kindred symptoms, its use, in small doses, will prove very beneficial.

"Favorite Prescription" is a positive cure for the most complicated and obstinate cases of leucorrhea, excessive flowing, painful menstruation, unnatural suppressions, prolapsus, or falling of the womb, weak back, "female weakness," anteversion, retroversion, bearing-down sensations, chronic congestion, inflammation and ulceration of the womb, inflammation, pain and tenderness in ovaries, accompanied with "internal heat."

As a regulator and promoter of functional action, at that critical period of change from girlhood to womanhood, "Favorite Prescription" is a perfectly safe remedial agent, and can produce only good results. It is equally efficacious and valuable in its effects when taken for those disorders and derangements incident to that later and most critical period, known as "The Change of Life."

"Favorite Prescription," when taken in connection with the use of Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery, and small laxative doses of Dr. Pierce's Purgative Pellets (Little Liver Pills), cures Liver, Kidney and Bladder diseases. Their combined use also removes blood taints, and abolishes cancerous and scrofulous humors from the system.

"Favorite Prescription" is the only medicine for women, sold by druggists, under a positive guarantee, from the manufacturers, that it will give satisfaction in every case, or money will be refunded. This guarantee has been printed on the bottle-wrapper, and faithfully carried out for many years.

Large bottles (100 doses) $1.00, or six bottles for $5.00.

DYSPEPSIA.

DR. RADWAY'S PILLS are a cure for this complaint. They restore strength to the stomach and enable it to perform its functions. The symptoms of Dyspepsia disappear, and with them the liability of the system to contract diseases. Take the medicine according to directions, and observe what we say in "False and True" respecting diet. A few extracts from the many letters we are constantly receiving:

Dr. A. C. Middlebrook, Doraville, Ga.: "I use them in my practice and family in preference to all other Pills."

Mrs. Caroline Monteith, Deer Creek, Ind.: "I believe my life has been saved by your medicine. Have long been suffering with Dyspepsia and Liver Complaint."

H. A. Carr, P. M., Escambia, Ala.: "Best Pills he has ever used."

E. Hummel, Boonville, Mo.: Cured him when all others failed.

Alice E. Shaver, Mt. Storm, W. Va.: "I positively say that Radway's are the best Pills I ever had for Dyspepsia."

SATURDAY, APRIL 7, 1888.

Legislative Notes.

The Legislature adjourned Monday night at midnight, to the great relief of the people of the State.

Bills were passed for this county as follos:

The Garrett county treasurer bill, providing for the appointment of the county treasurer by the Governor, was read for the third time. Mr. Stake moved to strike out the enacting clause. He said he regretted that a sense of duty compelled him to oppose the bill; that he was compelled in the closing hours of the Senate to invade what is termed senatorial courtesy, the obligation of which he felt as strongly as any Senator. Mr. Stake read from a veto of Goy. Whyte of a bill providing for the appointment of a commission by the Governor to build a court house in Washington county, which Governor Whyte held to be against the principle of local self-government. He contended that the people in Garrett county were the people most interested who shall be their treasurer; best suited to make the appointment. He argued that the distance of Garrett county from the State capital, its local surroundings, &c., made it specially improper to place the appointment in the hands of the Governor.

Mr. Browning interrupted Mr. Stake to say that he proposed to amend the bill so as to provide for the appointment of the treasurer by the county commissioners. The bill was so amended and passed the Senate without a dissenting vote.

Bill to amend charter of Shealtiel Lodge, No. 122, Independent Order of Odd-Fellows, Garrett county; to authorize county commissioners of Garrett to build a bridge over Castleman's creek; to charter the Oakland bank; the bill relating to repairs on the legislative road at Selbysport, as amended; relating to fees of States' Attorney; to incorporate the community of Mountain Lake Park, Md.

The Local Option bill, as amended by the Senate, was defeated in the House Monday night, by a vote of 24 for to 29 against.

Legislation for the Cash Down.

The Hagerstown Mail is, so far as we have seen, the only Democratic journal in the State that has uttered a word of protest against the active and unscrupulous lobby which has been trading in legislation at Annapolis during the present session of the General Assembly. So bold have these harpies grown, under the kindly tolerance of legislators whose votes they openly bargained away, that they invaded the two chambers while legislation was going on, and an opposition Senator was constrained to ask that body to make a feeble assertion of its dignity by ordering them to leave the floor.

Mr. Henry W. Rogers, one of the best known citizens of Baltimore, in a letter published over his own name, gives to the public two instances of the potent influence of the lobby over the law-making power. Mr. Rogers and other humanitarians were urging the passage of a bill to protect dumb animals from cruelty. The bill's varying fortunes were finally settled in this way: Having been reported favorably it was passed, recousidered and returned to committee, where it was held. The gentlemen who desired the passage of the bill were informed that it could be passed if they "would put up two hundred and fifty dollars." They declined the offer—and the bill was killed.

In the second case given by Mr. Rogers, "the opponents of the bill contributed five hundred dollars, and put it in the hands of a Baltimore lawyer. He went to Annapolis and throttled the measure in the committee."

This sort of thing has come to be a recognized factor in Maryland legislation. And it is a great shame.—Bel Air Times.

The Baltimore Sun, in speaking of the lobby, says:—The difficulties of a legislative session are greatly heightened by the presence of that organized band known as the "third house," which is composed of shrewd and unscrupulous men, who ply their infamous trade for money, and by means of its corrupting influence are ever ready to entrap the weak and unwary. Never perhaps in the history of one session have they reared a bolder front or resorted to more desperate means than during the ninety eventful days just closed at Annapolis,

How much was paid to the lobby to secure the repeal of our local option law?

Legislative Expenses.

A deficiency bill has passed appropriating $26,000 to pay the additional expenses of the Legislature for this session: this is in addition to the regular appropriation made at the last session for this purpose. This will run up the expenses of this session to near $121,000.

The expense of the notorious and profligate session of 1880 was $120,000. There was such a hue and cry over this that a reformation was begun, Hence the session of 1882 was but $105,846.77—a reduction of nearly $15,000.

The reformation continuing, the session of 1884 was $101,904.91—about $18,000 less; but thence departing and getting into the old loose habits and customs of 1880, the session of of 1886 ran up to $110,698.65. But now the present session of 1888 promises to go back to the worst periods of our political manngement and to surpass the corruptions and waste of 1880.

How does it come that the session 1884 should cost but $101,904 96 and the present one $121,000? There is but one just basis for it—improvidence, waste and extravagance.—Hagerstown Mail, Democrat.

We have but to turn to the influential and untrameled part of the Democratic press of this state to see the true standing of the present legislature of our state. There are a number of noble spirits (Democrats) who have acted out their convictions, but it is a deplorable fact that there are just a sufficient number of obstructionists to hinder healthy legislation. These obstructionists may be so for diflerent reasons: Some who believe devotion to the Democratic party should take precedence of all other action, while others are evidently mere creatures of the lobby, of which the Baltimore Sun loudly complains. It seems hardly possible that Maryland, situated so favorably geographically should be in the background with regard to advance thought. Are not our present legislators afraid that the Northern counties will speak with telling effect in the near future? That Maryland should be behind any of the far South states in the matter of wise and progressive legislation is one of the unexplained anomalies of the hour.—Howard County Progress.

How About Other Bills.

It is rare for rascality to come to the surface in such dramatic fashion as on Saturday in the Maryland Senate. It is unfortunate, indeed, that it does not, as those who really strive to represent the people properly would then have their eyes opened to what is going on under their noses, while the unworthy would be so abashed by exposure as to have their power for evil measurably destroyed. Had not Senator Peter become possessed of a sudden impulse to call up the Gas bill, its theft would not have been discovered until too late for effective action, and the people of this community would still be the helpless victims of the gas companies. This would have been a minor calamity, however, beside the withdrawal of publicity from the action of the lobby. Had it occurred in the closing hours, the matter would have been lightly passed over, as was the theft of the Mining Inspection bill two years ago, and the attention of the public would not have been riveted upon the methods which prevail in the State Legislature.

The American has repeatedly warned the people of these pernicious practices, but it has never before been able so graphically to illustrate them by bringing forward witnesses in the august persons of the Senators themselves. The entire body was for the moment paralyzed by the audacity of these legislation-mongers. Perhaps, had there not been such a popular outcry for the passage of this particular bill, the Senate would not even then have been so dumfounded. There was, subsequently, great difficulty in keeping the House up to the mark, and the lobbyists, if we consider their determined efforts to seduce the members, do not appear to have been much set back by the discovery of their infamous plot.

But it would be of more general interest to find out how many worthy measures have been defeated during the present session by parallel or even worse devices, and how many unworthy measures have been rushed through both bodies by underhand means, in defiance of the will of those who by their probity and intelligence ought to lead the sentiment of the legislature. The proceedings have been terribly lax and aimless from the beginning. Bills have been bandied about between the two houses over and over again because the members did not know what they had voted for. In fact, they arose in their seats on many occasions and confessed as much, as though it was a pardonable oversight to vote for an important measure without the slightest knowledge of its contents.

Do the voters of this State propose to submit to such downright insults much longer? This legislature, it must be borne in mind, is the result of a desperate effort of the Democratic party to reform itself. "If they do these things in a green tree," freshly watered with the tears of repentance, "what shall be done in the dry," when the people are again off their guard and in a fit mood to be worked upon by the insiduous intrigues of the managers? The public will watch very closely the closing hours of this legislature for other stolen bills and for the passage of some by tricks just as bad as that exposed on Saturday.—Baltimore American.

The Republican Side Presented.

WASHINGTON, April [illegible]. port of the minority of the committee on Ways and Means on the tariff bill was prepared by Mr. McKinley, and is signed by all the Republican members of the committee. The opening paragraps are as follows:

The extraordinary manner in which this bill came to the committee and the total lack o consideration given to so grave a measure by those charged with its investigation, demand notice and comment. It was fashioned outside of the committee and reached it notby the reference of the House, which is the usual channel through which committees obtain jurisdiction of a subject. It was presented readymade by the chairman of the committee; was framed, completed and printed without the knowledge o the minority and without consideration or discussion in the full committee. If any consultation were held the minority were excluded.

The Representatives on the floor of the House were not permitted to to voice the wants of their constituents. Proposing a grave measure which would affect all of the people in their employments, their labor, and their incomes, the majority persistently refused the people the right of hearing and discussing; denied them the simple privilege of presenting reasons and arguments against their proposed action.

But as the bill, as avowed, is a political one, believed to present [illegible] as it does the views of the President and his party associates, a bill which, with the President's free trade message, is to constitute the issue, and be the platform of the party, it may account for, but will not justify this extraordinary course of procedure.

The bill is a radical reversal of the tariff policy of the country. If enacted into a law it will disturb every branch of business, retard manufacturing and agricultural prosperity, and seriously impair our industrial independence. It undertakes to revise our entire revenue system: substantially all of the tariff schedules are affected; both classification and rates are changed. Specific duties are in many cases changed to advalorem, which all the experience has shown is productive of frauds and undervaluations. It does not correct the irregularities of the present tariff; it only aggravates them. It introduces uncertainties in interpretation, which will embarrass its administration, promote contention and litigation, and give to the customs officers a latitude of construction which will produce endless controversy and confusion. It is marked with a sectionalism which every patriotic citizen must deplore.

If the majority desire to insure the handing of our steel rail market to our English rivals, the proposed duty of $11 will accomplish this purpose unless the workingmen who are employed in producing the rail materials are willing to accept still lower wages than they are now receiving and the railroad companies which transport the raw materials are willing to greatly reduce their freight rates. Have the majority any assurance that the working-men and the railroad companies are willing to accept these conditions? Neither were heard before the committee.

The supply of steel rails to the Pacific coast is now in the hands of foreigners, because of the cheap transportation by water from foreign ports, the existing duty of $17 not being sufficient to enable our mannfacturars to compete for that trade.

It should be remembered that our manufacturers of steel rails consume almost one half of all the pig iron that the country produces. If this great market for American iron ores and pig iron is to be destroyed the country need not be told of the distress which will come to labor and the bankruptcy which will come to producers.

Let Down the Curtain.

Baltimore Sunday American.

The legislature of 1888 has about made up its record. And what a record it is! One will look in vain to find its equal. Elected on a platform filled with pledges of reformation, it has achieved a worse reputation than any of its predecessors, whose scandals have given rise to the cry of reform within the party. Called to correct the evils which former legislatures inflicted upon the people, it has outdone them in waste and extravagance, in the hampering of the State's trade, in attempts to create sinecures for party workers, in subserviency to the ring masters, of whose rule the party promised to rid itself last fall, in shameless disregard of the rights of the minority and local self-government, and in a lack of comprehension of the duties and responsibilities of legislators. That the bosses were not powerful enough to carry out all their schemes was not their fault. The city delegation did its best to aid them. The gerrymander scheme, the mayorality extension project, the various inspection laws, the bills for the creation of useless offices, the Emigration bill, had in the city delegation their most ardent advocates. The city delegation's corner was bossism's city of refuge; scorned and rejected by the counties, the bosses knew that in the city delegation they could find succor. Think for a moment what the result would have been had the House in all things been guided by a majority of the city delegates; imagine what sort of legislation we should have had, had the county members been as compliant to the wishes of the managers as the bulk of the city's representatives! The indignation of the people against boss control must be heightened by the reflection that had there been a city delegation in the House equal in independence to one-third of the county members, the legislature might have closed its services at midnight to-morrow with a clean page. The eighteen members of the city delegation in the House, constituting one fifth of the membership of that body, wield a potent influence in legislation as well as in example. An anti-ring delegation might have accomplished an immense deal of good for the state. It is too late now for the Democrats who supported the ring in the last election to cry out against the scandals and disgraceful proceedings of the session. Bossism has never descended to lower depths than this winter; the lobby has never plied its trade as openly; contributions to the Grandmother's Fund have never been levied more boldly. Yet, that was the inevitable result of the last election. The men who voted for the bosses' candidates did it with eyes open, and the responsibility rests with them; they would not listen to the appeals of Independent Democrats, to send the bosses to the rear. Ring organs and ring orators waxed warm in their indignation at the assertions of independent orators who predicted what has just come to pass. The session has proven that many of the ring champions stooped to falsehood and deceit last fall, to elect the ticket of the bosses. Take the Democratic platform, with its multitudinous promises, and then review the results of the session! In less than forty-eight hours the curtain will fall on the wretched farce, which opened with the adoption of the "reform" platform, and ended with the stealing of the Gas bill. One of the amusing performances in the comedy was the reconcilement of George Colton with the old ring combination. The kiss-and-make-up act took place behind the scenes. It is said to have been the most touching sight since the day that Henry IV. knelt barefooted in the deep snow, at the gates of Canossa, humbly beseeching pardon for his transgressions while a kicker, and promising to be a kicker no longer. More tears were shed on the interesting occasion of Mr. Colton's return to the true fold, than on that equally joyful occasion eight years ago, when after the caucus which elected Gorman United States Senator, and George Colton police commissioner, the two insisted upon sleeping in the same bed, hugging and kissing each other, and tears of gratitude running in a deluge down their cheeks. Mr. Colton has since denied that he was responsible for any of the weeping and kissing, and that Mr. Gorman was the sole weeper and kisser; in fact, that there was no necessity of his kissing Gorman, because while he did the work, Gorman reaped the reward. Colton, who a few years ago thought himself powerful enough to be Gorman's rival, and cherished the hope that one day he would dethrone him from the boss-ship of "the party," has lived long enough to become one of Gorman's subordinates; to serve the man he hated and to outdo any of the allies of the bosses in the championship of the schemes of the ring. Another good man gone wrong; another converted "reformer" re-converted to "the party" from whose fold he strayed when the canal presidency was refused him. Why did he go back? Probably because he could not help it. He saw in and about the State House so many of his old friends at their old stands that his heart ached to be once more with his separated brethren. The old love returned, the thought of being once more a boss possessed him, and with the zeal of such persons he was foremost in the projects demanded by the managers. But, some one asks, why did he, at the very moment that there was need of a reformer "within the party," and when he so easily could have used his power and influence as a legislator to show up the corruption of the old ring, go back to those he had so recently hated? Why, indeed! Whenever Mr. Colton publishes his confessions, a chapter on the subject will be interesting reading to his friends, and perhaps also to his enemies. The fact remains that he has made his submission, that he has been admitted into the circle, that on the floor of the House he gloried to be again under the banner of bossism and the rule of the men whom he has not hesitated to accuse of some very reprehensible practices. He is with them now, but his assistance did not avail them to pass the gerrymandering and other darling projects.

RETRENCHING THE WRONG WAY.

What the managers and the champions meant last fall, when they promised the people that this would be an economical legislature, a retrenching body that would see that the people's money was properly expended, etc., may be seen by its expenditures. The last legislature appropriated $95,000 for the ordinary expenses of the legislature of 1888. But this was not enough; hence a few days ago a deficiency bill of $26,000 passed both houses, making the entire expenses of the session $121,000. In 1880, the first session under Governor Hamilton's administration the expenses were $120,000. The Governor, provoked at this waste of public money, fired his famous bombshell, in which he gave a detail of these expenditures, and called upon the people to rise against the men responsible for it. The result of the next election was the defeat of the bosses' candidates in such strong counties as Montgomery and Harford; the snowing under of a favorite senator in Talbot county, and last, but not least, the stampede of the bosses in this city and their nomination of ex-Governor Whyte for mayor. The legislature of 1882, perceiving that the people were aroused, managed to get along with an expenditure of $105,000, a reduction of $15,000. Governor Hamilton continued in his good work, and in 1884, when he left the Executive Mansion, the expenditures were reduced to $101,000, and the legislature was none the worse for it. But as soon as the eye of the ex-Governor was withdrawn, the old era of waste returned, and at the last session, an avowedly profligate one, the expenses amounted to $110,000. But even this is exceeded by the present legislature with its appropriation of $121,000. The number of members is the same as it was in 1884, when the expenditures were only $101,000. This is a sample of the reform and retrenchment promises of the bosses.

Reflect also on the printing scandal of the session. In 1880, when the ring combination was at its worst, when the old ring and the new were welded together, when, as has since been admitted, the printer had to divy with the lobby, and was elected by a caucus as a reward for partisan services, the printing bill was $38,000. Governor Hamilton denounced it as a specimen of boss extravagance, and strong as the bosses then were, succeeded in having it cut down in 1882 to $25,000. But Governor Hamilton insisted that this was too high. He labored incessantly to bring about a reform in this branch, and before he vacated the governor's chair had the satisfaction of seeing the Printing bill cut down to $14,000 for the session of 1884. In 1886, after a short breathing spell, the bosses managed to bring up the Printing bill to a trifle over $15,000. But in this session, the session which the managers predicted would be distinguished for economy and retrenchment, the printer claims that according to contract rates he is entitled to $42,000, and the legislature jumps at his offer to compromise for $25,500! What next?

WHAT THEY TRIED TO DO.

It is unnecessary to go over the record of this body, which, in the management of its own affairs, was so extravagant, to find how its ring contingent tried to burden the people with unnecesssary jobs and office-holders. The Oyster Inspection bill, which tried to make the oyster industry a political machine; the Immigration bill, with its $20,000 office-holders; numerous inspection bills, which would have hampered the commerce of the state, and the only object of which was to create more office-holders, the licensing of stationary engineers, &c., were defeated though the bosses pressed them, on account of the independence of a majority of the county members and a few city men. The Gerrymander and Mayorality Extension bills were the darling schemes of the combined boss power. To pass the first, they cajoled, bulldozed, threatened and cracked the party whip. Knowing the terror that the party name inspires in the breast of the average legislator, they tried to make it a party issue. The chairman of the Democratic State Central Committee demanded its passage on that ground; he declared it must be done; that the national committee had commanded it to be done; that Democrats must stand by the party; that a united Democracy was rising up, calling on Democrats to gerrymander the state. All the other bosses seconded Mr. Archer's missionary work. A caucus was decided upon, but so great was the opposition that it had to be abandoned. Word went out that the bill must be passed, caucus or no caucus. Then was enacted that disgraceful scene which transformed the House of Delegates into a pandemomium, and the ring leaders into raving madmen. The city delegation, with only one exception, stood by the bosses, and several of its members took a leading part in the howling act that followed the roll-call. The bosses rejoiced at the passage of the bill, but respectable members of the House bowed their neads in shame. Even its reputed father was so ashamed of his alleged off-spring that he came very near abandoning it in the hour of its greatest distress. But public opinion was too strong to permit the Senate to yield to the bosses after the House had put it through. Ignoble as was its birth, its death was still more shameful. Its withdrawal was the confession of bossdom that their whip was not strong enough to bend the independent spirit of anti-ring senators.

The pledges to the workingmen by "the party" have been equally disregarded. The semi-monthly pay bill, the arbitration bill, and other bills which they demanded have met the fate of the other promises given in the last campaign.

Newspapers in 1888.

From the edition of Geo. P. Rowell & Co's "American Newspaper Directory," published April 2nd (its twentieth year), it appears that the Newspapers and Periodicals of all kinds issued in the United States and Canada, now number 16,310, showing a gain of 890 during the last 12 months and of 7,136 in 10 years.

The publishers of the directory assert that the impression that when the proprietor of a newspaper undertakes to state what has been his exact circulation, he does not generally tell the truth is an erroneous one; and they conspicuously offer a reward of $100 for every instance in their book for this year, where it can be shown that the detailed report received from a publisher was untrue.

Judge Wheeler, of New Jersey, a life long Democrat, has announced that he will hereafter act with the Republican party. He says: "As far as Cleveland is concerned, I would not support him under any circumstances. The Democratic party is placed on record for free trade, and no other construction can be placed on the words and acts of the Democratic leaders in Washington, led on by the administration. All of our national interests are against it, and I think the soldiers, from what I can find from conversation with hundreds of them, will vote almost solid against Cleveland. On this platform New Jersey is a sure Republican State next fall."

Removals in Town.

Among the changes of residence in town not mentioned in our last issue we note the following:

H. W. Hessen, to his farm in the southern suburb of Oakland.

Michael Chrystol to the house vacated by Mr. Hessen.

J. W. Calhoun, to the house near Rasche's mill.

Dr. Manown, from Weston, W. Va., to his property on Alder street, known as the Kepner property.

Mrs. R. J. West, to Bell property.

G. H. Pritchard, to the Felty building.

Death of Wm. C. Cunningham.

It is with sincere regret that the REPUBLICAN announces to its readers the death of Mr. William C. Cunningham, one of the oldest and best known citizens of Garrett county. For a long while the deceased had been in declining health and a continual sufferer from an obtuse malady. On the morning of March the 30th, at his residence, "Cheviot Dale," death interposed and he passed peacefully away in the 71st year of his age. Mr. Cunningham was classically educated, and in the realm of letters his knowledge took a wide range. His veins were supplied with blood from two of the most ancient and historic families that have brightened the pages of this country's history—the Washingtons and the Lees.

Examinations.

The regular term examinations were held in study room of "Massey Hall," on Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday before Easter, with satisfactory results. Papers were prepared in Latin, natural philosophy, physical geography and higher arithmetic, with descriptive geography and U. S. history for junior pupils. The work of the term evidences care and deep interest on the part of teachers and pupils. It is to be regretted that the school is so limited on account of room. We ought to have at least room enough to warrant the reception of applicants from our own county. As it is the principal is compelled to decline to receive more than a certain number. The benefits of so thorough a school should be extended to all, and must be if its work is to have any lasting influence upon education here. We understand that Garrett county teachers who desire advanced studies can take special courses in any branch desired, either as fitting for State Normal or for more thorough work in the school room. Too much stress cannot be laid upon the importance of the work done at "Massey Hall," and we heartily commend the school to the attention of our people.

Another Opportunity to visit Washington.

Notwithstanding the unusually severe weather that prevailed at the time of the last excursion to Washington, the patronage it received further demonstrated that the opportunities for cheap travel extended by the B. & O. Company are fully appreciated by the general public.

The fourth of the popular series of Washington excursions is therefore announced to be run on Thursday, April 12th,

As this excursion will probably close the series, every one who can spare the time should take advantage of it. The train will leave stations as given below,—the rate of fare annexed:

Leave Terra Alta 7.51, 11.18 A. M., and 11.35 P. M., $6.25; Oakland 8.09, 11 38 A. M. and 11.53 P. M. $6.00; Piedmont 9.05, 12.54 A. M. and 12 34 P. M., $5.50; Keyser 9.20 A. M., 12.50 P. M. and 1.09 A. M. $5.35.

The tickets are valid for return passage until Saturday, April 21st, inclusive, on all regular trains, and good for trip from Washington to Baltimore at any time during the time limit.

Sleeping cars will be attached to all trains and Parlor cars to the 11.18 A. M. train through to Washington and Baltimore.

Mt. Lake Park.

We seem to have emerged from the depths of winter to bright and beautiful spring within the last few days.

The cottages offered for rent here are being taken up pretty rapidly. The outlook for a large gathering this season is very encouraging.

Easter day was a very bright and happy one to us all, but especially to Mr. F. P. Arnold, who took to himself on that day a bright and cheery wife. Our best wishes attend them through life.

List of Letters.

Are now located in their new store room, on Alder street, opposite Sturgiss' drug store, where they are enabled to wait upon the public, to whom they will sell as low as the lowest, the same quality of goods. Will take all kinds of produce they can handle, at the market price, in exchange for goods. They keep a full line of the celebrated Milwaukee Oil Grain Shoes, for men, women and children; also the Crusader Boots and Shoes.

Uphold Your Own Town.

An exchange gives the following ten reasons why people should spend their money at home. They are so forcible and well put that we cannot refrain from presenting them to our readers, hoping they will give them the consideration they deserve:

1st. It is your home; you cannot improve it much by taking money away to spend or invest.

2d. There is no way of improving a place so much as by encouraging good merchants, good schools and good people settling among you; this cannot be done unless you spend your money at home.

3d. Spend your money at home because there is where you generally get it. It is your duty.

4th. Spend your money at home, because when it is necessary for you to get credit, it is of your town merchants that you generally get it; and they must wait for the money. Therefore when you have the cash in hand spend it at home.

5th. Spend your money at home. It will make better merchants of your merchants; they can and will keep better assortments, and sell at lower rates than if the only business they can do is what is credited out while the money goes to other places.

6th. Spend your money at home. You may have sons growing up who will some day be the the best merchant in town. Help to lay the foundation of them now. It is a duty. It may be your pride in after years to say: "By my trading at the store I got my son a position as a clerk, and now he's a proprietor." Then you will think it hard if your neighbors spend their money out of town. Set the example now.

7th. Spend your money at home. Set the example now. Buy your dry goods, groceries, meats and everything at home, and you will see a great change in a short time in the business outlook of the place; therefore, deal with your home merchants.

8th. Spend your money at home. What do you gain by going off? Count the costs; see what you could have done at home, by letting your merchant have the cash. Strike a balance and see if you would not have been just as well off, besides helping your merchant.

9th. Spend your money at home. Your merchants are your neighbors, your friends, they stand by you in sickness; are your associates, without your trade they cannot keep your business. No store, then no banks, no one waiting to buy property to settle on and build up your place.

10th. Merchants should do their advertising at home. They should get their bill-heads, circulars, cards, letter heads, envelopes and all other printing at home, of their own newspapers, who aid them in many ways, and advertise them hundreds of times without any pay whatever.

HOMOEOPATHY. — Homœopathy, like Gravitation, is a law of Nature: its expression is Similia Similibus Curantur—"like cures like"; a handful of snow cures a frosted ear—snow is like frost but is not frost. Similarly with drugs; each one when taken by a person in health, produces certain "symptoms"—nausea, fever, chills, etc., and when similiar symptoms are met in sickness those drugs will cure if it be possible; such, in brief is Homœopathy, the most successful system, or, indeed, the only one, for it is nature's, and all cures, knowingly or not, must work by the same law. It will pay the reader to write for a copy of our little manual, "The Medical Index," and for our book catalogue. Leading druggists sell our medicines, or we will send a 50 dose vial of any desired remedy for 25 cents. Address BOERICKE & TAFEL, 212 W. Fayette St., Baltimare, Md. VOICES OF THE FUTURE.

The voices of the past are ever sounding,
And give their impulse to our present life,
In wisdom of the ages deep abounding,
To cheer or warn amid our daily strife.

In times of joy they come to us with blessing,
To breathe their peace when all is bright and fair,
In hours of grief they blend with thoughts depressing,
And bring us aid our burdens' weight to bear.

The voices of the future, too, are calling,
Though few may listen to their faint appeal,
All unobserved their accents gently falling,
Reverberate with coming woe or weal.

Whene'er we strive and conquer, their applauding
Is gently borne as with an angel's breath,
But when we falter, coming time defrauding,
They whisper coldly as with chill of death.

Whatever wrong the present age is bearing,
With prospect dim that it will be redressed,
That very wrong, if borne without despairing,
May through our patience make the future blest.

THE BRINK OF A CHASM.

Dr. Allan M'Lane Hamilton on Unsuspected Monomonia.

Symptoms of the Early Stages of Insanity —Effects of the Injudicious Use of Leisure—The Best Medicine.

There is a man in this city who is confined to certain limits on the island. He can not go above Fifty-ninth street, nor can he cross a ferry. Otherwise he walks about freely and transacts his business. He is not a "crook," and the police would let him go to Jericho or Canada if he desired. Neither his friends nor his enemies restrain him, and he has a fortune that would permit him to go where he liked and do as he pleased. He is his own jailer, a monomaniac whose sole delusion relates to the bounds which he thinks are set about him. Not half a dozen of the hundreds of people with whom he daily comes in contact know that he is not perfectly sane.

A reporter heard of this curious case in the course of a conversation with Dr. Allan McLane Hamilton, the insanity expert.

"Unsuspected insanity," said Dr. Hamilton. "There is much to be said about it, which the public ought to hear. Many a man stands upon the brink of that chasm which it is worse than death to cross, and though a few words may save them now, all the doctors of the world may not be able to bring them back after they have passed over. What I want to say, in the hope that it may do some good, relates to the early stages of such cases, the symptoms of the malady when it is just beginning to take hold and may be shaken off. If I were speaking in the strictest scientific language I should deny that a person can be wholly sound except upon a single point, but the appearance is there. Such men and women are by no means rare. Their lunacy is of so subtle a nature as to defy detection for years, though they may be hopelessly mad. Take, for instance, the case of a man who can not go above Fifty-ninth street. Three or four years ago he was going uptown and was near that street when suddenly the feeling came over him that he would go no further. He yielded to it and went home. Some fatalistic idea came over him that a penalty would have fallen upon him if he had continued. He brooded upon it till the absurd idea had complete possession of him. Of course there must have been something in his make-up to predispose him to this madness, but by proper care it could have been warded off. After a while he came to me. He can talk as rationally on general subjects as I can; in fact, he talks rationally about his lunacy, admitting that it it is all folly and nonsense. Hoping to break him of it I took him in a carriage, and we drove up to Fifty-ninth street. He begged me not to cross it, and cried like a baby. I ordered the coachman to go on, and the unfortunate monomaniac went into violent hysterics—so violent, in fact, that I gave up the experiment and decided that nothing could be done in that way. Now it is just as bad with a ferryboat; so much so that another physician had a fearful time trying to make the man cross the East river. For all that the man is still sane to all appearances and you might associate with him for a year without finding out that any thing was the matter. The only thing to be done in such a case is to take the man into the country, where there will be no Fifty-ninth street and no ferry. Let him lead a systematic life, with regular occupation and duties. The point is that he should have begun such treatment the moment that his delusion appeared.

"The danger in all cases of monomania," continued Dr. Hamilton, "is that they will develop into dangerous forms. Homicidal tendencies are always to be feared. I recall the case of a girl who had some apparently harmless delusion, but who suddenly developed a desire to smother herself and her room-mate with illuminating gas, and she came very near doing it, too. These people are rightly sent to asylums by physicians, and then they are liberated by a sheriff's jury, because they tell such a straight story on the witness stand. I remember a striking scene that developed from such an examination. The friends of a man confined on Ward's Island brought him before a sheriff's jury. He told his story from youth up with the most painstaking precision. He was as sane as a right-angled triangle all the way through. The jurymen cast significant glances at each other, as much as to say: 'What an injustice has been done to this poor man.' When they were all through with him Dr. Macdonald said: 'I would like you to ask but one question; ask him who he is.' The question was put, and then, lifting his hand to Heaven with a most impressive gesture, he replied: 'I am the Lord Jesus Christ!' and immediately he began to talk in the most irrational manner. Frequently it is not so easy to bring out a man's delusion.

"Here is a peculiar case," said the doctor, referring to his note-book. "This man has what is called the delusion of doubt. He imagines that some awful penalty attends upon a wrong decision of the most trifling question. If a stone lies in his path he conceives that to walk upon one side of it rather than the other will entail a fearful punishment. He believes that he must spit before he turns a corner. He knows that there is nothing whatever in it, but he can not free himself from the ideas. It is a small chance that he does not soon become a raving maniac, though no one would perceive to-day that there is any thing wrong with him. Here is another man similarly afflicted, but with a rather more complex mental state. He fears that some irresistible impulse will make him do something which he doesn't want to do. He doesn't know what it will be, but he constantly fears. The other day he was standing beside a man who was shooting at a target, when the feeling came over him that something would make him swing in front of the pistol just as it was discharged. He was conscious all the time that he didn't want to be shot, but the impulse was very nearly the death of him. Here is another man who used to go on sprees, but was suddenly converted and entered a monastery. He led the life prescribed with the most scrupulous care, and studied hard for the priesthood, but he was not mentally fitted for such a career, and it is likely that it has destroyed his reason. He also believes in mysterious penalties for trivial acts. Doubtless the system of life where there are penances for minor violations of duty was a bad thing for him. At any rate he is unsettled. One day a monk found him measuring off a line on the floor with a rule, and when asked what he was doing he replied that he was measuring the distance to Heaven. But he is sane to all appearances."

"What do you find is the relative danger of insanity to different classes of people? Do brokers and Wall street men generally go off crazy?"

"The stock broker does not become insane while he sticks to his business," replied the Doctor. "When he retires and devotes himself to inglorious ease he is in danger. It is not the active employment but the cessation of it that hurts. Brokers are frequently men who have grown up from office boys and have not any solid foundation of education. They are entirely wrapped up in their business, and when they leave it they have nothing to occupy their minds. It is then that delusions take possession of them. I would like to see men enter business late, after a solid education in schools, and colleges if possible. A man with a mind thus trained knows what to do with himself when he is thrown upon his own resources. It is much the same with ignorant men in trades. They have nothing to think of but their business, and their minds are not occupied. Where there is any hereditary taint such a state of things leads to bad results. Among men and women of leisure the immunity from insanity (aside from inheritance) depends upon the healthful variety of pursuits. The blase creature who thinks of nothing but a poodle is in danger. We frequently hear that the rush of business life in America makes lunatics. My experience shows, on the contrary, that it is injudicious use of leisure."

"In the case of children at school, what should be done when they begin to worry over their studies and dream of them at night? Would you take them away and let them rest?"

"I'll tell you what I do with my boy," replied Dr. Hamilton. "I let him go to school and go through the form of studying without always applying himself. He picks up what he can from the others for awhile till he has recovered from the effects of an unwise direction of his faculties. Perhaps he has worked too hard at some one thing which is not suited to his mind. Some children will do that. Because they are back in mathematics they will grind away at that and nothing else. They need variety, but it is a mistake to take them away from the routine of school life, the regularity of duties, which is generally good for them. Regularity is different from monotony. A child should not be forced into one groove. If he has a special tendency it may be encouraged without injury. Little Josef Hofmann's music is easy for him, while an equal dose might kill another boy who could beat Josef all to pieces at figures."

Returning to the question of monomaniacs Dr. Hamilton deprecated the fact that so many of what are called harmless "cranks" were at large. The records of crime continually reveal such people. Kleptomania develops some close decisions. The mere propensity for theft is not necessarily insanity. The insanity is usually revealed by the taking of useless trifles; and when the propensity is combined with abnormal secretiveness it should be looked at seriously. Dr. Hamilton recalled the case of a rich woman who used to steal children's toys and things of no value. After a while the malady developed further, and she hid her "ill-gotten gains" in queer nooks and corners of her house, wrapping them in odd bits of cloth and paper. An incredible quantity of such trifles were discovered in her house.

The sum and substance of the whole matter is that the friends of any person who shows tendencies to special delusions should recognize their seriousness at once and see that proper means are resorted to for correcting them. A judicious combination of regularity and variety is the best medicine.—N. Y. Mail and Express.

STORIES OF BISMARCK.

The Audacity and Self-Possession of the Iron Chancellor.

A recent number of the Antologia Nuova di Roma contains an interesting article on the political and public career of Prince Bismarck, from which I select a couple of anecdotes, which seem to give one a good exemplification of his independent and at times audacious disposition.

Bismarck had been sent by his master, the King of Prussia, to represent him as a deputy in the restored Diet, which had met at Frankfort in 1857. His sympathies at that period were all in favor of Austria, whose power in the Diet was almost absolute. He considered her a necessary ally of Prussia in combating the spirit of revolution which was then so prevalent and powerful not only in Germany, but in most of the European countries, and up to that period, under the policy and leading of Prince Metternich, in Austria, the representatives of these two Germanic Powers had usually acted in concert.

Soon after his arrival at Frankfort he was one day present at a meeting of the Diet, in his capacity of delegate from Prussia. Count de Thun, the Austrian delegate, was in the chair, and he was smoking. I must be mentioned as a curious illustration of the manners of those days, and as exemplifying the absolute poponderance of Austrian authority, that the Austrian delegate alone had the right to smoke during the sessions of the Diet.

Bismarck, an inveterate smoker from his earliest days, watched the presiding officer with envious eyes. At length, unable any longer to resist the temptation, he approaches the President's desk, and, selecting a cigar from a bunch of fine Havanas which were there, he lights it and begins to smoke.

The scandal was immense; Prussia had dared to smoke.

So seriously was the matter taken up, that the delegates from the other States represented in the Diet communicated the astounding fact to their respective Governments and demanded instructions for their guidance in future. But this took some time, and meanwhile the Austrian and Prussian delegates continued to enjoy their cigars at each session of the Diet.

The other episode took place somewhat later, at the period of the Crimean war. It is well known that Austria and Prussia, with the other German States, preserved a strict neutrality upon that occasion, and the Governments of France and England were quite well aware that the counsels of Bismarck had had much influence in producing a current of public opinion in Germany contrary to the policy of the western powers. Hence efforts emanating from London and Paris, had been made to weaken and undermine his authority in the Diet and at the Prussian court.

The Marquis de Moustier, French Embassador at the court of Berlin, meeting Bismarck one day in society, said to him: "This policy is going to conduct you to Jena." "And why not to Leipsic or Waterloo?" was the spirited reply of Bismarck.

The Marquis de Moustier was so ill-judged as to complain to the King of Prussia of this reply; but he gained nothing by the step, as the King approved and enjoyed the repartee of his delegate.—Boston Transcript.

Panther and Locomotive.

A singular tragedy lately occurred in Algeria, on the line of the railway between Bona und Constantine. At a wild spot where the track passes through the gorge of Nador a female panther had installed herself with her young ones right upon the track. The train came up too swiftly to come to a stop, but the panther might easily have leaped from the track. She did not, however, propose to do any thing of the sort. She was playing with her young ones at the time, and did not mean to have her sport disturbed, at least without a protest. She sprang upon the swiftly approaching locomotive with all her force. The blow was instant death to her. Her head and forelegs were cut off, and her lifeless body thrown to the side of the track. The young panthers, who, less presumptuous than their mother, had managed to get off the track in time, ran up and down the line after the train came to a standstill, howling at the tops of their voices. The body of the dead panther was taken to the station at Nador.—Youth's Companion.

—Omaha father—"My son, when I was young and my mother asked for enough wood to build a fire I would go out and chop enough to last for a week instead of strolling about and gathering up a few sticks as you do." Son—"Yes, I've heard grandma talk about it." "You have?" "Yes, she said when you were sent for wood you were always gone so long she had to go out and get it herself."—Omaha World.

—The American syndicate is said to be again reaching forth to grasp China's pig-tail. Some one has given it the "queue" when to act, no doubt.—St. Paul Globe.

PULLMAN'S PALACES.

The True Story of the Origin of a Great Public Convenience.

Various accounts of George M. Pullman's invention of the palatial sleeping cars that bear his name are afloat. They do not agree in general or in particulars. In order to get an exact and authentic statement, Assistant Superintendent J. W. Stockton, of the Pullman company, was asked for the facts. Mr. Stockton reflected a moment, and then said that Mr. Pullman told him the whole story some two years ago. His narrative was very interesting, not only in itself, but as an illustration of the possibilities of useful inventions when attention is once fastened upon them.

Mr. Pullman's statement, as Mr. Stockton recalls it, was substantially as follows: After the idea had been conceived and the patents obtained, Mr. Pullman went to Chicago and had his first car built there, putting all his money into the venture. The cost of the work was about $18,000. In all its essential features the car was the model on which the Pullmans of the present day are constructed. The building was, of course, watched with the utmost care and impatience, but, curiously enough, it was found, after the car was done, that it was so wide that it would not clear the platforms of the stations on the line of the road where it was to run. As Mr. Pullman had put all his funds into the coach, and no one else was ready to contribute for constructing a new one on a smaller scale, he naturally lost heart in some measure. The car was stored at Chicago, and the enterprise was given up for the time being. No use was made of the vehicle until the assassination of President Lincoln finally gave the inventor the desired chance to enter on the road to fame and fortune. Mr. Lincoln's body was to be taken from Chicago to Springfield for burial, and the question of its transportation was brought up. Some one suggested that this unused palace drawing-room sleeping car be employed, and Mr. Pullman hurried to get it ready. The Chicago & Alton railroad, under the strain of the great excitement of the time, sent out gangs of men forthwith along the line to narrow up the station platforms and remove other obstructions so that the car might pass. This being done, the car was used as was proposed, and, as all the great newspapers of the world were intent on publishing every item of interest about the burial, Mr. Pullman's invention of course became the subject of universal comment. From that moment its success was assured.

The Pullman Company as it now exists was founded in 1867 with a capital of $1,000,000. Its stock to-day represents nearly $16,000,000, besides $2,000,000 debenture bonds. The Pullman cars are operated on nearly 80,000 miles of railway in the United States, Canada, Mexico and England, and in spite of some grumbling about charges, are universally recognized as the finest railroad equipment in any part of the world.—Boston Globe.

SWEET POTATOES.

How to Plant and Cultivate the Tender Young Sprouts.

The sweet potato can not be planted out before what may be called good corn weather, and as this will not occur before June, the middle of April is time enough to start the bed. Eighteen inches of manure, or just enough to give a gentle bottom heat, is sufficient, the sun under the glass doing most of the work. After the bed is made and heat started it is ready to plant. Lay over the manure six inches of sandy soil; if all sand, just as well or better. Halve the potatoes lengthwise and lay flat on the sand—they may nearly cover the ground. Sprinkle over the top just enough sand to barely cover the potatoes. After the young sprouts have started their roots into this sand and the tops are about six inches high, they are slipped off, and each shoot is a plant and ready for the ground. Only a light, friable soil will grow them profitably. This is thrown up by the plow into ridges four feet apart. The plants are dibbled out on these ridges one foot apart—the cut worm often destroys quantities of the sets, and must be watched for, destroyed when found, and other sets put out where needed. At least a couple of crops of sprouts can be taken from one set of tubers, and any time in June will do to plant them, so there is no danger of not having plenty of plants. It takes from 8,000 to 10,000 sets per acre. Stable manure is the best.—St. Louis Republican.

White Specks in Butter.

Your correspondent says in substance that white specks are occasioned by dry cream. With all her precautions, if she will place in the churn with her cream a quantity of thickly-soured milk she will find a corresponding quantity of white specks, as sour milk is the one and only cause of white specks. The sour milk forms a substance like cheese curd, which is separated only by the process of washing, while washing with a barrel churn the specks can nearly all be eradicated. She takes great stock in water setting, and here we will agree with her, on the ground that when milk is set in a creamer the cream is taken from the milk while the milk is perfectly sweet and free from any sour milk to form white specks, and from our experience we have become thoroughly convinced that no farmer can profitably conduct a dairy without a good creamery, especially a winter dairy, as the loss of cream in extremely cold weather will more than offset the expense of a good creamery.—Country Gentleman.

TERRORS OF THE SEA.

Cyclonic, Volcanic and Other Dangerous Types of Waves.

A wave is a thing of beauty, but it is only a joy to those who watch it marching in splendor and foam from the safe refuge of the shore. It is a very nauseating condition of voyaging. It makes the bones of ships creak as if they were full of rheumatism. It fills the brain with a sense of chaos, and one moment swings the moaning traveler to the stars and the next plunges him into an abyss hideous with gloom and the hissing as of millions of snakes. To measure waves in a severe tempest is even more difficult than to mark effects. When the weather rises to such fury as makes the seas colossal enough to render the determination of their height exceedingly important, there is usually too much anxiety, and even distraction, for observation. The weight of the wind is so violent that it is almost impossible to show one's face to it.

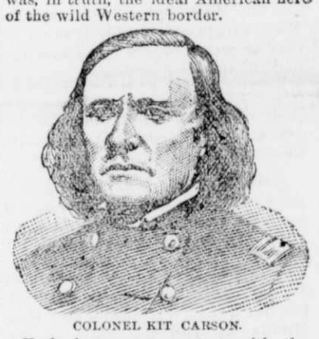
For the true Andean sea one must go down to Cape Horn—perhaps to as far as sixty degrees south. There are sailors who, standing at the wheel of a ship running before these seas, will never willingly look behind them, lest the sight of the oncoming rampant of green water, arching toward the taffrail, should unnerve them. Standing on a deck twenty feet above the water line, you yet look up at the crest of these seas as at the top of a mountain. The gigantic grace, the huge majesty of these liquid Titans can not be described. It is necessary to be hove-to to appreciate their height, volume and power; to watch from the low broadside the swelling approach of the mighty mass, with its freckled front and foamless head flickering in bottle green to the dull light of the gray sky; to feel the sweep of the ship up the enormous acclivity, and then, while for the space of a breath only, she hangs poised with upright masts and shrieking rigging on the headlong brow, to look down and behold the valley beneath, into which the vessel an instant after slides like a comet.

It is difficult to write of the seas which run in heavy weather off the southern-most point of South America without risk of being charged with exaggeration; they must be seen, and a little spell of custom will render admiration easy. It is impossible to be tossed by them in such vessels as now make the passage of the Horn without wondering by what miracle of luck or phenomenal merit of seamanship the old navigators were enabled to beat against them in their small, half-decked boats, some no bigger than a Deal lugger, without a touch of the weatherly qualities of such craft.

But let it not be supposed that the high wave is the dangerous one. The regular running surges may all be as tall as the biggest hotel in London with a ninth fellow among them as high as the monument, and yet none prove nearly so dangerous as the pyramidal seas of the cyclone. Of all forms of vexed water the cyclonic agitation is the worst. Here is a whirlwind of astonishing fury so many miles in diameter. For a little while it runs a steady sea, but presently its gyrations brings up a surge from another quarter, then comes the lull, followed by a frightful outfly of storm from a direction opposite to the point from which the wind last blew. The seas, coming into collision, fight like wolves. They snap and howl, leaping high in conified shapes in the very similitude of sentient passion. The staggering of the ship is indescribable. There is no rythmic swing to give her motions something of the vibrations of the pendulum. Her decks are filled with water, while her bows dive into a chasm that has opened under her forefoot, a valley yawns under her stern and a hill of water flashes up on either side. It has not been suggested that the altitude of the cyclonic wave should be determined. Probably there is no eye afloat equal to such an undertaking.

Another very uncomfortable sea is the volcanic wave. It is not very long ago that a vessel, steaming through quiet waters on a dark night, was suddenly hurled up by an invisible billow that was reckoned to be between thirty and forty feet high. Three such waves passed under her, the last being the least in volume, and then all was dead flatness of ocean again. The stoutest heart might well thump to such an encounter as this.—London Telegraph.

Character Training at Home.



It is well for our moral reformers, who are just now so hard upon the common school for its deficiencies in moral training, to remember that the fair contrast is not between a great school in the lower wards of a metropolitan city and an ideal family in the most secluded, social, suburban preserve; but between that school and the homes of its children, and the swarming streets where they are "tempted of the devil" at every corner, and crowded like droves of cattle on the way to and from the school-house. If the critic would follow the children from their school hours through the rest of the week, he would see that a majority, even in the best community, are never under moral, sanitary, social and refining influences so elevated as in the school-house. Nothing is gained by such overstrained and one-sided pictures of the defects of the character-training side of the public schools as we are often called to witness in our educational gatherings. They do great injustice to the teachers and schools, and play into the hands of those malignant ecclesiastics, who forget that even a burning zeal for religion does not excuse from telling lies about the people's common school.—Education.

Food and Morality.

Prof. F. T. Miles, of the faculty of the University of Maryland, delivered a lecture to a large audience of young men recently, on "Food and Digestion." In the course of his lecture Prof. Miles, in speaking of the effects of an insufficient quantity of food, said: "The fat disappears first, then the muscles waste away, and finally the bones come through the skin. The brain, the spinal cord and the nerves are nourished to the last. Like a king in a beleaguered city to whom his loyal subjects give up their food, the nobler organs are longest nourished. In starvation there is not simple hunger of the stomach, but hunger of the whole body. It is not strange that when hunger presses on people they will do strange things. It produces insanity, and they have been driven to eating what has been called 'strange flesh;' that is to cannibalism. There are millions of people who have not enough to eat. It is at the bottom of anarchy. The police may give them a loaf of bread, but the whole body is ill-nourished, and a restless feeling results. Not much can be done with the grown-up people of the criminal classes, but the child criminal comes first. The criminal classes are called dirty, lazy and ugly. Of course they are. They are dirty because they have no spare heat to let go; lazy, because the muscles are weak and nature tells them to keep still when hungry. You would be astonished to know how much of the beauty of the fairest women is made up of fat. The criminal classes are ugly because they have no fat. How could a child whose muscles and nervous system have been partly starved be expected to have all the sympathies and instincts of a higher class of society? An every-day Sabbath-school with a breakfast before the lesson would be a capital thing for poor children. Some say the poor themselves are to blame for their condition by living too luxuriously. One of the most intense cravings of the Greely Arctic party was for sweetmeats. Tea and coffee do more good than harm. They stimulate not only the brain, but the activities of the whole body. There will be a great mission to the poor some day to see that they get enough good food.—Baltimore Sun.

A Famous Indian, and a Still More Famous Indian Fighter.

We give below a picture of KIT CARSON, the famous scout and Indian fighter, whose thrilling exploits surpassed in interest and adventure those of all other frontier heroes. KIT'S portrait shows that he was a very lion in courage and stern determination, and also a man of fine intellect. He was, in truth, the ideal American hero of the wild Western border.

COLONEL KIT CARSON.

KIT'S last great contest with the Indians occurred in 1867, the year before his death, when RED KNIFE, a perfect Indian fiend, suddenly attacked the defenseless settlers of the remote frontiers. A most graphic, spirited and thrilling account of that most desperate struggle is now being published in the New York Ledger, under the title of "RED KNIFE; OR KIT CARSON'S LAST TRAIL." RED KNIFE, as will be seen by the picture of him which we give below, was a typical Indian warr or and cut-throat. The history of his raid, and of KIT CARSON'S skill and heroism in meeting the perils of the occasion, is begun in No. 7 of the New York Ledger. ROBERT BONNER'S SONS have issued millions of sample copies of this number of the Ledger, but there are, probably, persons who have not yet had a copy, and we are informed that any one who has not had one of these sample copies can get one free of expense by simply sending his name and address to the Ledger office, at the corner of William and Spruce streets, New York. This is certainly an easy and cheap way to get a specimen number of the greatest Indian story ever published.

RED KNIFE

"Can I sell you six bushels of peach stones to-day?" he boldly inquired as he entered a Cleveland confectionery house. "No, sir!" was the prompt reply from the senior partner. The man went out, but he had not gone one hundred feet when he was overtaken by a gentleman who said: "I'm junior partner of the house. I do the peachstone business, while the senior attends to straight almonds and the church. I'll take your lot, and the next time you come inquire for me."—Wall-Street News.

FOR OUR YOUNG FOLKS.

A REGULAR LIVE BOY

He was not at all particular
To keep the perpendicular,
While walking, for he either skipped or jumped.
He stood upon his head awhile,
And, when he went to bed awhile,
He dove among the pillows, which he thumped.

He never could keep still a bit;
The lookers-on thought ill of it;
He balanced on his ear the kitchen broom;
And did some neat trapezing,
Which was wonderfully pleasing,
On every peg in grandpa's harness-room.

From absolute inanity,
The cat approached insanity
To see him slide the banisters, so rash;
But once on that mahogany,
While trying to toboggan, he
Upset his calculations with a crash!

And since that sad disaster
He has gone about in plaster—
Not of Paris, like a nice Italian toy;
But the kind the doctor uses,
When the bumps and cuts and bruises
Overcome a little regular live boy!

A GOOD IDEA.

A Common Kind of a Little Household Fairy and a Household Angel.

"How is your mother to-day, Ruthie?" Ruthie raised rather a discontented face to meet the very cheery one of their next-door neighbor.

"Oh, she's a great deal better, thank you, Mrs. Bright. She's been helping 'round a good deal this morning, for we've sent Nora away. She's gone to lie down, but she'll be glad to see you, I known."

"Don't disturb her, dear. I'm sorry she had to give up Nora so soon, but glad she got such a good little daughter to help her."

"Well, I don't know," said Ruthie, rather dolefully. "If I was bigger I suppose I might be some good, but I'm so little."

"A willing mind helps out small hands wonderfully, little girlie."

"May be so, but I've been wishing I could have lived in fairy times, Mrs. Bright."

"Why, dearest?"

"Oh! just think how nice it would be to have one come in all smiling and with a shining dress and long curling hair, and give one wave of her golden wand and have this kitchen all cleaned up before you had time to turn 'round."

Ruthie laughed as she spoke, and Mrs. Bright laughed with her.

"But it seems to me," said Mrs. Bright, "that the people in those times must have been rather a lazy set. Don't you think yourself, now, that it is a great deal better to stir around with a bright face and a light heart and quick little hand and set things right in just the way God meant us to do—hey, dearie?"

"Well, I suppose you are right, Mrs. Bright," said Ruthie, with an answering smile. "But it's day after day, and I do get so tired of plodding over the same things. It's dishes and kettles and pans, and pans and kettles and dishes."

"It's the spirit you put into the doing that will make it pleasant, dear. Try to look upon the kettles and pans as so many humble stepping-stones to raise you into the atmosphere of loving service. It is in the little things of life that the Master has given most of us the power to do for Him. So go on, dear. You can do far better than have a fairy to come and do for you. You can be a fairy yourself—a real household fairy, and work wonders if you try. Good-bye."

The cheery face disappeared, leaving its reflection on Ruthie's as she looked about her. The little conceit exactly suited her fancy.

"I believe that's a good idea," she said to herself. I am going to try how many wonders I can work before dinner time. It will surely be a wonder to get this kitchen clean. I've a good mind to go at it thoroughly, not to do it just half way. It always feels miserable to do things by halves, I think. But where shall I begin?"

She soon found a place to begin, and was striving with all her might to work a real transformation in the disorderly room. Nora had done the scrubbing and other heavy work before going away, but there was plenty still to be done in the large room which served for both sitting-room and kitchen. Ruthie paused in dismay as last of all she opened a corner cupboard.

"It hasn't been touched for weeks," she said, "and father and Ned have tucked away every thing into it."

For a moment she felt tempted to give it a hasty touch or two and leave it for a more leisurely day.

"No, I won't," she said, firmly. "Fairies never slighted their work, at least any that I have ever read of. I'm going to get to the farthest corner. But, there's baby!"

She softly stole into her mother's room and brought out the curly-haired darling, who seemed a little inclined to be fretful after his sleep. But she petted and coaxed him until with a crust in his hand he was quite content to be tied into his chair and watch her as she went into the farthest corner.

"Oh! here's your jumping-jack, baby." And he crowed with delight as she brought out the long buried treasure. "And here is Ned's skate-key that he's been moaning about for weeks and always had to borrow of the other boys. And oh, oh, if here isn't my story book that I only half read through. How did it get in here, I wonder! Well—there's nothing like giving things a good going over once in awhile. How long I've been hunting for that!

"Now, baby, if you'll only be good a little while longer, I'll try to make some biscuits for dinner, I know exactly how mother does them."

Whether it was the jumping-jack or the brightness in Ruthie's face, no one knows, for he never told, but baby behaved like a jewel, as Ruthie made her first venture on the biscuits.

"I might have done it long ago," she said, as a little more than half an hour later she took from the oven a pan of biscuits, light and nicely-browned, such as any cook might be proud of. "But there are plenty of things I might have done long ago, if I had only thought so. But I wasn't a fairy then."

"O mamma, here you are!" Ruthie looked proudly about the room as mamma's quick eye took in every detail of the thorough cleaning, even to the corner cupboard, which had been purposely left open.

"I heard Mrs. Bright's voice some time ago, but I felt like resting, so I did not come in. She has been helping you, hasn't she? I heard her talking about fairies—she's a good fairy herself, I'm sure."

"Indeed, mamma," said Ruthie, laughing merrily, "Mrs. Bright hasn't done a thing. I was telling her I wished a fairy would come and wave her magic wand for me and have every thing done in a flash, and then she said I'd better be a fairy myself. I think it would be a pretty nice thing to be a real fairy," the little girl chatted on, as she set the table, "for then I'd have a splendid carriage for you to ride in, mamma, and you should never do a bit of work again, and baby should have a clean white dress every day. But as I can't be that kind of a fairy, Mrs. Bright thinks I'd better be a common kind of a little household fairy. So I've been trying that."

"You are the dearest little fairy in the world," said mamma; "and see, you have two little wands instead of one."

Mamma kissed the dear little hands as she spoke, but added:

"There's one thing better even than a household fairy, and I think that is what you are to me."

"What, mamma?" asked Ruthie.

"A little household angel, dear."—Sydney Dayre in Chicago Advance.

THREE YOUNG SCAMPS.

The Prank They Played, and How They Were Caught in Their Own Trap.

It was a very hot day, and rainy, too. "Regular dog-day weather," old Mr. Spriggins said, "if it is the month of June."

It was too rainy for the boys to play out-doors at noon-time, so you may know it rained hard. The smaller children played "Tea-kettle's boiling over!" in the entry; but that was too small game for our three rogues.

"How hot it is!" said Tommy Trow, mopping up his face with a very dirty handkerchief.

"Have to make up a fire to cool off by," said Billy Coe, who was always saying queer things.

"Let's do it," cried Titus Rowe, the harum-scarum boy of the school. "Let's make a fire and roast 'em out this afternoon."

So the three young scamps went to work to get together wood and kindlings, and made up a fire in the big, rusty stove. By the time one o'clock and Miss True came the school-room was "just as hot as a pepper-pot."

The scholars, as they came in one after another, looked disgusted, and fanned themselves with their books.

Miss True quietly shut up the stove, and opened all the windows and the door. Then, by a few direct questions, she found out who made the fire.

Moving up a chair each side of the stove, and one behind it, she called on Tommy, Billy and Titus to come with their books, and occupy the three chairs. Then she gave all the others seats near the open windows, and commenced recitations.

How those boys did sweat and swelter! "Please, Miss True, mayn't I go to my seat?" asked Tommy, after a while.

"No," said Miss True, so decidedly that the others did not dare to ask.

How they did long for recess time, that they might go out in the rain and cool off! But when recess came they were kept in instead, and very much ashamed they looked.

"If you are sure you are warm enough now, boys," said Miss True, when recess was over, "you may take your seats for the rest of the day." And very glad they were to do it.

"I tell you," said Billy, on the way home, "you won't catch me making another fire on a hot day."

"Nor me," said Titus. "I like to have roasted to death!"

"Yes, 'twas awful," sighed Tommy; "but I couldn't help thinking she served us just right."

And nobody denied it.—Our Little Ones.

THE POISONED KEY.

How Padua's Tyrant Disposed of Disagreeable Companions.

Another delightful relic of the life and times of the Tyrant of Padua is a simple key—about the size of an ordinary door key. It was the key of the Duke's library in his private room. When he wanted to get rid of any of his suite or any person in his household that he had a bitter feeling against, he used to ring his bell and ask for Mr. John to be sent to him (fancy name of course.) When John entered the Duke would say: "O, John, I wish you would go to the book-case in my private room and bring me the 'Dagonet Ballads.'" "Certainly, your Grace," Mr. John would say, and away he would trot with the key in his hand. When he got to the library he would put the key in the lock of the book-case and turn it. But directly he turned it, out of the handle of the key shot a long poisoned needle, which stabbed the hand of the holder and instantly shot back again. John would let go of the key and say: "What the deuce was that." He would look at his hand and see only a small, dark blue spot. He would think nothing of it but all of a sudden he would begin to feel queer in his head. Presently some one would come in and find him in a fit on the floor and the household would be alarmed. "Mr. John has had a stroke of a fit," the people would say. A doctor would be sent for, but his services would be of no avail. In twenty-four hours Mr. John would be dead and everybody would think he had died through a fit. There were no bothering coroners' inquests to upset the plans of clever fellows like the Duke Francis in those days.—George A. Linds, in Referee.

—Recent researches by Prof. Brown-Sequard demonstrate that a liquid obtained from the vapor of air from the lungs is so poisonous that a dose of twenty centigrammes (less than four grains) sufficed to kill a dog in about seven hours.

A writer in Science comes to the conclusion that as a result of his investigation "it seems idle to discuss further the influence of forests upon rainfall from the economic point of view, as it is evidently too slight to be of the least practical importance. Man has not yet invented a method of controlling rainfall."

—It is found that living creatures brought up from sea depths of four miles or more, suffer greatly from the changed conditions of pressure and temperature. At those vast depths the pressure is tremendous, and the temperature is comparatively low. —The secondary nature of the gravel deposits in which placer mines occur implies that they are found at an average lower altitude than the quartz veins, from which they are derived by erosion. The average height of placer mines is about 3,000 feet, the highest being 10,000 feet above the sea level. Owing to their mode of formation, placer mines are usually more accessible than the quartz, and do not require so great an amount of material for their workings.

—M. P. Ledeboer said before the Academy of Sciences in Paris that although it had long been known that a magnet raised to a red heat loses its magnetic properties, it had only lately been determined by direct measurement at what actual degree of temperature iron ceases to be a magnetic body. By his experiments he showed that iron remains magnetic up to 650 degrees C., after which a rapid variation is noticed in its magnetic condition. At 750 degrees the magnetic properties are scarcely perceptible, while at 770 degrees they disappear altogether.

Cleansing Ladies' Hair.

We object to the use of carbonate of potash by hairdressers for cleansing the hair of their customers. The cleansing action of this powerfully alkaline substance is very effective, but it is prejudicial to the hair at the same time. A teaspoonful of pulverized borax in a cup of boiling water, or cleansing the hair with the yelk of a fresh egg, and following this with a warm solution of borax or salt and water, especially sea-water, is much preferable, and has the effect of cleansing and softening the skin of the scalp. Eastern ladies, remarkable for beauty of their hair, adopt the latter mode of cleaning it.—Herald of Health.

TEMPERANCE READING.

"THE BEST OF MOTHERS."

[The Mother of Dr. Benjamin Rush.]

"The best of mothers," so the inscription read
On an old tombstone gray
With lichens, standing o'er the lowly bed
Where a dear mother lay.

Above it, half effaced by hand of time,
Was carved her humble name;
With date of birth and death, no other line
Told aught of earthly fame;

Or mention made of virtues great and rare,
Or of heroic deeds,
Wrought by her hands along the pathway where
Were deepest human needs.

But on that crumbling stone I read between
The blurred and moss-grown lines
The record of a life whose work unseen
Shall with new luster shine,

When proudest monuments in dust are laid;
When earthly pomp and power,
With all their boasted splendors, shrink and fade,
The glory of an hour.

Unknown, unnoticed by the busy world,
She sought with patient care
To train the child which Heaven has lent to her,
A noble part to bear

In the unceasing conflict carried on
On life's great battle-field;
And that he might, with steady hand and true,
A ready weapon wield.

Armed with that mother's prayers and counsels true,
Forth to the strife he went,
And bravely fought, while in each steady stroke
Courage and love were blent.

And dire disease beneath his skilful hand
Released its hateful hold;
And want and woe, with their attendant band
Of miseries untold,

Fled from before him, while the demon, rum,
Received the fatal blow,
Which it has sought in vain to overcome;
Presaging overthrow.

Wisely and well that mother's work was done;
And when, God called her home,
"The best of mothers" were the loving words
Inscribed upon her tomb.

—Mrs. E. K. Cheadle, in Woman's Magazine.

FEARFULLY DEBASING.

The Moral Degradation Following the Use of Rum—The Brain Seared, the Intellect Confused, the Stomach Diseased and the Will-Power Destroyed.

It is not alone in a business or spiritual way that the rum habit is terrible. Among the most frightful evils connected with it are its effects upon its victim's social habits and moral nature. He who has become the slave of the rum devil can no longer find relaxation in quiet and pleasant social intercourse, because it is too tame for him. The fire that is burning within him requires a fiercer fuel. There is something brutalizing in rum, which requires quite different surroundings from the pleasant home fireside and the smooth, even enjoyments of the family circle around the evening lamp. No confirmed drunkard can be satisfied with the pure society of his wife and family; the gleeful prattle of his children has no music for him. He wants a coarse, impure crowd of boon companions, and if it contains a female element, she is taken from the shameless sisterhood who sell their bodies, and their souls at the same time, for gold.

Such men weary of their homes. There is no home for them but the rum-hole, gambling hell, or the resorts of vice—and if they can combine all three, they like it better. The earthly paradise of such a man is a gambling game in the society of similar men and lost women, with a sideboard, loaded with rum in various forms, at his right hand. He then has his entire hell within reach. The hours are spent in vulgar jest and ribald song, in vice and drunkenness, until exhausted Nature will bear no more, and the worn-out physical system finds a sort of feverish relief, which is of use only because it is a cessation of a still more feverish wakefulness.

Not only does rum debase its victim's morals, but it deadens the intellectual taste and destroys the purer pleasures of the mind. Such a man finds no enjoyment in literature. It is impossible for him, with a rum-soaked brain, to sit down quietly and read pure literary works. What, to the confirmed drunkard, even though he be an educated man are the pages of Thackeray, or the wizard work of Sir Walter Scott? Can such a man revel in the literary beauties of Milton's "Paradise Lost," the placid numbers of Thomson's "Seasons," or the cheerful pages of Young's "Night Thoughts?" Can he find any solace in the perusal of religious books or any instruction from a volume of natural science? His taste is fearfully depraved, and only the licentious volumes of such high-priests of literary nastiness as Zola for instance, can tempt him to an attentive perusal. For pure literature he has lost all taste. You shall find no red noses in a public library, any more than at a prayer-meeting. Rum and good taste are incongruous. They can no more mix than oil and water.

This utter deterioration of the moral and intellectual qualities, due to the rum habit, is paralleled, too, by the utter destruction of the will-power. Rum sears the brain, confuses the intellect, and destroys all purity of taste, all strength of will. From the time that the drinking of rum is a pleasure, till the bloated and diseased body loses its hold on life, this fearful weakening of the will goes on. The beginnings of the drunkard's career are pleasant. The introduction of this demon into the physical system produces a pleasurable exhilaration. The experiment is repeated again and again, until the pleasure which at first attended the swallowing of the poison disappears. Then the claws come through the velvet, and the victim finds himself in the clutches of a merciless tyrant instead of in the hands of a laughing friend.

The stomach, inflamed and diseased which was before soothed and titillated by rum, now inexorably demands a supply. It is no longer a question of pleasure at all. No matter how much the system may loathe the taste of rum, it must have it. If the craving is not supplied, there is a depression following the excess (and the drinking of any alcoholic liquor is an excess), and the poor drinker, sick from the reaction, knows of but one way to raise himself from the pit of his own digging into which he has fallen. The depression is so great, the craving so strong, that he flies to rum again, and is temporarily raised from out the earthly hell caused by his own excess.

Under the renewed stimulus, life puts on a new face, and the world is again full of joy. The depression is thus followed by a new elation, just in proportion to the amount swallowed. To illustrate: If the man is in debt, he is sure to worry over it when in the depressed stage. One drink makes payment possible to his imagination; two makes it probable, three assure it, four give him the feeling of having a surplus in bank, five the ownership of wealth, and so on in the ascending scale. Of course, when the intoxicating effect of the rum dies out of his brain, the stage of depression follows again, only slightly deeper than its predecessor. The temporary cure is the same—more rum; and each time it requires a somewhat greater quantity. On and on he goes, until health fails, the will power is gone, resistance to the subtle demon is impossible, and lastly death comes in to finish the tragedy.

Even when the stomach has first become so inflamed as to have this wild craving for rum established, if the man had will-power enough to simply stop, and refuse, no matter at what cost of temporary physical suffering, to touch the infernal poison, he could be saved. But here is the awful evil of the rum habit. So swiftly does this devil's decoction do its debasing work, that by the time the taste for it has become a habit, the will is so paralyzed, the strength of mind so sapped, that resistance to the craving is almost impossible. Were the victim but firm, the stomach would rally, the system recover its tone and the power of rum over him be broken. But it has sapped the foundations of mental strength, and the will is weak as water under the horrible thirst and craving of the disordered system.

The great trouble with men who being dalliance with this devil of rum is that they have the hallucination that they can stop drinking whenever they choose. Such a man boasts, and with apparent sincerity, that he can "quit when he pleases." Nothing is so dangerous as this belief, because it is founded upon complete ignorance and misapprehension of the nature of man's physical system. At the very beginning it is true; and because it is true, they do not quit. They keep on, because they can do so safely. And they still continue, until what at the beginning was an indulgence that could be relinquished at will becomes a merciless master, because the will to resist is gone.

Rum destroys the will-power exactly in proportion to the amount of the indulgence. The man who to-day is not so far gone but that he can quit at any time, but does not, becomes in another year a man who would quit, but can not. He says he will, but when the awful depression comes over him, he wavers, thinks he will "brace up" just once, and quit then; but he finds his mistake again. The first "bracer" must be supplemented by another, and that by yet another. Social drinking comes in after dinner, and the man who determined in the morning to quit, goes to bed drunk at night. And so he goes on the road to ruin, till finally, all power of resistence gone, he abandons himself to rum, and dies the death of a drunkard.

Hell is full of drunkards who once declared they "could quit when they pleased." The trouble is, they never "pleased," but kept on under this fatal delusion till they found themselves powerless in the clutches of an appetite that could never be satisfied, and whose inevitable end is death.

There is no way to stop a man whose will power is weakened but by rendering it impossible for him to obtain rum in any form. There is no way to prevent the vast mass of men who are not yet familiar with rum, but who were born with weak wills, from succumbing to its temptations, save by rendering such temptation impossible.—Toledo Blade.

Has It?

Has the liquor traffic ever built a church, asylum, or endowed a college?

Has it ever set a standard of business character which is recognized in banks and counting-rooms?

Has it ever given society a single great-brained and great-hearted man?

Has it ever made a wife happier than she would be with a sober husband?

Has it ever led a youth up into noble manhood?

Has it ever paid its own way as a revenue returner?

Has it ever lessened crime and criminals?

No, no! Then, has it not been weighed and found wanting, and been condemned as a malefactor?

Dare you sustain such an agency and claim to be a good citizen?—The Issue.

THE first W. C. T. U. in Mexico has been formed in the City of Mexico, with Mrs. E. G. Taber as president. The Spanish language will be used in conducting the work.

THE drunkard and the snake's rattle are alike warnings for those who would not be bit.

Stray Shots for Protection.

A half way tariff is the worst sort of a tariff.

England and Canada are shaking hands over the prospect of free trade with this country.

This country never yet lagged in the march of progress, and doesn't propose to do so now.

Mem. for Chairman Mills: The American people will be heard upon your motion to sell them out.

Every pound of foreign wool imported displaces an equal amount of home prouduct. Remember that.

Wool and salt are chosen for the free list this time. Coal and iron ore will go next, if this first step succeeds.

No workingman need apply to the Ways and Means Committee—the voice of labor is lost in the yell for free trade.

Life is too short for mistakes, too serious for experiments in theories. We know where we stand under Protection.

A million wage-earners have nearly six millions in the savings banks of this State. Oh! the blight of Protection!

Wool, potatoes, peas, beans, tomatoes—all vegetables in fact—put on the free list. Does the farmer like the prospect?

Anglo-maniacs may wear all the foreign wool hats they want, but they ought to pay for them. An American wool hat is good enough for sensible people.

Hundreds of thousands are pouring into our country to escape a pauper life abroad. What can be offered them if we get down to the foreign wages level?

The Mills of Texas would grind fast if permitted, and crush out our most prosperous industries. The wheels won't turn, though, while Uncle Sam is at the crank.

In the Argentine Republic there are 100,000,000 sheep and the herders are paid $3 per month, while in Montana they get $40 per month. The tariff maintains this difference in wages.

If wool goes on the free list, every farmer who shears his sheep this spring might just as well kill the animals at the same time. If he doesn't, the free trade policy will soon do it for him.

If there are any two materials in the tariff list which, on Mr. Mill's principles, ought to be free, they are iron ore and coal. But the free traders have not put these articles on the free list, because they are mined in free trade States. Is this an honest revision?

There are along the Hudson nearly one hundred brick yards, the aggregate output of which for the past season was about 800,000,000 of brick of all grades. And the new tariff bill puts brick on the free list, so as to destroy this great industry, or reduce the wages of the brick makers to the foreign level!

A new generation of revenue reformers is urging us to adopt the same theories by which their fathers led us into disaster. Shall we listen to and be misled by their doctrines, or shall we not rather be guided by the solid facts of experience, which prove to us that the American policy of protection and encouragement to labor and industries is better than theories or maxims of the sham science of political economy?

The Mills bill as published begins with "Be it enacted." It has no preamble stating its purpose. It is not described as "A Bill to Reduce American Wages and Diminish Employment," or "A Bill to Enable the United States to Take the Frst Firm Step toward Free Trade." or "A Bill to Enact so much of President Cleveland's Proposals as the American People will Stomach," or "A Bill to Make the American People Prosperous by Making them Idle," or "A Bill to Elevate the United States to the Level of Irish Prosperity."—Irish World.

That excellent and conservative journal, the United Presbyterian, expresses itself very earnestly, and we think forcibly, upon the signing of petitions for liquor licenses by professing Christians. "To the thoughtful and conscientious (it says) there can be but one answer as to the propriety of Christians giving their names for such a use. The saloon and the church have nothing in common. In its character, in its workings, and in its results, the saloon stands as the monster iniquity of our day. It has no virtue, and it does not spare virtue. It is relentless in working ruin. No appeal can reach its heart; no argument can change its purpose. It has not any thing in common with the religion of Jesus. He came to seek and to save the lost; it seeks the upright and the good that it may drag them down to hell. In all the outgoings of its influence, the church blesses men. Goodness, truthfulness integrity, purity and happiness grow up around it. The saloon blights all that comes under its influence; its poisonous breath is death. There can be nothing in common between earnest and spiritually-minded church members and the saloon.

"No, it is not for Christians to give their names for such uses. They should have no fellowship with the works of darkness, but rather reprove them. A Christian's name there! Can one imagine his Master's name to such a petition?"

Divorces in Various Countries.

Australians.—Divorces have never been sanctioned in Australia.

Jews.—In olden times the Jews had a discretionary power of divorce their wives.

Javans.—If the wife be dissatisfied she can obtain a divorce by paying a certain sum.

Thibetans.—Divorces are seldom allowed, unless with the consent of both parties, neither of whom can afterward re-marry.

Moors.—If the wife does not become the mother of a boy she may be divorced with the consent of the tribe, and she can marry again.

Abyssinians.—No form of marriage is necessary. The connection may be dissolved and renewed as often as the parties think proper.

Siberians.—If the man be dissatisfied with the most trifling acts of his wife, he tears her cap or veil from her head, and this constitutes a divorce.

Corean.—The husband can divorce his wife and treasure, and leave her the charge of maintaining the children. If she proves unfaithful he can put her to death.

Siamese.—The first wife may be divorced, not sold as the others may be. She then may claim the first, third and fifth child, and the alternate children are yielded to the husband.

Arctic region.—When a man desires a divorce he leaves the house in anger and does not return in several days. The wife understands the hint, packs her clothes and leaves.

Druse and Turkoman.—Among these people, if a wife asks her husband's permission to go out and he says "go," without adding "but come back again," she is divorced. Though both parties desire it they cannot live together again without being remarried.

Cochin China—If the parties choose to separate they break a pair of chopping sticks or a copper coin in the presence of witnesses, by which action the union is dissolved. The husband must restore to the wife the property belonging to her prior to her marriage.

American Indians.—Among some tribes the pieces of sticks given the witness of the marriage are broken as a sign of divorce. Usually new connections are formed without the old ones being dissolved. A man never divorces his wife if she has borne him sons.

Tartary.—The husband may put away his partner and seek another when it pleases him, and the wife may do the same. If she be ill-treated she complains to the magistrate, who, attended by the principal people, accompanies her to the house and pronounces a formal divorce.

Chinese.—Divorces are allowed in all cases of criminality, mutual dislike, jealousy, incompatibility of temper, and too much incapacity on the part of the wife. The husband cannot sell the wife until she leaves him, and becomes a slave to him by action of law for desertion. A son is bound to divorce his wife if she displease his parents.

Grecians.—A settlement was usually given to a wife at marriage for support in case of a divorce. The wife's portion was then restored to her, and the husband required to pay monthly interest for its use during the time he detained it from her. Usually the men could put their wives away on slight occasions. Even the fear of having too large a family sufficed. Divorces now scarcely ever occur in modern Greece.

Hindoos.—Either party for a slight cause may leave the other and marry. When both desire it there is not the least trouble. If a man calls his wife "mother," it is considered indelicate to live with her again.

"Yes, Flossie," said her mother, "poor Willie Waffles never saw his father. He died before Wille was born."

This seemed to affect Flossie very much.

"Well, mamma," she said, drawing a long breath, "I'm glad you didn't die before I was born."

The heroes of mankind are the mountains, the highlands of the moral world. They diversify its monotony; they furnish the water shed of its history.

Forbearance and self-control smooth the road of life, and open many ways which would otherwise remain closed

The File-Grinder's Story.

I met an old "nle-grinder" a few years since, who told me that in the room where he had worked nearly twenty years were twelve massive grindstones. Each stone had its boss, who daily "dressed" it, and, mounted on a wooden seat above it, and ground files. Occasionally a stone, while going at full speed, would burst flying in all directions with tremendous velocity; and as two men had been killed in that room, and a stone might burst at any time, it made the men quiet and cautious; yet among them all there was no Christian.

It was just after the noon hour, and the operatives had come in from a half-hour discussion about the genuineness of recent conversions among some of the "furnacemen." The general opinion was that it was a matter of imagination; and that if there was a God no man had ever heard from Him—that he never did call or warn any one.

The "speed" had started, the grinders were in their places, and work was progressing rapidly, when one of the men got down from his seat, pale and agitated, and staggered to the other side of the room. He was hardly able to speak for an instant, but when pressed, said:

"Boys, something or somebody said to me, 'Get down from your seat; the stone will burst.'"

"He had hardly said his, when the heavy stone over which he had been working burst in pieces, crushing his seat to a shapeless mass, and breaking the heavy "gia ds" as if they were glass.

There was no more scoffing that day.

"Sir," added the old file-cutter, "we all felt that it was God who spoke; and it made us pretty thoughtful. The man to whom it happened died last year a happy Christian, and there are five of us in that room that are trying to serve God. It is hard work to keep straight there, but it pays. A man can do his work better; and he feels that if a stone should burst and kill him, it would be all right with him."

"So you think that God really spoke to that man, do you?" said I.

"Certainly I do, sir," he said earnestly. "He saw that we were all asleep; that it would take a loud, strong voice to awaken us, and so he spoke as he did, loud and strong, and we could not help hearing."

Friend, look back over your life. Has not God spoken to you many times! Have your ears become so deafened by the clatter of the world's machinery that you can no longer hear his voice? You are in danger.

Pearls of Thought.

The line of life is a ragged diagonal between duty and desire.

Whatever you dislike in another take care to correct in yourself.

Never think you can make yourself great by making another less.

Genius without ambition is as useless as a cannon ball without powder.

A great many trials of life would cease to trouble us if we only thought how little they will matter a thousand years hence.

This mystery of sleep! If we could fathom them, we should have fathomed ourselves and life and death!

Let every man take care how he speaks or writes of honest people, and not set down at a venture the first thing that comes uppermost.

I have always looked upon it as the worst condition of man's destiny that persons are so often torn asunder just as they become happy in each other's society.

We find it hard to get and to keep any private property in thought. Other people are all the time saying the same thing we are hording to say when we get ready.

Inexhaustable good nature is the most precious gift of heaven, spreading itself like oil over the troubled sea of thought and keeping the mind smooth and equable during the worst weather.

A man without reproach, from whom the breath of scandal passes like common breath from any other polished surface, could afford to do what common could not.

EIGHT PAGES.

THE rapid advance made by The Morning Herald during the past year, has been a marvel to all familiar with the subject. Not only has the volume of advertising been immensely large, but the increase in circulation is without a precedent in the history of Baltimore Journalism. The cause of this is apparent. The Morning Herald was a better paper in 1887 than in the preceding year. It will be a better paper in 1888 than in 1887. It will continue to be the cheapest of dailies—one cent being the price. It publishes all the Associated Press News. It has a complete corps of correspondents throughout Maryland, Virginia, West Virginia, Southern Pennsylvania and other states, thus being able to promptly furnish the news for a widely extended region. Its LOCAL NEWS is preeminently the fullest and most accurate of any Baltimore daily. Its Washington Correspondence is bright, and covers the vast field of National Politics which center at the National Capital. It proposes to publish the most exhaustive and comprehensive reports of legislative doings at Annapolis. It is absolutely independent in politics. Its utterances upon public topics are impartial and fearless. It is clean, able, brief. These are the reasons for the constantly increasing popularity of The Morning Herald.

THERE is no Sunday paper in any city of the Union, the pages of which are more replete with news, with bright contributions, with able articles especially prepared by writers of national distinction, and with letters on engrossing topics from the leading literateurs of the day, The Sunday Herald is acknowledged to be the gem of Baltimore journalism. Its special cable reports are more complete than those of any paper south of New York. It is the only Baltimore paper that publishes a regular letter from Richmond, the only one that publishes full reports of Society events throughout Maryland and Virginia. Its sporting news is noticeably superior to that of all rivals, and it excels in all the elements that go to make up an attractive, able and readable Sunday journal.

THE Weekly Herald is indisputably the cheapest weekly published in the United States. It consists of eight pages almost entirely devoted to reading matter. Each issue contains a whole page of Maryland news, a full synopsis of the debates in Congress, the laws passed, Senate and House proceedings, and the cream of the news from the National Capital. It will, as usual, publish each week the Talmage sermon, together with a long list of contributions from leading writers. Its market reports are unexcelled for completeness and reliability. Its literary department is bright: It is the paper for the home and the shop, the farmer, the merchant, the lawyer, the artisan, and for all who want the best paper for the price ever published.

☞ At great expense, a complete ART DEPARTMENT has been added to the equipments of the HERALD PUBLISHING COMPANY, and, beginning the fourth week in January, the pages of each edition of the paper will be replete with illustrated articles and sketches. The illustration of the important news of the day has grown to be a necessity which has been promptly recognized by The Morning Herald without regard to outlay.

VALUABLE STOCK FARM FOR SALE.

I am authorized to sell the valuable stock farm, commonly known as the "Willink Farm," situated about four miles from Oakland, and containing 465 acres. About 200 acres are cleared and under a good state of cultivation. The improvements consist of

LARGE DWELLING HOUSE,

Tenant House, Barn and other out-buildings, and a young orchard.

There is also a five-foot vein of excellent coal on the tract. The farm will be sold for $10,000 dollars, in easy payments.

The improvements cost more than the price asked. This is considered to be one of the best stock farms in the county.

An Exensive Luxury.

The people of Maryland are paying a heap of money of late years for their laws. They are paying too much money and are getting very poor laws; most of them, in fact, are worse than no laws at all. The general assembly adjourned last night at midnight after consuming at least two thirds its most valuable time in the discussion of measures which were of no value to the public and if passed would have forever branded the assembly at Annapolis with the brand of disgrace. The redistricting gerrymander was a sample of this. It was beyond doubt the intention of the bosses up to the very last moment that the bill should pass. The only difficulty that stood in the way of its passage was the inability of the chief of the bosses to understand just what their scheming masters wanted done. This inability to train their tools in the way that they should vote lost the bosses a number of chances which they fought for desperately.

Though the history of these ring machinations, as they are daily exposed by their own open faced rascality, the people of Maryland can plainly see what fabulous and unjust prices they are paying for laws that are of no value whatever in a general sense and for the making of laws that would be decided evil to the people if it was not for some few who are keen enough to notice the Legislative proceedings in the interest of the people and keep them informed on the character of certain measures. The whole cost to the people of the Legislature of 888 will be somewhere in the neighborhood of one hundred and twenty-one thousand dollars, which is twenty-six thousand dollars more than the original appropriation, a deficiency bill to the latter amount having passed both House and Senate. In return for the expenditure of this enormous sum the State of Maryland receives a few provisions concerning her tax law which may and may not prove of value, she receives the benefit of a new election law that may or may not prevent the tricks of the ring from being accomplished in the future, and beyond that she receives nothing. A few local bills of doubtful importance constitute the entire residue.

If this is not a disgraceful state of affairs then it is not in the scope of an independent local newspaper to recognize a disgraceful state of affairs when it runs up against it in the open daylight. For years the Democratic legislature of this State has been endeavoring to cut down expenses. It has been pointed out where from ten to twenty-five thousand dollars a session can be readily saved, but the idea of making an effort to save it never seems to materialize. Governor Hamilton in 1882 cut the expenses of the Legislature down to one hundred and five thousand dollars and endeavored to continue the good work. It did not continue. It got the reverse motion again and the expense bill has been growing larger at every subsequent session. The people of the State do not expect to get their laws for nothing. They are willing to pay for them. They want to pay for them. But they do not want to pay three times as much as they are worth and they do not want to pay for some of them are not worth anything. The Legislature of 1888 came to an end in time to save the people of the State considerable more expense and chagrin than they have already experienced. Nobody regretted to see it adjourn, because it is just as likely to do something after adjournment as it was before. It was not a do-something session. It was an expensive luxury to the people and one which they should determine not to entertain again. The State is rich but not too rich.—Frederick Daily News.

A grand jury in New York city made a presentment the other day in which it was stated that "ample evidence had been brought before them to prove open and extensive bribery, corruption, maladministration and violation of law" at the election last November, and that one of the election districts in the city was on that occasion "practically controlled by professional criminals." When one takes these startling statements in connection with the fact that the metropolis gives 40,000 to 50,000 Democratic majority, it is difficult to avoid the conclusion that it is a case of cause and effect. It is a fact, too, that all organized efforts in this country at corruption and fraud in elections have been in the interest of the Democratic party.

The Red-Haired Boy.

A New York mercnant, who is a Sunday School teacher, was called upon for a speech at a great Sunday School meeting out in the West.

He said: I'll tell you a story of a beggar boy. I started out one fine Sunday morning to get some recruits for my class. At the corner of the street I met a barefooted boy, without hat or coat, His head was fiery red and looked as if it had never been combed. I asked the boy if he would come to school.

"No, sir," was his sharp reply.

"You ought to go to Sunday School," I said kindly."

"What for?" he asked.

"We teach boys to be good," I said.

"But I don't want to be good."

Why do you not want to be good?" I asked.

"Because I'm hungry," was the quick reply.

"It is now nine o'clock," I said, looking at my watch, "Haven't you had any breakfast yet?"

"No, sir."

"Where do you live?"

"Up the alley there with aunty, she's sick."

"Will you eat some gingerbread and crackers if I go and get some?"

"Yes, sir, that I will, and be glad to get 'em."

I got some and set them before him. He ate them in a way which showed how keenly hungry he was. I asked him if he would like some more.

"A little more, if you please, sir," said the boy.

I got a fresh supply and set them before him. I waited until he had done eating, then I said:

"My boy, will you go to school with me now?"

"You've been so kind to me, sir," said he, "I'll go anywhere with you. Please wait till I take what's left of the gingerbread round to aunty, and then I'll go with you."

He returned directly to the sidewalk where I was waiting for him, and went with me to school. He had never been to school before. He thought of school as a place where boys had to hold out their hands to be slapped with a ruler, and have their hair pulled and their ears pinched. But when he found himself in the hands of a pleasant looking young lady, who treated him kindly, and said nothing about his shabby clothes, he was greatly surprised.

He became a regular attendant. He told all the boys of his acquaintance about school, and persuaded many of them to attend. About two years after this some boys from New York were sent out west and distributed among the farmers. My red-haired boy was sent among them. I used to hear of him for awhile, that he was getting on and doing well, I have lost sight of him for some years now, but I have no doubt he is doing good, wherever he is.

In a moment a tall, good-looking gentleman with red hair stood up in the meeting and said: "Ladies and gentlemen, I am that red-haired beggar boy of New York, who ate that gentleman's gingerbread. I have lived in the west for years, and have prospered. I am now a rich man, I own 500 acres of as good land as the sun shines on. My horses and carriage are at the door; and, when the meeting is over, I shall be happy to take my old friend to my home, where he will be welcome to stay as long as he pleases. I am a member of a Church, and a superintendent of a Sunday School, and I owe all that I have in this world, and all that I hope for in the next, to what was taught me about Jesus in the Sunday school."

Why Religious News is Not Reported.

How comes it that base ball and horse racing news is reported with great care and fullness, while the leading religious events are either ignored altogether or indifferently reported? Is it not because newspaper editors have learned that persons who belong to the theatrical or the sporting or the mercantile public buy their papers according as they find in them full, prompt and sympathetic treatment of theatrical, sporting and market news; whereas religious people, as such, do not discriminate in their patronage of newspapers with a corresponding exactness? In other words, do religious people feel as keen an interest in religious news as the base ball public feels in base ball news or as the horse racing public feels in the news of a horse race? Do religious people, to any considerable degree, choose one paper rather than another because one paper gives more prominence to religious news than another, or treats it with a more sympathetic apprehension? You can go up one bench and down another at a base ball game and every man in the crowd will tell you what papers of the next morning will have a glowing account of the match then in progress and which will dismiss it in a few cold lines, and very many of them will make their purchase of a paper on the following morning on that basis of choice. Now apply that mode of reasoning to religious people. Out of an audience assembled in a city for some notable religious occasion, how many will be able to predict the relative prominence that will be given to that meeting by the newspapers? And how many will go to the newspaper stand the following day and buy a paper confident, without looking it through, that it gives a good account of the event? In short, is it not, after all, a question of supply and demand?—Forum.

One Hundred Years Ago.

An observer who looks on life through a pair of glasses somewhat colored with humor, thus alludes to certain differences of social habit, conveniences and comfort between 1788 and 1888:

One hundred years ago wedding tours were not fashionable.

One hundred years ago the gin best known was not the cotton gin.

One hundred years ago farmers did not cut their legs off with mowing machines.

One hundred years ago there was no fast mail train between New York and Chicago.

One hundred years ago there were no disputes about the impoliteness of horse car drivers.

One hundred years ago people did not enjoy the inestimable pleasure of growling over gas bills.

One hundred years ago kerosene lamps did not explode and assist the kitchen girl in shuffling off her mortal coil.

One hundred years ago time and tide waited for nobody; now nobody waits for either time or tide.

One hundred years ago men did not commit suicide by going up in balloons and coming down without them.

One hundred years ago there was no steam on the canals—even the driver on the tow path didn't steam up in those days.

One hundred years ago a young woman did not lose caste by wetting her hands in dish water or rubbing the skin off her knuckles on the wash board.

One hundred years ago the physician who could not draw every disease from the system by tapping a large vein in the arm, was not much of a doctor.

One hundred years ago the producer could carry his surplus products to market on his horse,

One hundred years ago our fathers did not light their pipes with matches, but carried a fire in their pockets in the shape of a piece of punk, a pice of steel and a flint.

One hundred years ago a public officer or other citizen could not steal enough to make the act respectable, and insure the actor a prominent position in the "first circles."

Wanted Him Bad.

An unpretentious man entered the office of the proprietor of a great daily newspaper.

"Well, sir, what can I do for you?"

"I have come, sir, to ask you for a position as editorial writer on your paper."

"I don't think there is room for another man; still, using a homely phrase, we are ever on the lookout for good timber. Have you done much newspaper work?"

"None, sir,"

"But you think that you can shape the public sentiment, eh?"

"No, sir."

"Then why do you ask for a place?"

"On account of my fitness."

"Of your fitness? But what does your fitness consist of?"

"My absolute ignorance."

"You are surely a peculiar man. Want a position as editorial writer because you are absolutely ignorant?"

"Yes, sir."

"But of what use is an absolutely ignorant man? What would you propose to do?"

"Write articles on the tariff."

The proprietor caught a quick breath, placed one hand on the table to steady himself, and said: "Of course I want you, but I am surprised to see that you have resigned your seat in Congress."

OAKLAND, GARRETT CO., MD.

MY PAGE.

Long years ago I held within my grasp
An open page—a fair, white, goodly page—
Whereon to write a life. I filled it full
With love and love's sweet ministries, with home,
And the dear homely cares that make most full
A woman's life—my husband's sheltering love
And the soft prattle of a baby's voice.
And then, in very peace and restfulness,
I closed my eyes and said: "I thank Thee, Lord,
For life."

A moment only, then I heard:
"A happy, sheltered life—but 'tis not thine."
I reached my hand to grasp my treasured page;
It closed upon a bare, blank sheet—no more!
And still the voice said: "Write."

Through failing tears,
That blurred the page and well-nigh hid the lines,
With fainting heart and falt'ring hand I took
The pen. It seemed that there was nothing more
To write. I could not fill the page. One bare,
Bald word came to me as I wrote. That word
Was "duty," and I wrote it o'er and o'er.
And then—so tender is our God! so kind!—
The words grew luminous beneath my pen,
And as I wrote, were changed to "Peace" and "Joy."

"And was it then the same fair page?" Ah, no!
This had a margin, wide, and deep, and bare,
With many a name erased and line left out;
But 'twas my own—my very own—and all
I had; and, clutching it with death-like grip,
I held it to me as I wrote once more.

A whirlwind came—a tempest, fierce and wild,
Beat on my helpless head and bore me down;
It wrenched my page away, and beat it in
The ground; and then it passed and left me there,
A broken, prostrate thing. And ere the surge
And roar had ceased, there fell upon my ear
The same word, "Write."

"Why, Lord," I cried, "how can
I write? My page is gone; the fragments torn,
And soiled, and beaten to the earth. One scrap Alone I hold of all that once was mine!"
The voice said, tenderly: "Take that thou hast
And write." Awe-struck, I listened and obeyed.

I took the scrap, so pitifully small,
Smoothed out the crumpled edges and began;
And as I wrote—oh, marvel unforeseen!—
A hand invisible, divine, joined on Another scrap, and smoothed the seam, and made
It ready for my pen.

And thus, as days
Go on, the page still grows. 'Tis not the one
I fain would have; 'tis seamed and tempest-stained,
And blurred with many tears. 'Tis not the one
I planned; but, as I look at it, I know
It is the one my Father meant for me,
And so, because He bids me, still I write.

THE FRENCH COUNT.

Story of the "Man With the Diamonds."

Dudley Amerling was one of those peculiar beings called in the newspapers "men about town." He lived in excellent style with an unmarried aunt of uncertain years, dressed in fashion's most ridiculous extremes, always had plenty of money in his pocket, and as a consequence plenty of friends, and endeavored somewhat fruitlessly to amuse himself.

It was his custom every evening to lounge about the lobby of the Windsor Hotel, in the hope that something might occur that would interest him; I shall account for his presence in that house on the night when this story opens, without having bored my readers with irrelevant details.

Mr. Amerling had failed to meet anybody he knew, and was feeling the full force of an irresistible ennui. He threw himself listlessly upon one of the green velvet seats in the lobby, and in a few moments, the heat producing a comfortable lethargy, he dozed. Had he only known that his attitude was simply death to the wonderfully glossy expanse of shirt front which adorned his evening dress, he might have been less drowsily inclined.

Dudley Amerling awoke with a start. He had probably slept for an hour. The lobby was nearly deserted, but on the seat opposite to that on which he sat was a gentleman, the contemplation of whom soon aroused Mr. Amerling to utter wakefulness. His vis-a-vis astonished him. He saw a tall, slightly built young man, undeniably foreign and presumably French. Diamonds of purest ray serene glittered on his shirt front, a magnificent stone shone on his finger, his dress suit was exquisitely made, and he was enveloped in a fur overcoat, which must have cost many hundred dollars. Withal, there was no appearance of vulgarity in this display. The diamonds that on another man would have looked horsey and horrible, on this young elegant seemed entirely in place and almost necessary.

"Who the deuce can he be?" was the question Mr Amerling put first to himself and then to the hotel clerk, who answered rather abruptly that he didn't know. The clerk evidently resented the presence of any one wearing so many diamonds. They eclipsed his own. Hotel clerks love to be unique in their magnificence. They generally are.

Mr. Amerling was at the Windsor Hotel the following night. He went early and stayed late. He saw "the man with the diamonds," as he mentally christened the stranger, enter the hotel, and again occupy one of the cushioned seats, with a French newspaper. Young Amerling passed and repassed him, a prey to curiosity, but the man with the diamonds was apparently unconscious of this delicate attention.

For five nights this state of things lasted. Mr. Amerling went to the Windsor to unravel the mystery of the man with the diamonds. The gentleman declined to be unraveled until the sixth night. Every seat in the Windsor lobby was taken except part of that on which the man with the diamonds was seated. So Dudley Amerling found himself suddenly by the side of the stranger, who looked up with a pleasant smile.

"Good evening, sir," he said, with a French accent.

Mr. Amerling promptly returned the salutation, and then said by way of breaking the ice, which a salutation, by the by, only slightly chips: "You are a very diligent reader of the French papers. Do you not care for ours?"

The man with the diamonds dropped his eyes and said in a low tone: "I like to be reminded of my country. Ah, I am so miserable, here. I do not amuse myself. I have no friends. I am alone. But I return to France in a leetle time. Mon Dieu! how glad I shall be."

"I am sorry you don't like it here," said Dudley Amerling, gently. Then with Uncle Sam's instincts: "Most foreigners do."

"They have friends," was the tenderly sad reply.

"Did you bring no introductions?" asked Mr. Amerling.

"Ma foi, non!" was the answer. "My name, is it not an introduction in itself? Ah, monsieur, I see you do not know me. Pardon the conceit that makes me think you should." The man with the diamonds drew a dainty little card-case from his pocket, unfastened it, and presented to Mr. Amerling a card, inscribed with the name: "Le Comte de la Mauviere."

The young American started. No, he couldn't help regarding the man with the diamonds with wonderful respect, as soon as he heard he was titled. He looked at the Frenchman so long, that he suddenly remembered he had not returned his confidence.

"You have not told me your name?" said the count at last.

"Ah, pardon me." Dudley was now wide awake, and handed his card to the foreigner, who looked at it eagerly, and then smiled pleasantly. "It's a good name," he said, "a very good name."

"My family is one of the oldest in New York," began Mr. Amerling proudly. He loved to talk of his ancestors, and thought he could do so safely, as he personally remembered his grandfather. "I am quite sure you must have heard of us."

"I have heard of a Miss Anastasia Amerling, a maiden lady."

"She is my aunt," very promptly.

The count's eyes flashed. The look of eagerness in them became intensified. He seemed to lose control of himself. "She is very rich, is she not?" He was trembling with excitement.

"Yes, extremely comfortable, as far as the material wealth of the world is concerned," said Mr. Amerling, smiling. "We live very nicely, indeed."

"You live!" exclaimed the count in agitation.

"Yes," said Dudley. "She and I live together. I have no parents; lost them years ago."

The count closed his eyes. He was evidently in deep meditation. His breath came in gasps. He tried hard to control himself, but without much success. Mr. Amerling, however, who was decidedly obtuse, noticed nothing of this agitation. The count opened his eyes in a few seconds, and looked at Mr. Amerling. He was apparently waiting for something.

"We should like to see you, count!" (Ah! that was what the man with the diamonds was waiting for. He heaved a sigh of satisfaction.) "My aunt is at home a great deal, and," laughing, "she is extremely fond of foreigners."

"Ah! the kind Mlle. Amerling."

"You will come!"

"O, how kind of you, monsieur.'

"You'll surely come?"

"Surely, surely. Good night."

"Good night." They separated. Dudley Amerling walked briskly home, filled with satisfaction at his discovery. The count chuckled and rubbed his hands softly together. Anastasia Amerling, the rich maiden lady, only waiting to meet him. Ah! quelle chance!

Miss Anastasia Amerling had never been noted for her beauty, and certainly at this particular period in her life was far from attractive. She had not given up all hopes of matrimony. She still had an eye to business.

"Bring the Count to see me, by all means, Dudley," she said to her nephew when that young man had related his experiences at the Windsor Hotel.

It was a proud moment in Miss Amerling's life when, a few evenings after the events narrated above, "Le Comte de la Mauviere" appeared in delicate script on a dainty card that Miss Amerling held in her hand. The man with the diamonds was shown into the drawing room where Miss Amerling sat in state with her nephew. The Count's attire was faultless as usual. His diamonds, Dudley remarked, were entirely different to those he wore previously, but their value was, if any thing, greater, and their beauty undeniable.

Ah! ce cher comte," exclaimed the delighted Anastasia, breaking into French and simpering coquettishly. "Commong vous-portay-voo! Voo parly Ongly?" (This was, in reality, about the extent of Miss Amerling's conversational French, and she always made the most of it.)

"Un petit peu, mademoiselle," replied the man with the diamonds, bowing low. "I see," with a very strong accent, "that you spik my natif language vairy well. Ah! mademoiselle has been in France. She spiks like a French voman. Are you, indeed, not French?"

The artless Anastasia was enchanted. She cast a look of intense approval at the lucky count. Dudley Amerling bit his lip, and tried to control his laughter. The foreigner had evidently remembered his advice.

"I have been in Paris very often," said Anastasia, "and, of course, I picked up the language. But," shaking her head in a juvenile manner, "I am afraid I don't speak as well as I might, Count. I have a sad memory."

The man with the diamonds was undoubtedly anxious to find grace in the eyes of the fair Anastasia, and no better beginning could have been made.

"Count," said Anastasia, "you know that I am at home every Tuesday afternoon, and though" (with a simper) "I don't always allow gentlemen to come to my receptions, you may come. Can I expect you Tuesday afternoon? There will be a number of ladies here, tres gentilles, I assure you. Volly-vous veneer, mossieu?"

The man with the diamonds seemed to be taken aback. Dudley Amerling—that artless young man about town—thought the distinguished foreigner might not care to be the only man present. "I shall be there, count," said Dudley. "Do come. Aunt and I respect your modesty, but please come."

"I—I—don't think I sh—shall be able to," stammered the man with the diamonds. "I—I—rarely go out in the afternoons."

"Make this an exception, count," persisted the fair Anastasia. "Gentlemen of leisure can afford to make concessions to ladies."

But the count was really unable to come, he said. How much he should like to be able to do so, Mademoiselle Amerling would never know. He felt he was so lucky to have found such charmingly congenial friends. Ah! it was indeed a blessing.

"I congratulate you on your acquaintance, Dudley," said Aunt Anastasia, after the count had taken his departure. "He really is an extremely agreeable man. So commyfo, if you understand, and so wonderful d stangy. There are no people on the face of the earth so delightful to me as the French, Dudley. Did you hear what the ridiculous man said about my French accent? He thought I was a French woman. Well, Dudley, tell him to come as often as he likes. I am sure we need new blood in our set."

The man with the diamonds apparently found Miss Anastasia Amerling equally worth cultivating. He came frequently, always in the evening, and the names of the couple were linked together very often.

One evening, Miss Amerling was in a most kittenish mood, and the count was radiant.

"Next time you come," she said, "you will see me in a magnificent dress, which has been suggested to me, and I shall buy it, because I know you will like it. Voo Compreng, count! I am going to take a day off and do my own shopping for once."

"Do your own shopping!" You would have thought Miss Amerling had declared that she intended committing suicide from the terror-stricken tones in which the man with the diamonds spoke. "Do your own shopping, Mademoiselle Anastasia? I thought your maid always did it for you." The count was so excited that his accent had disappeared; but people do strange things when unduly aroused.

"Who told you that?" asked Miss Amerling, rather sharply.

"W—w—well, I—I—thought so," he stammered.

Miss Amerling looked at the man with the diamonds rather severely. "It is true," she said, "that for several years I have allowed my maid Melanie to do my shopping. She is a treasure of a girl, and I hate the magasangs, you know. But I can't permit myself to be so lazy always."

"Why not?" asked the count, uneasily. Miss Amerling put up her glasses and eyed him sternly. What did he mean? Was she to account to him for her doings, her comings and her goings?

"Because I don't choose to do so." But her good humor soon overcame her little vexation. "Ah, count, I forgot that you Frenchmen are what we call domestic busybodies—vou me pardonny, n'est ce pas. Well, let me admit you to another of my secrets, as I see you like to talk chiffony. (Count, I am really picking up my French again, thanks to you.) I am going, personally, to buy myself some new furs, very shortly."

Miss Amerling had not finished her sentence before the man with the diamonds had started to his feet. His face was as pale as a sheet. His lips trembled. He was horribly agitated. Anastasia was alarmed.

"Really, my dear count, I trust you are not ill?"

He did his best to recover his emotion, and he succeeded very soon. "It was nothing," he said with a sickly smile. "It was the—heat of the room." (O, blessed heat of rooms, how useful you are!) The man with the diamonds could not, however, recover his equanimity; something had occurred to disturb him; of that Miss Amerling was certain. What it was, however, she did not even suspect. He rose to take his leave very shortly. There was a question trembling on his lips, but he held it back until the last moment, very much in that spirit which prompts a woman to put her most important request in the postscript of her letter.

"When—do—y—you buy ours, furs, mademoiselle?" he asked.

Anastasia glanced at him coy. "You do not forget my furs," she said archly. "I'd tell you, if I knew, count, but I don't."

"W—w—where do you buy them?"

Miss Amerling again felt resentment at the question. It was not asked in an offhand manner, as the dear count certainly intended it should have been. There was a real anxiety for an answer in it.

"Where did you buy your fur coat, count?" she asked, rather imprudently.

The man with the diamonds positively jumped. It was not a start it was a jump he gave. His face was livid: he gasped for breath. Hastily wringing Miss Amerling's hand, he bade her good-night.

What did it mean? Miss Amerling asked herself.

Miss Amerling's forebodings disappeared with the clear sunshine of the following morning. After all, she reflected, the Comte de la Mauviere ought to be permitted the luxury of a few peculiarities. He was certainly a charming man; he was undeniably under her influence, and—well, there is no use mincing matters—Miss Amerling suddenly remembered that she was "getting on in years." Besides, she had gone rather too far to retract. Hippolyte—yes, that was his nom de bapteme—certainly knew that she was not averse to him—as they say in the love stories. Ah! she was too ingenious to be able to conceal her sentiments on any subject.

With what fervor and loving enthusiasm had he thanked her, when, after listening to his statement that money had not been forthcoming from France, she had handed him $500. What a ridiculous man he was to be so grateful for the loan of a few dollars! Ah! it was because he loved her. Could he doubt it? No, indeed.

In a short time Miss Amerling's brougham was at the door, and the lady herself ready for the shopping expedition. In the crowded part of Broadway, she could not help looking to see if by chance she might espy the count. She was not rewarded by the sight of that blue-blooded gentleman, however, and somehow—why, she could not tell—she felt vexed, and sighed as she reached Webster, Underhill & Nickerson's establishment, that colossal store where every thing could be bought, from a diamond to an elephant.

"To the fur department," said Miss Amerling to the polite shop walker, who, with tender solicitude, had watched her alight from her brougham.

It was quite a long walk through the endless avenues of the big establishment to the fur department. Miss Amerling was out of breath when she at last reached it. She sank in a cushioned arm chair.

"I will send Mr. Jones to you. He is an artist in fur, I assure you, madam," said the shop walker.

"It's well he's an artist in something, with such a disgustingly plebeian name," thought Miss Amerling.

One minute, two minutes, three minutes passed. Miss Amerling was thoroughly rested. Ah! she heard footsteps. The artistic Jones was arriving; the footsteps came nearer. She rose and advanced toward a young man. He was in front of her now. She looked carelessly at him. Suddenly, she paled, her eyes dilated, her mouth opened, and, with a piercing shriek, she fell to the ground in a swoon.

Instantly all was commotion in Webster, Underhill & Nickerson's establishment. The three members of the firm, who knew Miss Amerling as an excellent customer, were greatly concerned. Mr. Jones, however, who, with his book and pencil in hand, and a well-worn business suit on his back, looked really too ordinary a person to have been the cause of Miss Amerling's sudden indisposition, seemed anxious to leave the scene; while every one's attention was attracted to the fainting lady, he slipped away.

Miss Amerling soon recovered. She cast one glance at the place where Jones had stood and burst into tears. "O, Mr. Webster," she sobbed, "take me to my carriage. I shall die, I shall die. O, I have been deceived, duped, victimized—O, I dare not think of it. Oh! oh! oh! oh!"

She was rapidly becoming hysterical. "A word with you, Mr. Webster," she managed to say. The polite partner was immediately in an attitude of attention.

"Is—is that y—y—young m—m—man's n—n—name really Jo—Jones?" she asked in almost unintelligible tones.

"It is, Miss Amerling. He has been with us for six months."

"He—he—he—is a v—v—villain," she sobbed. "No d—d—don't ask me why. He is a v—v—villain, and y—y—yet even n—now I can hardly understand it all. O, take me to my carriage quickly. Oh! oh! what shall I do? How shall I face Dudley? O, my poor heart! O, Mr. Webster. I'm wretched. No, I won't cry. I won't. Why should I! I haven't done any thing wrong. Oh! oh! oh! Good morning, Mr. Webster. Oh! oh!"

And she was gone. Mr. Webster was not surprised. In an instant he had put two and two together. Astute man that he was, Miss Amerling's emotion and the cause of it were as clear as a pikestaff to him.

Dudley Amerling was visiting some friends in Boston, when the following story in one of the New York papers, which he had just received, caught his eye:

This personal in a morning paper attracted considerable attention: "All who have had business with a person calling himself Comte de la Mauviere, beware. He is an imposter. Webster, Underhill & Nickerson." A reporter called at the establishment conducted by this firm, and Mr. Webster had a strange story to tell.

"For some time past," said Mr. Webster, "I have been working nights, as we were stock-taking. A curious thing happened. One night I missed a handsome fur overcoat from the fur department, and diamond studs, rings and sleeve links from the jewelry department. I went to my home much annoyed. The goods were very valuable. When I returned to the store in the morning, you may judge how surprised I was when I saw the overcoat and the jewelry in their places. I really supposed I must have been suffering from some sort of delusion. The following night, however, I missed another fur coat, and other jewelry, and the next morning they were in their places again. For several weeks this went on, and I was wearing myself out with perplexity; at last, in dismay, I spoke to my partners, and they agreed that we had better put a detective on the case. This we did and we found out two days ago that Arthur Jones, the young man in charge of the fur department, was in the habit of frequenting fashionable hotels each night, dressed in our furs and diamonds, which he returned in the morning. This he told us Thursday, when we arrived at the store. We determined to watch Jones carefully and surprise him that night with our goods. That afternoon, however, a lady called to buy a sealskin cloak; at the sight of Jones she fainted; she was taken home in a very weak state, and told me that she had been grossly deceived.

"The lady was averse to discussing the matter, but from what she said I should imagine that she had lent him money. He left while she was at the store and has not been seen since. He is tall, slightly built and foreign looking. I don't know that I would do any thing to him, even if he were found. He took nothing from the store; but I feel it my duty to expose him, and for that reason inserted the personal notice that you saw."

Poor Miss Amerling recovered in due time, but she has never been the same woman since he rsad experience with the French nobility. She no longer uses French expressions, or reads French novels, and, indeed, it is said that fair Melanie is now known as Matilda Jane.—Epoch.

CARE OF THE TEETH.

Ordinary Precautions Which Everybody Should Observe.

Brush your teeth, and teach your children to brush their teeth after every meal with tepid water, and always just before retiring at night with a good dentifrice. If you could brush your teeth but once a day, you should do it the last thing before going to bed, for the constant movement of the tongue and saliva against the teeth during the day keep them partly cleansed, but at night the muscles and tongue are at rest, and the small particles of food that are floating about in the mouth or lodged between the teeth unite with the stagnant saliva, producing an acid that attacks the tooth either at the neck or in one of the irregular convolutions of the crown. While too vigorous brushing is to be deprecated, yet it is better to err in overdoing than not brushing thoroughly enough. Every accessible surface of the teeth should be thoroughly brushed to remove any food that may be lodged there. Do not rest content to brush only the fronts of the teeth, but also the inner surface and crowns; the upper teeth should be brushed downward and the lower teeth upward in order that the bristles may pass between the teeth and force out any particles of food there; it also presses the gums against the necks of the teeth. Always use a soft wooden toothpick after meals, never a pin or any metal one.

Never use any advertised or recommended powders that you do not know their entire constituents. Avoid all powders that contain soap, charcoal, cuttle-fish bone or any oily or insoluble substance for constant use. Do not use any wash that is recommended for whitening the teeth; it either does not accomplish the result, or does it at the expense of the enamel of the teeth. Any dentifrice that has precipitated chalk for its base is good, provided it contains no acid. When you or your children take any of the solutions of iron, or other strong medicines, whether through a quill, as they should be, or in any other manner, see that the teeth are brushed immediately afterward.

By observing these precautions and a visit to some good dentist every six months, so that any disease or other imperfection may be seen and corrected before it gets any headway, you and your children ought under ordinary circumstances preserve your teeth till old age.—Home Knowledge.

FAITH REWARDED.

Story of a Man Who Had Confidence In His Mother-in-Law.

One of the ladies who have been for some time prominent in Washington society has a husband who works in one of the departments. How they manage to scratch along on his little salary and make the show the lady does is explained by the fact that she has a wealthy mother, who sends her an occasional remittance. Recently she received a package containing ribbons, pocket-handkerchiefs, bonbons, etc., nothing of much value. The daughter felt hurt that her mother's present was so insignificant as compared with former ones, and she began to shed tears as the box was emptied of its trifles. The servant was ordered to take the debris and throw it away.

The husband has confidence in his mother-in-law—a rare thing to have, to be sure. He said, soothingly, to his wife: "My dear, I will look carefully through the paper and straw which came in the box, perhaps we have overlooked something." He did look carefully and was rewarded by finding an envelope with a neatly folded check for $1,000 in it, together with an endearing note to her children. The husband was so overcome with joy at the find that he could only say, "God bless our mother." Most sons-in-law vary that expression.—N. Y. Graphic.

SCIENCE AND INDUSTRY.

—The consumption of rubber in this country is steadily on the increase, the imports last year having been 27,000,000 pounds, the greatest amount ever known.

—Dr. Schliemann has discovered the location of the temple of Aphrodite Urania in Cythera. Rain-storms and an inundation of the river compelled him, however, to return to Athens via Sparta.

—A large steel company in Chicago has decided to substitute crude petroleum for coal. This oil will be used as fuel for thirty-six large boilers, and if every thing goes well an attempt will be made to use the oil in the heating of ingots and blooms. The oil will be forced into tanks and supplied to the boilers by the force of gravity.

—In a carefully compiled table of labor statistics in the United States, France, England and Germany, it appears that labor of all kinds, skilled and unskilled, is paid over one hundred per cent. more in the United States than in any of the other countries named. In some cases—notably in the wages of women—the difference is over three hundred per cent. in favor of the United States.

—Typewriting and stenographic offices are multiplying with unusual rapidity in New York. It is said that not less than seventy-five to one hundred young girls and men "graduate" every week and start out to earn a living in this trade. It has been recently shown by statistics that the difference between the wages of men and women in that city who do the same work is from one dollar to twelve dollars a week in favor of the men.

—Palladium, a metal of the platinum group, but of far lower density than the latter, may be substituted for steel in the manufacture of watches. Palladium is absolutely non-polarizable, and it is unaffected to any noticeable extent by the presence of a magnetic field. Besides this, it has the incidental advantage of being rust-proof. The discovery is due to C. A. Pallard of Geneva, Switzerland, and watches are now being constructed with this metal.

—Sir John Herschel's opinion that the full moon has a tendency to clear the sky of clouds is supported by recent observations. In reference to the common belief that a ring around the moon is indicative of the approach of a storm, it is stated that, out of sixty-one lunar halos observed near London, thirty-four were followed by rain within twenty-four hours, and nineteen within four days. Meteorologists generally agree that the moon exerts some influence on the weather; but as to the extent of that influence they differ greatly.

—The calculations of a recent writer on the subject show that an enormous amount of vegetable matter is required to form a layer of coal, it being estimated that it would take not less than 1,000,000 years to form a bed of coal 100 feet thick. The area of the coal fields of the United States is between 300,000 and 400,000 square miles, which is a quantity sufficient to supply the entire world for a period of 2,000 years. One million tons of coal are taken from these beds every year.

—Artists always seem at a loss to deal with the color of the sea, and few are those who please the public. Prof. Tyndall has come to their aid. He recognizes three principal hues in sea waves—blue, green and yellow. Solid particles held in the water act as minute mirrors, reflecting the light which penetrates the liquid. The rays which are sent out, after having traversed only a thin stratum of water, preserve their yellow parts; but if the reflections are attenuated the water appears green, and if they do not exist at all, the sea being clear and free from muddy matters, the color is deep blue. In an indigo sea the crest of the waves will appear green on account of their lack of thickness. Seaweed, animalcules, and other local or accidental causes may have much influence on the color of the water.

STORMY WEATHER.

Dozens of Signs Said to Indicate the Approach of Storms.

Red clouds at sunrise indicate storm.

Foxes barking at night indicate storm.

The weather usually moderates before a storm.

Soot burning on back of chimney indicates storm.

The aurora, when very bright, indicates storm.

Sounds traveling far and wide
A stormy day will betide.
North and south the sign of a drought,
East and west the sign of a blast.

Peafowl utter low cries before a storm and select a low perch.

Domestic animals stand with their heads from the coming storm.

Distant sounds heard with distinctness during the day indicate rain.

Coals becoming alternately bright and dim indicate approaching storms.

Wild geese flying over in great numbers indicate approaching storm.

It is said that blacksmiths select a stormy day in which to perform work that requires extra heat.

When a heavy cloud comes up in the southwest and seems to settle back again look out for a storm.

When oxen or sheep collect together as if they were seeking shelter, a storm may be expected.

Fire always burns brighter and throws out more heat just before a storm, and is hotter during a storm.

A long strip of clouds, called a salmon or Noah's ark, east and west, is a sign of stormy weather, but when it extends north and south it is a sign of dry weather.

If the clouds be of different heights, the sky being grayish or dirty blue, with hardly any wind stirring, the wind, however, changing from west to south, or sometimes to southeast, without perceptibly increasing in force, expect storm.—N. Y. Mail and Express.

SOCIAL VAMPIRES.

Detective Agencies That Are Nothing More Than Blackmailing Concerns.

"Something ought to be done to control these private detective agencies," said a police officer of rank to a reporter. "They are a nuisance, and work more harm than any one imagines. I don't refer to the straight agencies, but these concerns that do all the dirty work are the ones I refer to. Anybody can start a detective agency, and some of the men who work for many of these in Chicago ought to be in the penitentiary. Many private detectives make their living by blackmail, and it is easy to see that they have a fine field to work in. Take, for instance, a case of a woman, or even a man, who has some standing. Some one—it may be a husband or wife, or even an outsider—puts a detective on the track of the one he wants to find out about, and the victim is followed everywhere. Suppose something is found out—and there's nobody but has a little dark spot that shouldn't be exposed—and here's where the chance for blackmail comes in. The detective makes his report and receives his pay, but doesn't let the matter rest there. He has a hold on the one he'd been shadowing, and when the proper time comes he works the racket for what it's worth. He wants a loan after letting the victim know, of course, what knowledge he possesses, and nine to one he gets it. The one affected knows that he can't afford exposure and he is willing to pay for secrecy. Mind you, all private detectives don't work this snap, but many of them do.

"I know of a young man who robbed his employer. The latter knew something was wrong, so he hired a shadower. Proof against the young man was complete, and when he was confronted with it he confessed every thing. He begged not to be exposed, and the employer consented to his remaining, provided he made up the shortage. This he did and afterwards regained his employer's confidence. Then he married a fine girl and was happy. The world smiled on him and he was getting along as nicely as any one could wish when one day he was called on by a strange man, who soon let him know that he was the detective who had done the shadowing. He didn't say that he would expose the young man, but the latter knew what the matter was and readily consented to make a small loan. Instead of telling his wife and employer about it he struggled on, meeting demands made on him, and finally took to drinking. His employer discharged him, he went lower and lower, and when he got clear into the gutter his wife left him because he couldn't support her. The other day, I see by the papers, she sued for a divorce, and she'll get it."—Chicago Tribune.

—The practical benefit to be derived from raising good stock depends, among other things, upon the treatment received at the owner's hands. Blood and breeding and rare natural capacity are powerless to contribute to successful stock raising, unless accompanied by the co-operation of human thoughtfulness, intelligent management and regular care.

—Any soil upon which water does not remain during winter, says a writer in Vick's Magazine, can be made to grow small fruits; in fact, any soil which will produce weeds will grow them; but as there are few soils which can produce two crops at the same time, it is better not to try to grow a crop of weeds and a crop of strawberries on the same soil together.

HOW TO RAISE STOCK.

Rules That Will Work with All Kinds of Cattle and Horses.

There is a great difference in the kinds and manner of keeping stock to make stock farming profitable. One farmer tells you there is no profit in raising horses, and it is better to buy your horses than to raise them. If you will look at his horse stock you will find he is about right, for he has no mare that he or any other man can name the blood of, and he breeds her to a horse of the same kind to save a few dollars in the start. When the colt comes it runs its chance for living, often getting the milk when the mare is all heated up with work. After a time the colt is thought old enough to wean and is taken away from the mare at once, but has not learned to eat and will take no nourishment until starved to it. Of course it will become poor and is not much of a colt when spring comes; will take all summer to get in reasonable condition, and runs the gauntlet another winter between grown horses and cattle. If it escapes accident or death from horns, when four years old and about the size of a fair three-year-old, all hands are called in to break the colt. If he don't break his neck when first haltered he is harnessed and a blind bridle put on him, and he is hitched to the wagon; he is afraid of every one and every thing, and is very apt to kick, and finally is a poor horse, not reliable anywhere, and of course an unprofitable horse to raise. Such farmers are not the ones to make horse-raising profitable. Such men are always buying horses, and seldom get such as they want.

Another farmer will tell you he can make more money raising horses than any other stock. This is the way he does it. He can tell you the blood of every animal he has on the farm. His brood mares are so well bred that he will have a good colt from each. He has no use for poor sires; the horse he breeds to must show a clear pedigree and no blemish that can be transmitted. He cares well for the mares; works them reasonably, and when the colts come they are taught to lead when only a few days old, and handled often and taught not to be afraid of those who care for them. They are taught to eat as soon as possible, and when ready to wean are fed better, and gradually taken from their mother, so that by the change from milk to grain, grass and hay, they will not be badly affected. They are fed particularly well the first winter and handled often until old enough to work, and then a little careful training makes them good reliable horses, worth two or three of the first described and cost, if any difference, less feed and time; not so much, if you consider accidental deaths and other bad results in breeding. The first kind of horse-raising will pay never, the last kind will pay every time. The same rule will work, in the same way, with all other kinds of farm stock.—Western Agriculturist.

BETROTHAL TOKENS.

What It Costs to Announce an Engagement in Precious Stones.

Cupid is notoriously a favorite with jewelers, and no wonder. From the days when the heart's affection feels the need of an outward symbol, to the time for wedding gifts, lovers pay constant tribute to the dealers in gold and silver and precious stones. It is in the early days of accepted love, however, that fashion dictates most absolutely, and for once at least chimes with sentiment. Rings are essential to an engagement, and only she who has ugly hands or a strong love with a basis of economy will be content with none. Moreover, in the purchase of engagement rings every consideration is shown to bank accounts, but it is hardly allowable for a young man to run into debt or pawn his overcoat for the sake of his dear girl. Fortunately the latitude in respect to the choice of rings has been constantly increasing lately, and such unfortunate expedients are quite unnecessary. One condition is well-nigh indispensable, however. The stone of the ring must be a solitaire. Occasionally one sees a set of two or three or even a cluster of diamonds, rubies or emeralds, but while the effect is often pretty, it lacks brilliancy, fire, and the centered beauty that marks the solitaire. An exception should be made in favor of the opal, surrounded by small diamonds, a combination that enhances, if possible, the beauty of both stones. A diamond is often married to a ruby or an emerald, but neither stone gains by the contrast. In fact, almost the only merit of such sets or clusters is their low price, compared with that of single stones.

Among the solitaires, the diamond reigns supreme and is properly regarded by love-sick swains as the most precious gift to a very precious object. Its preciousness lies not merely in its great cost, but also in its unrivaled brilliancy, that has made it a perennial object of admiration. In respect to price, diamonds will satisfy the economical man who does not insist on having a large stone, or will diminish the size of the wealthy man's pocket. A ring containing a first-class diamond weighing one-quarter of a karat will cost about $20. From this prices increase rapidly, a doubling of the weight of the stone involving an addition of about 125 per cent. to the price. A diamond weighing half a karat will cost about $50, one weighing a karat about $125, and so on up to $1,000, which is practically the limit. They are cut with a broad crown on the upper part and taper to a point below. The horizontal diameter of a stone of a quarter-karat weight is about one-eighth of an inch. The setting for these as well as for most solitaires is of a plain description, while the ring is nothing but a slender hoop of gold.

Next after diamonds in the scale of popularity come the gleaming white pearls. They are lower priced than diamonds, one of a grain weight costing $10 or $15. A grain is equivalent to about one-quarter of a karat. Larger ones can be obtained at any price, but $50 is about the limit for engagement rings. Many persons prefer, therefore, to get a moderate-sized pearl rather than a small diamond at the same price. Contrary to general opinion, moreover, genuine oriental pearls are not easily injured or broken, but will bear as hard usage as diamonds. The darting, fiery opal is readily growing in favor as a suitable stone for an engagement ring. For a long time it has borne the reputation of bringing ill-luck, but the superstition has lost its force. The poet sings:

> October's child is born to woe,
> And life's vicissitudes must know;
> But lay an opal on his breast,
> And hope will lull those woes to rest.

Opals are cut in carbuncle shape and may be used as solitaires or in combination with smaller diamonds. In price they are even lower than pearls, but vary greatly in quality. One of a karat weight will cost from $10 to $75. Looked at from different sides, an opal reflects all the colors of the rainbow and justifies the admiration it excites. Rubies, emeralds and sapphires are used in engagement rings, but have no special popularity. Both rubies and emeralds are as high priced as diamonds, but sapphires cost comparatively little. One of the latest freaks of fashion in tokens of engagement is a flexible bracelet made up of gold blocks enameled with forget-me-nots. Its cost is about $18. Plain rings without stones are sold occasionally for this purpose, but only to the poorer classes. To those who have passed the period of discussing engagement rings, it may be well to suggest that the regulation wedding ring is a 20-karat gold ring, costing from $4 to $10.—Springfield, (Mass.) Republican.

How to Treat Heaves.

I traded for a mare that had the heaves, although I did not know it then. I fed her at night and she cleaned her manger and ate all the bedding she could get at. When I went out to her stable in the morning her sides went like a blacksmith's bellows. I determined that I would either kill or cure her. I cleaned every spear of hay out of the stable and covered the floor with dry sand. I did not give her any thing to eat eat that day or the day after, and then I began to feed her on three quarts of potatoes, moistened, for breakfast; four quarts of oats and three quarts of potatoes for dinner, and one pound of loose hay wet, and three quarts of meal mixed with it for supper. In six weeks' time she was free from the heaves, gained flesh, and was more handsome in shape. I kept her a year and I saw nothing of the heaves. I sold her to go on to a stage, and she run there two or three years, but I did not hear any thing about any heaves. She cost me $40 and I sold her for $100. —N. E. Homestead.

BULGARIAN WOMEN.

They Take an Almost Equal Share With Men in the Bread-Winning.

Bulgarian peasant women are extremely robust and hardy, though they are, as a rule, short of stature. They are thickly set, their chests well developed and their limbs muscular from constant exercise and toil in the open air. Their Tartar origin shows itself in their high projecting cheek-bones, short snub noses and little twinkling eyes.

Social life among this class of the population differs from that of the Greek chiefly in the position of the women. A Bulgarian butka, or good wife, takes an almost equal share with her husband in the bread-winning, and consequently her word has considerable weight in the family council. Like all women in the East, she is sober and thrifty, keeps at least the inside of her house clean and tidy, cooks palatable food, spins, weaves, knits and sews all the clothes for the family. Her wardrobe consists of two suits, one the gala costume in which she was married, and which will last her lifetime for Sundays and prasnik, or feastdays; and one of the same pattern, but more homely material, for working days. The former consists chiefly of a long linen garment worked round the seams, a cloth coat richly embroidered, a large apron neatly covered with the same ornamentation, but no petticoats; and on the head a bordered white kerchief artistically arranged and fastened with silver pins and strings of coins.

These dresses, with some carpets, rugs, towels and sheets, form a Hungarian girl's trousseau. Among the peasants, a proposal of marriage is made to the father, who accepts the suitor on his promising to pay a sum varying, I am told, from £50 to £100, according to his means. This is the purchase money for the labor of the hardy maiden, which will on her marriage belong to the husband.—Woman's World.

"Didn't Know it Was Loaded."

The young man fell dead!
A friend had pointed a revolver at him.
"He didn't know it was loaded!"

We often hear it stated that a man is not responsible for what he does not know. The law presupposes knowledge and therefore convicts the man who excuses crime by ignorance!

"If I had only known" has often been an unfortunate man's apology for some evil unknowingly wrought, but in a matter of general interest—as for instance that laudanum is a poison, that naphtha is a deadly explosive, that blood heavily charged with a winter's accumulations of the waste of the system—it is one's duty to know the fact and the consequences thereof. Our good old grandmothers knew for instance, that the opening of spring was the most perilous period of the year.

Why?

Because then the blood stream is sluggish and chilled by the cold weather, and if not thinned a good deal and made to flow quickly and healthfully through the arteries and veins, it is impossible to have good vigor the rest of the year. Hence, without exception, what is now known as Warner's Log Cabin Sarsaparilla, was plentifully made and religiously given to every member of the family regularly through March, April, May and June. It is a matter of record that this prudential, preventive and restorative custom saved many a fit of sickness, prolonged life and happiness to a vigorous old age, and did away with heavy medical expenditures.

Mrs. Maggie Kerchwal, Lexington, Ky., used Warner's Log Cabin Sarsaparilla "for nervous sick headache of which I had been a sufferer for years. It has been a great benefit to me." Capt. Hugh Harkins, 1114 S. 15th St., Philadelphia, Pa., says "it purified my blood and removed the blotches from my skin." Mrs. Aarea Smith, Topton, Berks Co., Pa., says she "was entirely cured of a skin disease of the worst kind," by Log Cabin Sarsaparilla. Bad skin indicates a very bad condition of the blood.

If you would live and be well, go to your druggist to-day and get Warner's Log Cabin Sarsaparilla and take no other—there's nothing like it or as good—and completely renovate your impaired system with this simple, old-fashioned preparation of roots and herbs.

Warner, who makes the famous Safe Cure, puts it up, and that is a guarantee of excellence all over the known world. Take it yourself and give it to the other members of the family, including the children. You will be astonished at its health-giving and life-prolonging powers. We say this editorially with perfect confidence, because we have heard good things of it everywhere, and its name is a guarantee that it is first-class in every particular.—Cleveland Press.

NERVURA
NERVE TONIC,
The Great Spring Remedy
FOR THE POSITIVE CURE OF
Nervousness, Weakness, Nervous Debility, Nervous and Physical Exhaustion, Nervous Prostration, Sleeplessness, Despondency, Paralysis, Numbness, Trembling, Neuralgia, Rheumatism, Pains in Side and Back, Epileptic Fits, St. Vitus's Dance, Palpitation, Nervous and Sick Headache, Tired Feeling, Dyspepsia, Indigestion, Loss of Appetite, Constipation, Kidney and Liver Diseases, Etc.
SPRING DEBILITY.

Every one needs a spring tonic—a remedy which will stimulate and invigorate the system and tone up the action of all the organs. The spring is the time above all others for the sick to get well; it is the time for the comparatively well to keep in good health by the use of a judiciously selected spring medicine.

With the advent of spring comes malaria, nervousness and debility. A weak and tired feeling, if neglected, always results in nervous and physical exhaustion. Cure these diseases, or guard against them by the use of DR. GREENE'S NERVURA NERVE TONIC, which is the greatest and best of all spring medicine. This wonderful remedy is recommended by physicians, druggists and the people everywhere as being the most marvelous in its effects of any known medicine. If you are nervous, irritable, depressed and can not sleep nights, use this remedy and you will be surprised how quickly and surely your nerves will become strong and steady, and your sleep calm, natural and refreshing. If you wake tired mornings, with dull feet, bad taste in the mouth, no appetite for breakfast, and feel weak, languid and exhausted, this remarkable remedy will clear your head, give you an appetite and restore your strength, vigor and energies. If you have dyspepsia, indigestion, biliousness, constipation, kidney complaint, pain and weakness in the back, this remedy will give you sure relief and cure. It is a perfect specific for nervous debility, neuralgia, nervous or sick headache, heart disease, palpitation, paralysis, numbness, trembling and all nervous diseases.

Use this remedy and you will never regret it. It is purely vegetable, and its wonderful effects afford a safe, sure and positive cure. Do not be persuaded to take any thing else, for this remedy has no equal. It is the greatest medical discovery of the age. All druggists keep it. Price, $1 per bottle. If your druggist does not have it he will get it for you. Its discoverer, DR. GREENE, 35 West 14th Street, New York, the great specialist in curing nervous and chronic diseases, can be consulted free, personally or by letter.

$10 REAL VALUE FREE!

Our new stamping outfit is free to every reader of this publication; it contains 100 perforated stamping patterns and includes a great variety of all sizes that are wanted. This outfit is a real work of art; no stamping outfit has ever been offered heretofore, on which anything like so much artistic ability was brought to bear. With each outfit is a BOX OF BEST STAMPING POWDER, PAD, AND BOOK of INSTRUCTIONS, giving full directions for stamping, tells how to make the powder and stamping paint, contains instructions for Lustre, Kensington and Hand painting, tells colors to use in painting—red, white, blue, yellow, pink and other flowers; also contains hints and instructions on other matters, too numerous to mention. Bought singly, or a few patterns at a time, at usual prices, the equal of the above would cost $10. Although it is free, yet this is the Regal Queen of Stamping Outfits and on every hand is acknowledged to be superior, yes, very much superior, and very much more desirable than those which have been selling for $1 each and upwards. By having 200,000 of these outfits made for us, during the dull season, we get them at first cost; the manufacturer was glad to take the order, at cost, that his help might be kept at work. All may depend that it is the very best, most artistic and in every way desirable outfit ever put before the public. Farm and Housekeeper (monthly, 16 large pages, 64 long columns, regular price 75 cents a year) is generally acknowledged to be the best general agricultural, housekeeping and family journal in America; it is entertaining and of great interest, as well as useful; its contributors embrace the widest range of brilliant talent. Furthermore, we have lately become managing owners of that grand monthly, Sunshine, for youth; also, for those of all ages whose hearts are not withered; 16 large pages, 64 long columns, regular price 75 cents a year. Sunshine is known favorably as the best youth's monthly in America. The best writers for youth, in the world, are its regular contributors; it is now quoted all over the world as standing at the head. Both papers are splendidly illustrated by the best artists. We will take 200,000 trial year subscribers at a price which gives us but a moderate portion of the cost.
FREE! Furthermore, every trial year subscriber, for either of the papers will receive free by mail our new 800 pattern Stamping Outfit. Trial year subscriptions will be received for either of the papers as follows: 1 subscription and 1 outfit, 32 cents, 2 subscriptions and 2 outfits, if sent at one time, 55 cents; 4 subscriptions and 4 outfits, if sent at one time, $1. For $1 and a dollar bill, but for less, send 1-cent postage stamps. Better at once get three friends to join you, at 25 cents each; you can do it in a few minutes and they will thank you; papers will be mailed regularly to their separate address. While trial year subscribers are served for much less than cost, it proves the rule that a very large proportion of all who read either paper for a year, want it thereafter, and are willing to pay the regular price of 75 cents a year; through this, at time rolls on, we reap a profit that satisfies us.
FREE! The trial year subscriptions are almost free, and this the Regal Queen of Stamping Outfits—the best ever known—is entirely free. It is the greatest and best offer ever made to the public. Large sizes of patterns—every size that can be desired is included; all other outfits surpassed, by this, the best, the most artistic, the Regal Queen. Below we give a list of a few of the patterns; space is too valuable to admit of naming all: 1 Poppies for Scarf; 2 1-2 inch; 2 Tidy design, 2 1-2 inch; 3 Splendid Tinsel design, 8 inch; 4 Golden Rod, 4 inch; 5 Pond Lilies; 6 Pansies; 7 Moss Rose Buds; 8 Tube Roses; 9 Wheat; 10 Oak Leaves; 11 Maiden Hair Ferns; 12 Boy; 13 Girl's Head; 14 Bird; 15 Strawberries; 16 Owl; 17 Dog; 18 Butterfly; 19 Apple Blossoms; 20 Calla Lily; 21 Anchor; 22 Morning Glories; 23 Japanese Lilies; 24 Rabbit; 25 Bunch Forget-me-nots; 26 Fuchsias; 27 Bell Drops; 28 Fan; 29 Clown's Head; 30 Cat's Head. 70 other splendid patterns are included in this Regal Queen of stamping outfits—in all 100 patterns. Safe delivery guaranteed. Possessing this outfit any lady can, without expense, make home beautiful in many ways, also embellish childrens and ladies clothing in the most charming manner, and readily make money by doing stamping. Lustre, Kensington and Hand painting for others. A good stamping outfit is indispensable to every woman who cares to make home beautiful. This outfit contains patterns for each and every branch of needle work, flower painting, etc., and the Book of Instructions makes all clear and really easy. This outfit will do more for HOME and LADIES than many times the amount of a trial year subscription would cost otherwise—no home should be without it. The beautiful designs of this REGAL QUEEN of outfits ARE ALL THE RAGE wherever seen; when ever one or two reach a locality their fame spreads, and many TRIAL YEAR subscriptions usually follow. Many who have paid from $1 to $2 for outfits and were satisfied until they saw our designs, have secured our outfit and laid aside forever the others. Those who subscribe will find the papers well worth several times the trifling cost of a trial year subscription, and the majority will make up to us the loss, that this year we incur, through such a low price, by continuing subscribers, year after year, at the regular price, which all will be willing to admit is low enough. The money will gladly be refunded to any one who is not fully satisfied. Address,

SATURDAY, APRIL 14, 1888.

The Senate Committee on Territories have reported a resolution against the admission of Utah to the Union until polygamy is abolished and all civil authority is taken from the priesthood of the Mormon Church.

The Baltimore American, in commenting on the misdoings of the present legislature, says: "It has been a session of dishonor for the State, disgrace for the legislature and ill-gotten wealth for the lobby." Judging from the recent utterances of the Sun that paper agrees with the American.

Make it Hot for the Mormon Traitors and Outlaws.

Lately many hypocritical pleas have been put forward by the agents of the Mormon lobby in Washington on the theory of alleged "change of heart," on the part of the Mormons in Utah, as the vital ideas and convictions of these traitorous pests and nuisances. If they could but succeed by wholesale lying and discreetly disturbed corruption funds, in getting the Mormon heirarchy and polygamy entrenched within the secure defences of Statehood, they would achieve all they want and renew their operations for disseminating the virus of their vile doctrines through the surrounding mountain States and Territories.

But the Mormons in Utah cannot be altogether suppressed or kept quiet. They are as talkative as they are vicious and disloyal. This is shown by a Salt Lake dispatch dated yesterday, which describes the second day's proceedings of the Mormon Conference, at which a particularly vicious Mormon, Roger Clawson, convicted of polygamy and pardoned by President, after three years of just imprisonment, showed the blasphemous and other disgusting traits of these blatant traitors and law defiers, when he said that he was convicted for obeying the law of God, and saw 300 of his brethren come there for the same offense and 200 go from prison. "But I feel first rate now, said he; 'I am not one whit discouraged, and have just as as much faith, yea, even greater, than four years ago. The Saints exhibited wonderful endurance in being cast into prison amid the vile association of thieves and murderers, rather than go before the court and make the simple promise to obey the law. The Lord has revealed to us the principle of celestial marriage, and by His help we will honor it and not make a promise to abandon this any more than any other principle of our faith."

These ostentatious enemies of the laws and Christian civilization of the United States have the unprecedented impudence to demand Statehood, within which to shelter themselves against the laws that underlie our civilization. What they really need is more stringent and effectual laws against polygamy and the other Mormon infamies; United State officials who will execute these laws, and two regiments of soldiers as a reserve, until Gentile settlers shall be made secure and enabled to facilitate the legal and other processes of eliminating the foulest social and political cancer that ever afflicted any of our Western committees.—N. Y. Mail and Express.

The Legislature of 1888.

(Hagerstown Mail, Democrat.)

The Balto. Sun covers over the late Legislature with a good coat of varnish. The failure of the "Legal Notice Bill" with it was the sum of all good and condoned all faults and failings. It seems to think that the passage of the Registration and Election bills were acts of merit, and assigns for principal cause that the boards are to have a minority representation. This is not what was promised alone—it was the Tilden law as near as could be, that was promised, and it provided for more than minority representation. Minority representation, unless accompanied with the other fortifications against fraud, may be entirely delusive; dummy Republicans—ignorant or corrupt ones—can easily be appointed who can, when fraud is contemplated, assist in its perpetration, through inefficiency on the one hand, or in the case of corrupt ones bought outright.

There is no certain security here, but this, combined with the other safeguards of the Tilden law, made fraud almost impossible so far as the reception and counting of the ballots were concerned. We observe in the Legislature of New York in the effort now being made to prevent the purchase of votes as far as practicable, not a single complaint was made as to any defect in the election law itself; everything is so secured by that law that even when the judges are bad or corrupt they cannot commit frauds. It is now that the effort there to get the voter into the polling room without any ballot and when he approached the glass urn on the voting table the ticket or tickets are to be presented to him printed by the state, with the names of all the candidates on them and where he can select his own votes, out of the presence of the buyer of votes.

It is said that the open purchase of votes in New York is now the great scandal of the elections, and it is to prevent or restrain this that all kinds of projects are under consideration.

One of the virtues ascribed by the Sun to the merit of the Legislature was the reduction in the State tax of 1½ cents. The Sun knows that this tax was imposed to pay the interest and the principle of the Deaf and Dumb Asylum and Maryland Hospital loans, as required by the Constitution and the acts creating the debts, and that when paid these taxes should, as a matter of course, cease. These debts are now paid and no tax therefore could be levied for any such purpose.

What possible virtue is there in the act that would stop the collection of a tax from the tax-payer levied specifically for the payment of a certain debt and the interest, when that debt and interest are paid? It was a public duty to stop this tax that even the most hardened Legislator could not well refuse to discharge.

In fact, by the payment of these two debts the tax of 1¾ cts. levied to pay them ought to have dropped. If dropped, the State tax for the present year would then be 17 cts. on the $100 instead of 18¾, as that of last year. But the Legislature, in dropping this tax of 1¾ cents imposed an additional tax of ¼ cent for Public Schools, so that the School tax is increased from 10 to 10½ cents, and the whole State tax fixed at 17¼ cts.

We may take occasion perhaps to notice in detail the conduct of this Legislature in doing what should not have been done and in omitting to do what should have been done. It has become self-evident that pre-election promises avail nothing; that it is only upon men of undoubted probity that the people can rely for anything like a performance of public duty. Platforms are nothing; they are but specious words, gotten up for the emergency and intended to deceive and delude. They are only to answer the purpose of getting creatures in power and then do whatever they please, trusting to like tricks for a future success.

There is a great relief in the public mind that the Legislature has adjourned, and may the people of the State never see the like again.

It must be a matter of profound regret to every good thinking man in the State that Gov. Jackson found it proper to pardon the election judges and clerks confined in Baltimore city jail for committing frauds at elections.

This is one of the most serious offenses against public law and order that can be committed, and no punishment inflicted could hardly be too severe.

President Cleveland, in exercising the pardoning power in many cases always carefully distinguished this class from other cases. He peremptorily declined to pardon a person guilty of this offense, and thought it sufficiently important to give his reasons for it.

One of the reasons given for the Governor's action was that there was no protest against it. It is said that the Reform League did not even protest.

This was an offense against the people of the State, and the Governor as an individual, had as much right to protest as any other one; but specially as Governor was it his duty to see to it that so grave an offense against the body of the whole State should not go unpunished, nor receive any kind of clemency or encouragement at the hands of the authorities of this State.

Another reason indicated was that the men had been sufficiently punished.

Entirely the contrary; in committing the offenses of stuffing the ballot box and other offenses for which they were convicted, they must have been guilty of absolute perjury. Instead of being indicted for the minor offense they should have been indicted and convicted for perjury and sent to the Penitentiary.

We regret exceedingly the clemency of the Governor in this case and we hope that no bad results may follow, but that his expectations of a cessation of like practices under the late law may be realized.

Gen. Geo. Crook's Promotion.

The President has nominated Brigadier General George Crook to be Major General, to fill the vacancy caused by the retirement of Gen. Terry.

SALT LAKE CITY, April 9.—Maj. Gen. Crook is in this city, having arrived from Omaha at a late hour Saturday night. He will be here several days. He first heard of his promotion at Cheyenne on his way here. Yesterday he visited Fort Douglas and the Mormon Tabernacle. Every Western man acquainted with military matters is jubilant over Gen. Crook's promotion. He is here for rest and recreation, having many old army friends in this region.

The Gentleman thus promoted has little over five years to serve before reaching the age of retirement, and he was at the head of the list of brigadier generals. His reputation among the Indians is signified by the "Gray Fox," which they have given him.

George Crook is a native of Ohio, and is about sixty years of age. After he was graduated at West Point he was appointed to a Lieutenancy in the Fourth Infantry. Th was in the year 1852. During the civil war he rose from the rank of Colonel to Brigadier General in 1862 and Major General in 1864. He commanded the army of West Virginia in the Valley of the Shenandoh.

When the War ende Crook was serving as a Major in he Third Infantry, and was a brevt Major General of the United States army. He had risen to be a full brigadier General in the regular army by the year 1873. His promotion is appreciated by army officers generally, as that of a capable and active soldier who has earned his rank.

OUR WASHINGTON LETTER.

(From our Regular Correspondent.)

WASHINGTON, April 9th, 1888.—A deadlock in the House! Reader, do you know what that means? I'll tell you: It means that for five days already, and only Heaven can tell for how many days to come the House has done nothing; the committees of the House have done nothing, and all this at a cost to the tax payers of this country of from $5,00 to $7,000 a day.

The deadlock was brought about over the bill providing for the repay to the several States of the amounts paid by each of them to the United States on account of an act passed by Congress August 5th, 1861, laying an annual tax of $20,000,000 upon the people of the United States, and apportioning the same among the several States, the Territories and the District of Columbia according to population as shown by the census of 1860.

The books of the Treasury show that the Government received from this tax in 1861, the only year in which it was enforced, the sum of $17,533,678,32. The object of the bill is to return this money to the States that paid it in to the general government to aid in suppressing the rebellion.

Mr. Oates, of Alabama, and a few other Southern Democratic Representatives resolved that this bill should not pass the House although more than two-thirds of that body are in favor of it. By filibustering, that killing time by all sorts of dilatory motions and insisting on having a yea and nay vote taken on each of them, This sort of maneuvering has been kept up for five days and the filibusterers threaten that they will keep it up until March 4th next when the fiftieth Congress expires, if the bill is not withdrawn. Under the absurd code of rules which govern the House of Representatives, this is entirely possible.

There is only one man who can break the deadlock, without one or the other sides making a complete surrender, and that man is believed to be in sympathy with the filibusters. His name is Carlisle, and he occupies the responsible position of Speaker of the House.

He can break the deadlock if he has the necessary will and nerve to do so. It has been done by other Speakers in time past. Mr. Randall, at 4 o'clock on the morning of March 2nd, 1877, broke the deadlock by which the Democrats of the House attempted to defeat the counting in of President Hayes, by absolutely declining to entertain any more dilatory motions, and within an hour the count was complete.

Mr. Keifer during the first session of the Forty-seventh Congress broke another deadlock by similar tactics. Mr. Carlisle can break this one in the same way. If he refuses, he ought to be impeached for treason, for the idea of a handful of men stopping the wheels of legislation just because they cannot have what they want done, is as much treason as for one-fifth of the members of the electoral college to demand that the other four-fifths should drop their candidates and support those of the minority. The fundamental principle of our government is the rule of the majority, and he who violates that principle is guilty of treason, call it what he will.

The report of the Republican minority on the Mills tariff bill is considered one of the ablest tariff documents ever laid before the house. It has United the Republicans on that question thoroughly.

The celebrated "driven well" cases may now be considered ended. The Supreme Court has refused the rehearing that was asked for.

There is a movement on foot here to raise a fund for the widow of the late Chief Justice Waite, not because she is needy, but simply as a testimonial to her lamented husband. It has been proposed but not fully decided upon, to confine the contributors to the members of the Supreme Court Bar and to limit the amount of each contributor to $100.

Mr. Cleveland has signed the bills giving the widows of Gens. Logan and E. P. Blair pensions of $2,000 a year.

Army circles here have been considerably exercised over the retirement of Major General Alfred Terry and its consequent promotions. Among the six Brigadier Generals, one would get the promotion to Major-General and among the Colonels, would be a Brigadier General. The fortunate ones were General George Crook and Colonel John R. Brooke, of the 3d infantry.

The Senate has passed a bill giving Dr. Mary Walker a pension of $25 a month as "late assistant surgeon, United States Army." It passed another giving a pension of $604 a year to the widow of General Stone. It also voted pensions to the widows of Rear Admiral Nicholson, Gen. Kilpatrick, Gen. Anderson, Gen. Taylor, Commander Gibson, Medical Inspector Denby of the navy, and to increase the pension of Nancy Raines, ninety-six years of age, the oldest revolutionary pensioner on the rolls.

Public Local Law.

CHAPTER 515.

AN ACT

To repeal section thirty, thirty-one, thirty-two, thirty-five, thirty-six, forty-two, forty-eight, forty-nine, fifty, fifty-one fifty-two, sixty-six, sixty-seven, and eighty-one of Article eighty-one of the Code of Public General Laws of Maryland, title "Revenue and Taxes," as enacted by the act of January Session, eighteen hundred and seventy-four, Chapter four hundred and eighty three, so far as the same relates to Garrett county; and sections seventy-one, seventy-two, seventy-three, seventy-four, and seventy-five, of Chapter one hundred and eight, of the acts of assembly passed at January Session, eighteen hundred and seventy-eight, entitled An Act to add an additional article to the Code of Public Local Laws to be entitled Garrett County, and to enact the following sections in lieu thereof, providing for the appointment of a County Treasurer for Garrett county, and defining the duties of said Treasurer.

SECTION 1. Be it enacted by the General Assembly of Maryland, That Sections thirty, thirty-one, thirty-two, thirty-five, thirty-six, forty-two, forty-eight, forty nine, fifty, fifty-one, fifty-two sixty-six, sixty-seven, eighty-one, of Article eighty-one of the Code of Public General Laws of Maryland, title "Revenue and Taxes," as enacted by the acts of January Session, eighteen hundred and seventy - four, Chapter four hundred and eighty-three, so far as the same relates to Garrett county, and sections seventy-one, seventy two, seventy-three, seventy-four and seventy-five, of Chapter one hundred and eight, of the acts of assembly passed at January Session eighteen hundred and seventy-eight, entitled an act to add an additional Article to the Code of Public Local Laws, to be entitled Garrett County, be and the same are hereby repealed, and the following sections enacted in lieu thereof, providing for the appointment of a County Treasurer for Garrett county, and defining the duties of said Treasurer:

SEC. 2. And be it enacted, That the County Commissioners of Garrett county, on the third Tuesday in April of every second year, or as soon as may be thereafter, shall appoint from among the residents of said county, a competent person County Treasurer for said county, who shall give bond and qualify as hereinafter directed, and shall hold his office two years, or until his successor is appointed and qualified, except as hereinafter provided, and shall be re-eligible thereto, and shall be subject to removal from his said office at any time by the County Commissioners for any wilfull neglect of duty or misbehavior in office. The said Treasurer shall be the collector of all State taxes and of all County taxes, for whatsoever purpose levied or to be levied for or within said county during the term of his office, or that may be placed in his hands for collection, and he shall have full power and it shall be his duty to receive and collect all State and County taxes levied as aforesaid after the passage of this act, and so put in his hands for collection, and all monies which may be due said county, with full power to enforce the payment of the same by sale or otherwise, as hereafter prescribed, and to convey title to any real or personal estate sold by him, for the payment of State or County taxes in the manner as prescribed by the succeeding sections, and all taxes levied in said county after the first day of January, A. D., eighteen hundred and eighty-eight, for State and County purposes, shall be collected by the County Treasurer.

SEC. 3. And be it enacted, That the person so appointed, before he enters upon the duties of his said office, shall take an oath before the Clerk of the Circuit Court for said county, in form similar to that now taken by collectors of taxes, except as to the title of his office and to be similarly certified; he shall execute to the State of Maryland, such bond as is now or may hereafter be required by law, as the collector of State taxes, which bond shall be approved and filed in like manner as other bonds of collectors of State taxes, and he shall execute to the State of Maryland, a separate bond in the penal sum of thirty thousand dollars, with at least three sureties to be approved by the County Commissioners of Garrett county, with the condition that if the above bounden Treasurer shall well and faithfully execute his office of Treasurer, of Garrett county, and shall account for and pay to the County Commissioners of said county, or their order, the several sums which he shall receive for said county, or be answerable for by law, at such time and in such manner as the law shall direct, then the said obligation to be void, otherwise to be and remain in full force and virtue in law; and the said bond, when approved, shall be recorded in the office of the Clerk of the Circuit Court for Garrett county. In case of the default of the person so appointed to qualify and execute the bonds hereinbefore required within thirty days after his appointment, or in the event of the Treasurer's removal from said county or his death or resignation during his term of office, the County Commissioners shall at once proceed to fill such vacancy by the appointment of a competent person for the remainder of the term, who shall within twenty days from the date of his appointment, qualify and bond as hereinbefore directed, and the County Commissioners shall continue after twenty days to make such appointment until a Treasurer shall qualify and bond as aforesaid; provided that such new Treasurer, so taking the place made vacant by removal, death or resignation, shall not collect nor take charge of any of the taxes that may be in the hands of such late Treasurer uncollected, and for which the bond of such late Treasurer is responsible, except as herein otherwise provided, but such taxes shall be collected under existing laws applicable to collector of State and County taxes when there is a death or resignation. The surities on any Treasurer's bonds shall, when so required by said Commissioners, make oath in due form of law respectively, that they are the owners in their own right of real estate situated in said county, equal at least over and above their debts and liabilities in value to the amount of the bond. The said Commissioners may at any time demand of any Treasurer such other or further bond with such other or further security as in their judgment the interests of the State may require.

SEC. 4. And be it enacted, That the County Commissioners shall provide and furnish the Treasurer an office in the Court House building, or in some other building as near to the same as possible, in the town of Oakland, which office shall be plainly designated by external sign as the office of the County Treasurer, and it shall be the duty of the Treasurer to keep his said office open from nine o'clock in the forenoon, until three o'clock in the afternoon, and to attend there in for the transaction of business in person or by deputy, on every day in the week, except Sunday and legal holidays, and except when he is absent from the town of Oakland for the purpose of collecting taxes as hereinafter provided for. It shall be his duty to attend in person or by deputy in each election district of said county, two days between the first day of July and the first day of September, in each year, to collect and receive taxes, and he shall give at least ten days notice of the time and place of such visits to the respective districts.

SEC. 5. And be it enacted, That the County Commissioners of said county shall make their annual levy for State and County taxes on or before the third Tuesday in April, in each and every year, and the same shall be due and payable on the first day of August next, succeeding the date of the levy thereof; from all tax bills for county purposes which shall be paid prior to the first day of September, in the year of the levy thereof, a discount of five per centum shall be deducted from the amount thereof, from all such bills paid during the month of September, succeeding the levy thereof, a discount of four per centum shall be allowed, and all taxes levied for county purposes remaining unpaid on the third first day of December, in the year of the levy thereof, shall be in arrear and interest shall be charged and collected thereon, from the date when the same shall have been due and payable, to wit: on the first day of August next succeeding the levy thereof, and the Treasurer shall make deductions from and charge interest on the tax bills for county purposes, regularly in the manner aforesaid, and shall note the same upon his books and upon the receipt given for taxes so paid, but the deductions allowed on county taxes by this section, shall not be made to any person, persons or corporate institution, unless the whole amount of State and County taxes due by such person, persons or corporate institution for the current year be paid when the same is due.

SEC. 6. And be it enacted, That it shall be the duty of the Clerk of said County Commissioners, within ten days after the annual tax levy shall have been made, to deliver to the Treasurer a fair copy of the assessments lists of said county, showing the aggregate assessment of every person, corporate institution, or set of persons, as the same then appears on the assessment books of said county, with the names of said owners arranged according to election districts and alphabetically for each district; and also to deliver to said Treasurer a certified copy of the order or resolution of Commissioners making such tax levy.

SEC. 7. And be it enacted, That it shall be the duty of the Treasurer to keep certain books to be supplied by said Commissioners, in which shall be entered a full account of all receipts and disbursements of said Treasurer. He shall also keep a full and fair cash account showing all sums of money received by him so as to indicate the source whence the same were received respectively, and showing all sums of money disbursed by him, so as to indicate the purpose to which the same were applied respectively. The said Treasurer shall report and exhibit to the said Commissioners at each of their regular meetings, a full and particular statement and account of his receipts and disbursements from the time of his appointment, or from the time of his last report, as the case may be, and shall exhibit his vouchers for his disbursements, which vouchers after cancellation, shall be retained by said Treasurer; all books, documents and papers belonging to the Treasurer's office, shall be the property and records of Garrett county, and at all times shall be subject to the examination of County Commissioners thereof. All books, documents and papers, goods and chattels, accounts and credits, money and deposits belonging to the Treasurer's office, or in his custody as Treasurer, shall deliver up and transferred by him to his successor in office when such successor is duly appointed and qualified; provided that the tax levy or levies placed in his hands for his collection, or so much thereof as may be uncollected or unaccounted for by him, and for which his bond is responsible, shall not be delivered or assigned over to his successor in office by such Treasurer, except as hereinafter provided, but his rights, powers and duties, as to collecting and reporting the same shall continue, and he shall collect and pay over the same as collected, to his successor in the manner and within the period hereinafter prescribed.

SEC. 8. And be it enacted, That the said Treasurer shall at the close of each week deposit in a bank to be designated by the Comptroller of the Treasury, of Maryland, all State taxes and money due the State, which may have come into his hands during the week, to the credit of the Comptroller of the State Treasury, and shall receive there or from said bank a certificate of deposit, which he shall immediately forward to the Comptroller, showing the amount placed to his credit; and said Treasurer shall in like manner deposit all money in his hands at the end of each week receved for county taxes and dues in such bank as he may see fit, to the credit of "The County Treasurer of Garrett County," which money shall be drawn only by the Treasurer making such deposit, and only for claims which may have been levied or ordered paid by the County Commissioners.

SEC. 9. And be it enacted, That it shall be the duty of the Treasurer as soon as the annual tax levy shall have been made to give notice thereof in one newspaper published in said county, and by hand bills posted in each district of said county, and to prepare the tax bills of each tax payer, and on application he shall forward the bill by mail or otherwise, or deliver the same to the person, persons, or corporate institutions to whom the property included in such bill is assessed.

SEC. 10. And be it enacted, That the said Treasurer shall, the first week in December of each and every year, publish in one newspaper published in said county, and by hand bills posted in three of the most public places in each election district, in said county, a list of all delinquent tax payers for the current year, which list shall contain the names of said delinquents, the amount of assessment of each, and the taxes due by each, with a notice appended thereto that the payment of said taxes will be enforced by advertisement and sale, unless the same are paid by the first day of January then next following.

SEC. 11. And be it enacted, That it shall be the duty of the Treasurer to enforce the payment of all taxes remaining unpaid on the first day of January, in the year succeeding that in which the same shall have been levied provided the notice required by the preceeding sections shall have been given. If the taxes be due and owing upon real property, or upon real and personal property, the Treasurer shall be authorized to enforce payment in the manner hereinafter prescribed, by a sale of either realty or personalty, whenever real estate is susceptible of division so that a part thereof will sell for enough to pay the taxes due and all costs, the Treasurer may in his discretion employ a surveyor to divide the same, and tax, as a part of the costs in such proceeding such compensation for the services of such surveyor as he may consider just, not exceeding the sum of three dollars per day, or the treasurer may sell the whole of any tract of land at his election.

SEC. 12. And be it enacted, That whenever it becomes necessary for said Treasurer to enforce the payment of taxes by a sale of realty, he shall advertise such real estate once a week for three successive weeks in one newspaper published in Garrett county, and by hand bills set up near said property and at the Court House door, and any advertised notice of a sale under the provisions of this act shall be deemed sufficient if it contains the time, terms and place of such sale, the year or years for which the taxes are due, to whom the property is assessed, the district where located, and the description of such land which is contained in the assessment books of the County Commissioners. In no case shall a description by metes and bounds be necessary.

SEC. 13. And be it enacted, That whenever it shall be necessary to enforce the payment of taxes by a sale of personal property, the said Treasurer shall make out a bill of such taxes, in the usual form, with an order at the bottom of said bill, directing the Sheriff of said county to levy upon the personal property of the delinquent, and sell the same to satisfy and pay the taxes so due. And it shall the duty of said Sheriff upon receiving such tax bill and order to levy upon and sell the personal property of such delinquent in the same manner and upon the same notice, and he shall be entitled to the same fees as if he were proceeding under an execution from a Justice of the Peace, and he shall immediately after such sale pay over to said Treasurer the amount due on said tax bill, and any surplus which may remain after the payment of taxes, interests, and costs shall be paid by said Sheriff to such delinquent tax payer. And the said Sheriff's bond shall be liable for all such tax bills placed in his hands by such Treasurer to the same extent and in the same manner that it is liable for execution claims issued to him.

SEC. 14. And be it enacted, That when any real estate shall be sold under the provision of this act for taxes, the same shall be reported to the Circuit Court for said county by the Treasurer, upon which report if the Court shall find that the provisions of this act in relation thereto have been complied with, there shall be a brief order nisi passed and a copy thereof published, as in case of judicial sales by trustees, and if no objections to the ratification of such sale be filed within the time limited by said order nisi, or if objections be filed and the objector is unable to show that the Treasurer has failed to comply with the provisions of this act, the sale shall be ratified by said Court, and for the purpose of hearing objections or passing orders under this act, said Courts shall be deemed to be always open as in chancery proceedings. If the objector to such sale show to the satisfaction of the judge or judges that the Treasurer has failed to comply with the provisions of this act, said sale shall be set aside, in which case the Treasurer shall forthwith proceed to a new sale of the property; upon the ratification of such sale the Treasurer shall convey to the purchaser the property purchased by him, upon payment of the costs of such deed by the purchaser, and the bond of the Treasurer shall be liable for the money paid by the purchaser, in the event of the sale not being so ratified with interest, and for all costs and expenses accruing from such sale. The Treasurer shall retain out of the proceeds of the sale when ratified, the amount of taxes and interest thereon, and all costs incurred in advertising, making, reporting and ratifying such sale, and shall pay over any excess to the owner or owners of the property thus sold. No such sale shall be set aside if the provisions of this act shall appear to have been substantially complied with and the burden of proof shall be on the exceptant thereto.

SEC. 15. And be it enacted, That if the said Treasurer shall for himself or any other person discount or buy or receive for less than its face and real value, any claim against said county, the person so offending shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon indictment and conviction, shall be fined not less than one hundred nor more than five hundred dollars for each and every offence.

SEC. 16. And be it enacted, That it shall be the duty of said Treasurer to inform himself by all lawful means of all property, stocks, or investments in said county liable to taxation, and not included in the last revised list of assessment, and of all buildings and improvements, and of all property created or acquired since said revised assessment; and he shall value the same at the full cash value thereof, and shall make return thereof to the said County Commissioners; and for the purposes of this section, the said Treasurer shall be clothed with the powers of general assessor, and his valuation of such property shall be subject to revision and correction by said Commissioners

SEC. 17. And be it enacted, That the Treasurer shall pay over according to law or to the order of the said County Commissioners, in the manner hereinbefore prescribed by this act, all County taxes and all monies due said County, and collected by him, and he shall also pay over to the Treasurer of the State of Maryland, according to law, all the State taxes levied in said county, and collected by him, and he shall be allowed two years from the date of each levy placed in his hands for collection, to complete the collection thereof, and to make his final settlement with said County Commissioners and with the Treasurer of Maryland, respectively; all claims for erroneous, insolvent or uncollectable tax bills for which he shall claim a credit, shall be presented before or at the time specified for said final settlement, and in no case shall said Commissioners allow credit for erroneous, insolvent or uncollectable taxes, unless satisfactory proof be produced under oath, that the same cannot be collected. The said Commissioners, in their discretion, at any time after the expiration of the term of any such Treasurer, or at the final settlement aforesaid, may direct and require him to deliver over to his successor in office, all balances of collected taxes due upon the levies with which he was charged, and also so to deliver over the notices, levies and other proceedings, had for the enforcement of the payment of said taxes, and in said case the said successor or newly appointed and qualified Treasurer upon the delivery to him of the bills for such taxes, shall be empowered and required to enforce the payment of said taxes in the same manner as his predecessor could have done, and he shall have all the powers and authority in law with which his predecessor was clothed for that purpose; in such case the bonds or bonds of the newly elected or succeeding Treasurer shall become responsible for the proper collection and disbursement of such taxes, and the bond or bonds of the retiring or retired Treasurer, shall be released from responsibility therefor; provided that no Treasurer's bond shall be considered as released or be cancelled, until in one mode or the other he has fully settled his accounts secured thereby, and fulfilled the duties of his said office.

SEC. 18. And be it enacted, That the said Treasurer shall receive as compensation for all the services required of him under this act four per cent. on all the taxes actually collected by him, and should said Treasurer find it necessary for his convenience at any time to appoint a deputy, he shall pay said deputy out of his commissions, and he shall be answerable for the acts of such deputy. And the County Commissioners shall, at the time of making the annual levy, levy a sufficient sum, by estimate, to cover the discount to tax payers, and compensation to the Treasurer, provided for in the preceeding sections.

SEC. 19. And be it enacted, That where land is in the hands of a trustee for sale or otherwise, whether by virtue of a decree of Court or under a deed of trust, and the taxes thereon are in arrears, under the provisions of this act, the said Treasurer may enforce the payment of such taxes in the same manner as if such land were not in the hands of a trustee.

SEC. 20. And be it enacted, That whenever land shall be sold by the Treasurer the owner thereof, prior to the sale, may redeem the same by paying into Court, to be paid to the purchaser thereof, within the period of six Calendar months, from the date of such sale the amount of the purchase money, with interest thereon, at the rate of twenty per cent. per annum from the date of sale.

SEC. 21. And be it enacted, That the provisions of the Code of Public General Laws of Maryland now in force, or hereafter enacted applicable to collectors of State and County taxes, except where the same are repealed by this act or are inconsistent with the provisions of this act, shall be held to apply to the Treasurer of said county, who as to his powers, rights, duties and liabilities, both Civil and Criminal, and those of his bond or bondsmen, shall be in all respects on a footing with State and County collectors, except as herein provided.

SEC. 22. And be it enacted, That all acts or parts of acts inconsistent with the provisions of this act are hereby repealed, so far as they apply to Garrett county.

SEC. 23. And be it enacted, That this act shall take effect from the date of its passage.

Approved, Elihue E. Jackson, Governor.

George M. Upsheer, Speaker House of Delegates.

George Peter, President of the Senate.

I hereby certify that the foregoing is a true copy of An Act of the General Assembly of Maryland, passed January Session, 1888.

CARLTON SHAFER,

Notice.

Having fitted up the shop recently vacated by G. F. Richardson, I am prepared to do all kinds of carriage, wagon and house painting and paper hanging, on short notice. Prices reasonable and work first-class. Work guaranteed. Asking for a share of the patronage of the public,

I remain, yours truly,

W. F. KING.

Oakland, April 3, 1888.

S. L. Townshend & Son

Are now located in their new store room, on Alder street, opposite Sturgiss' drug store, where they are enabled to wait upon the public, to whom they will sell as low as the lowest, the same quality of goods. Will take all kinds of produce they can handle, at the market price, in exchange for goods. They keep a full line of the celebrated Milwaukee Oil Grain Shoes, for men, women and children; also the Crusader Boots and Shoes.

Local Laws.

We give in this issue a number of local laws, passed at the late session of the legislature, the most important being Chapter 515, providing for the appointment of a County Treasurer. This law should be read carefully by every tax-payer in the county. It provides for the appointment of a treasurer on the third Tuesday in April, who is to be furnished an office in or near the court house, and the tax-payers are required to pay their taxes there. The treasurer is required to sit one day in each district, where payment of taxes may be made. Taxes become due on the 1st day of August, and during that month 5 per cent., and during the month of September 4 per cent. discount will be allowed. If the taxes are not paid before the 1st day of January, interest will be charged from the 1st day of August. On the 1st day of January the treasurer is required to prepare a list of all persons in arrears, giving the names of the delinquents, their assessment and the amount of their taxes, which shall be published in a newspaper, and also in handbills to be posted throughou the county. The treasurer will then proceed to advertise and sell property to make the taxes. We predict that the law will be very unpopular in our county.

The County Levy.

The passage by the late legislature of the bill for the appointment of a County Treasurer, makes it necessary to make the annual county levy this week. The provisions of this bill were not known to the commissioners until Friday of last week. In order to meet the requirements of the bill it was necessary to hire additional clerks, and the services of Messrs. G. W. Merrill, John C. Dunham and James W. White was secured, who, together with Mr. Hagans, by working almost day and night, have been able to so shape the work that the levy will be completed as required. A knowledge of the provisions of the bill was received too late to give notices through the papers last week, and notices announcing that the levy would be made this week were printed in hand-bill form and sent out over the county Saturday last, but no doubt a number of our citizens having bills against the county will be unable to get them in in time for the levy. The suggestion has been made that a large contingent fund be provided to meet such cases. The indications are that the tax rate will be about the same as last year.

Accidently Killed.

A young man about twenty-one years, named James Woods, was accidently shot in the head by Joseph Murphy, watchman at the Oakland Hotel, on Tuesday night, between 8 and 9 o'clock. Woods was a cousin to Murphy and had been stopping with him for about a week, and intended to go to his home in District No. 10, this county, on Wednesday morning. Tuesday evening at the time named above they were examining a pistol which Woods handed to Murphy, when it was by some means discharged, the ball entering the frontal bone about two inches above the left eye, from the effect of which he died about 5 o'clock A. M. Wednesday morning. A jury of inquest was empaneled by E-quire Gonder, with Dr. E. H. Bartlett as foreman, who met at 11 A. M., Wednesday and after hearing the facts in the case rendered a verdict of accidental shooting.

Be Sure and Consult Optician.

Prof. Sam'l Little, graduate optician, of the firm of S. T. Little & Sons, Jewelers, Cumberland, Md., and Grafton, W. Va., will visit Oakland, Md., April 13th and 14th. Persons suffering from optical defects should not fail to call; have their trouble diagnosed and secure glasses which will give comfort and happiness. Prof. Little can be consulted at the Commercial Hotel. He will visit Newburg April 6th and 7th. Rowlesburg, April 9th and 10th; Terra Alta, April 11th and 12th.

Consultations free.

Respectfully,

S. T. LITTLE & SONS.

Artesian Wells.

Good pure water is a necessity in every household. Drilled wells furnish the best, purest and cheapest. Kemphfer, Jamison & Co. will drill you a well and guarantee it, at the lowest possible figure. Address or call on them at Oakland, Md.

For Rent or Sale.

Furnished or unfurnished, a desirable residence, at Oakland, near Woolen Factory. House has fourteen rooms, twenty-two acres of land, and large stable. Two tenant houses and five acres adjoins the above. Cottage of ten rooms and half acre of ground near the Court House. For terms apply at this office.

List of Jurors for May Court.

The following is the list of jurors for May term of Court, as drawn by Judge Hoffman Saturday last:

Peter P. Royer, William M. Lohr, Simeon Green, John L. Reichter, Joseph H. Smithman, Isaac Kuykendall, George H. Gaur, Robert L. Somerville, Gustavus A. Shirer, Jacob D. Llewellen, Patrick Dorsey, Gregory E. Bevans, William A. Coddington, Thomas Sollars, Henry Eggers, Samuel Ferguson, Meshack Mattingly, John F. Ashby, Adam Garringer, G. C. Keller, D. F. Graham, George F. Loughridge, David J. Collins, Charles W. Bolden, William Hinebaugh, William H. Barnard, William E. Porter, Singleton M. Deffinbaugh, Christian Livengood, Thomas W. Frost, Peter J. Stephens, Andrew Pysell, William H. Spiker, John E. Gnagey, Archibald C. Dewitt, Henry Spoerline, Phillip T. Garthright, Richard B. White, Isaiah Boucher, Jonas Feigh, Thomas B. Wiley, Columbus L. Warnick, Martin S. Rush, Thompson Gilpin, Nelson Erwin, Perry Weimer, Thomas H. Cuppett, William F. Deakins.

Pay Your Taxes.

Mr. Jonas E. Gnagy was in Oakland last week to make arrangements to enforce the payment of delinquent taxes. We understand that he proposes to close up his business at once by proceeding legally against every one who is in arrears for taxes for 1886 and 1887. Mr. Gnagey has been all over the county two or three times each year to fill appointments announced in both of the county papers and by hand bills, and feels that he has given tax-payers every opportunity for the payment of taxes. Some tax payers have the impression that they cannot be compelled to pay their taxes until the collector has personally called upon them. He is not required under the law to call upon any one. Mr. Gnagey does not wish to add costs to the already high taxes, but he is compelled, in self-defense, to preceed in the manner indicated above against all who do not settle at once.

Killed by Lightning.

Early Thursday morning of last week, during the prevalence of a violent rain and thunder storm, the dwelling house of Mr. Solomon Calhoun, at Painters Mills, Preston county, W. Va. six miles from Terra Alta, was struck by lightning, instantly killing Marshall J. Calhoun, aged about 25 years. Several persons were in the same room, but no others were injured. The young man was to have been married next month. Deceased was a brother of Mr. J. W. Calhoun, of the firm of Sincell & Calhoun, blacksmiths, of Oakland.

Seriously Injured.

A telegram was received here Wednesday announcing that Mr. Charles Casteel had been seriously injured at the Browning saw mill, at Albrights, W. Va. The extent of the injury is not known, but the fact that his wife was telegraphed for would indicate that his injuries were serious. Dr. J. Lee McComas was telegraphed for but was in Baltimore. We hope his injuries may not prove fatal. His wife and children passed through Oakland about 3 P. M. Wednesday.

Owner Wanted.

A large dark bay stallion, with black mane and tail and black legs from knees down, and a few white hairs on forehead, small bit of white on hind legs, mostly on left, was left at Richard Liston's in Selbysport, Garrett county, about the 1st of April, inst. The horse is supposed to have been stolen from somewhere in the South Branch region of West Virginia. When in full flesh he would weigh about 1,400. For information call on or address S. P. Friend, Friendsville, Garrett county, Md.

Grantsville.

Died, April 7th, Mrs. Barbara Yomer, wife of John Yomer, of lung fever, aged 40 years and six months. But two weeks ago her little child, one year old, had died of brain fever, and 4 remaining children are down with the measles.

Mr. C. A. Snyder has secured a position with Charles Duvall, of Baltimore, as a traveling salesman, and started on his first trip some ten days ago.

The sugar-making season just closed was a very short one, and the crop will be less than an average one. Buyers are paying seven cents per pound. Taking the whole crop this is an advance of one cent, as last year it only brought six.

Miss Lizzie Loewenstein left this place for Michigan Monday last.

The house known as the Layman house, recently purchased by J. E. Gnagey, and which was occupied for several years by T. H. Bittinger as a store room, has been torn down and in its stead will be erected a large store house and furniture room. Just across the street Mr. Noah Broadwater is tearing down the blacksmith shop and rebuilding on the back end of the lot, and in the front he will erect a fine store house. B.

Elkins.

We will have a telegraph office here shortly. The West Va. Central R. R. has been using the telephone heretofore, but it seems that something more accurate is necessary. Mr. J. Beckman says he don't want the office. Therefore another operator will be required. Mr. B. has been a faithful agent for the company and we might add, a successful merchant.

The W. Va. Central has a new schedule for running trains. A new train was put on Sunday, and was badly wrecked the same day near Thomas, fortunately no one was seriously injured, but it may be a suggestion for less Sabbath desecration. "Remember the Sabbath day to keep it holy."

Messrs. E. H. Barrett & Co. are [illegible] a new vein of coal almost in sight of Elkins. We understand it is 8 feet. We understand the company intends mining extensively this summer. They have erected a store house one hundred by thirty feet, and will have on a large stock of goods shortly.

We have had beautiful weather. People are beginning to till the soil, make gardens, &c.

The little girl of Mr. J. M. White, who has been so seriously ill has nearly recovered.

Mr. Woodworth will preach for us on Sunday night. And Mr. Welch the folowing Sunday at 10.30 A. M.

Saturday night two weeks hence, Rev. G. M. Kelly will lecture at Oak Grove on the history of the Methodist Church.

Flatwoods.

Farmers plowing and weather favorable, but snow clad peaks may still be seen.

Mr. R. M. Alexander expects to leave Flatwoods soon and turn his attention to sawmilling.

Mrs. M. J. Miller received a broken arm by an enraged cow a few days ago.

Mr. Wm. A. says he thinks that the grass crop in this part of the county will be somewhat damaged by the grub worm.

Mr. R. Durst left a few days ago for the railroad, where he expects to be employed.

W. E. K.

HOMOEOPATHY.—32,655 cases in European hospitals receiving Homoeopathic treatment showed a death rate of 4.4 per cent., while 119,630 cases under old treatment had a death rate of 10.5. (See Sharps' Tracts.)

Official figures in Bavaria give Homoepathy a death rate in Cholera of 6.75 against 48.50 of old treatments. (Dr. Rath)

These figures, whose accuracy has never been refuted, should make every one give the matter a more than passing thought, and it would be well to write for a copy of our Book Catalogue, and "Medical Index," also, if interested in live stock, of our "Veterinary Index." We mail them free. Many druggists keep our medicines or they may be ordered direct.

All persons are warned against cutting down any of the timber on my land on the Hooppole Road, adjoining the land of Bowie Johnson, about three miles from Deer Park and six miles from Oakland. The penalty for cutting down timber in Garrett county, Md., without permission of the owner of the land, is the same, under the Act of 1880, ch. 264, as for felontously stealing goods or chattels to the value of the tree or trees so cut down.

THE ROCK-RECORD.

A cloud, upon a summer's day,
Flung down cool rain-drops on its way;
Ten thousand ages since have sped,
Yea, countless æons since have fled,

Empires of man—create since then
Have risen, and have sunk again,
A ceaseless tide, whose ebb and flow
Have filled our world with weal or woe.

And yet those tiny drops of rain
Impressions made that still remain
As deep and full, sharp-cut and clear,
As if enstamped this very year.

O, ye who've smit with sword and flame,
To make yourselves a lasting name,
Already most are quite forgot,
And all in fame, as flesh, shall rot.

But of the cloud that cooled the day,
Such countless cycles far away,
The record, though but writ in sand,
Shall yet be read while earth shall stand.

So deeds of love, however small,
That seem forgotten as they fall,
Shall live when earth has passed away,
Nor be forgot through God's own day.

LOST IN A CAVERN.

A Rash Expedition Into the Bowels of the Earth.

A Plunge Into Total Darkness—Wandering About in Mortal Terror for Thirty-Six Hours Before Making an Escape.

Along the Rio Grande, in the southwestern portion of Texas, the country presents a series of hills, mountains, ravines and canyons. Huge masses of rocks, mammoth in their proportions, jut out over dizzy precipices, as if thrown up by some mighty convulsion of nature. It has a vast territorial area of unfenced, sparsely populated country, owing to its unproductive soil. It is to-day what it will be a half century hence—nothing but a vast and indifferent pasture land, for its impoverished soil scarcely supports the scanty tufts of grass that have a consumptive hue, and seem to gather subsistence by stretching from cranny to cranny. One will find here narrow fissures penetrating deeply into the earth, and tunneled caves connected with one another by a series of passages varying in extent. Riding over a plateau one will come suddenly upon vast holes twenty or thirty feet in circumference—one which I measured being more than 150 feet deep and having a subterranean cavern at the bottom which has never been explored.

While riding along one of those deep canyons characteristic of the country I was attracted by a massive cluster of bowlders that seemed to be literally covered with a fungus growth of pendent vines, bearing blossoms with petals of aromatic odor. Chapota bushes and the never-failing soto plant stood beside this mass of rock, while a Spanish dagger-plant, like a lone and solitary sentinel, seemed to guard the entrance of what I discovered to be the mouth of a cave. It was one of those sultry days in spring, and the silence of death seemed to brood over hill and canyon. The semi-tropical region is blessed through the sultry days with delightful breezes, but occasionally there comes a day so quiet that the silence is oppressive. Such was the eventful day when I staked my horse in that lonely canyon. Taking from the side of my saddle a small lantern, I started to the cave. Through crags and tangle I made my way, my route being necessarily circuitous, owing to the precipitous nature of the canyon.

The mouth of the cavern I reckoned to be fully forty feet in circumference. It was a veritable Delphos, quaint and ghost-like with its caverns, seemingly fit for the seven sleepers of legendary lore, or the great Boabdil and his sleeping host, who will some day awake to restore the glory of the Moors. With lantern in hand I entered this vaulted chamber. I had no desire to go far, but I was lured by some strange infatuation. My course at first led me down a rather steep incline; my direction was then changed to an almost right angle. New beauties met me at every point, which I stopped to admire with hearty appreciation. Masses of beautifully hanging stalactites like icicles hung in pendant masses, sparkling like myriads of stars through the faint gleam of my lantern. Stalagmites of pyramidal shape in many places touched the sparkling mass above, forming one solid pillar that glistened like gems of the Orient. I reached one chamber of remarkable beauty which had several passages leading in different directions. I looked around me to mark familiar objects, for the awful solitude and loneliness of the place startled me. I had been walking steadily for fully half an hour. To make assurance doubly sure, I took from my pocket an old letter, and tearing it in pieces, strewed it along the passage that would give me exit. I then chose one of the passages, and moved slowly on with my lantern slightly raised, and my hand on my revolver, peering cautiously around at every object darkly outlined by the flickering light.

The atmosphere was oppressive, and the passage rugged and laborious. I stopped to consider whether or not to proceed. What had I to gain? Truly I had found a wonderful cavern, but why not wait for a more opportune time to explore it? I was alone, and if I should lose my way! But such thoughts were idle. How could I lose my way? I would go but a short distance and then retrace my steps and seek the bright sunshine again. I started once more, my route leading deeper into the bowels of the earth. I glanced around me, now at the glistening walls that seemed to dance and sparkle like precious gems, now overhead at twinkling gleams of blue and gold. Over my head was a mass of stalactites in in which was embedded an almost human hand of exquisite symmetrical beauty. I reached for a stone that I might sever it from its rocky mass, but I could find none large enough for my purpose. I started in quest of one, and in my precipitous flight lost my footing and was hurled into a yawning pit some twenty feet deep. The fall shattered the glass in my lantern and extinguished the blaze. Temporarily stunned by the fall, my clothes rent, and my limbs bleeding, I reached for my lantern, and in doing so cut my hands on the shattered glass.

The terrible reality broke upon my mind. I was alone in Plutonian darkness, the victim of a silly infatuation. I ran my hands hurriedly through my pockets in search of my match-case, but to my horror I had left it in my vest, which I had taken off and placed with my camp equipment. What a fatal mistake! Once more I hurriedly searched my pockets, and this time was rewarded by finding the stump of a match. I gloated over it as a miser does his treasure. It was gold to me; ah, it was even more, it was life! I felt for the oil-can of my lantern, and was gratified to find it within easy reach of me. I placed my finger over the smooty wick and shook well the can. I was heartily pleased to find it full of oil. I cautiously ignited my match and the sulphurous flame threw out a blue, unsteady light. By its faint gleam I saw the three passages, and one that would lead me to daylight and freedom. With great precaution I touched the wick of my oil-can. It flamed up, sputtered, and jumping from the wick seemed to slowly fade away into eternal darkness. There was no time for idle repinings. I must grope my way to the passage and hurry from the dismal place.

I reached the passage and scrambled over the very bowlder I had passed before entering my unlucky chamber. On, on I sped as fast as the nature of the passage would permit, sometimes over soft sandstone and again over flinty rocks that rolled and rustled beneath my impatient tread. Sometimes my passage would widen so that I could walk with ease, and at others I was forced to partially crawl. At last my way was completely blockaded. Imagine the terrible suspense that overwhelmed me. I had taken the wrong course. Great beads of perspiration stood upon my brow, and my breath came spasmodically. I could hear the palpitation of my heart, and my throat seemed to be devoured with a consuming thirst. I retraced my steps and in counterfeited glee tried to shake off the awful gloom that surrounded me. I laughed aloud and was answered by a hollow mockery. For hours and hours I vainly sought to find an exit, but my efforts proved of no avail. In a hoarse, changed voice I screamed for help, and in the frenzy of the moment invoked malediction on the heads of those who knew nothing of my fate. Physical exertion and suspense began to tell on my powerful frame. Every moment found me weaker as I pictured to myself the horrors of starvation, insanity and a thousand contending evils.

This stimulated me to increased effort, and I bounded forth like a frightened deer, but had gone but a short distance when my head came in contact with a pendent mass that laid me prostrate and unconscious. How long I remained in a comatose state I can not say. When I recovered consciousness, I glared fiercely around me and bounded to my feet. I had received a cruel blow in my headlong rush, and my woolen shirt and shoulders were covered with clotted blood. My head ached with a dull, uneasy pain, and I felt delirious. I thought of home and all the tender memories that cluster around it, and in that awful moment shed tears, the first since childhood.

I thought of the only human creature that loved me, and wished that I might see her face once more, and then lay me down and die. I appealed to Heaven, and in the pathetic language of a child begged for mercy and deliverance, ever struggling onward in my endless search and endeavor, for the instinct of self-preservation is ever strong in the human breast. Following a tortuous and intricate passage, I suddenly turned a sharp angle and saw faintly in the distance a gleam of light. I summoned my last remaining strength and reached the entrance of a circular hole, where I fell, overcome by nervous prostration. I found myself seven miles from my original entrance, after having been in that dismal place for thirty-six hours.—J. T. Aubrey, in Louisville Courier-Journal.

Baked Monkey and Lizard.

In Spanish Honduras the dish of honor is baked monkey, and sweeter meat you could not imagine. These monkeys live up in the branches of trees and on the vines; their feet never touch the earth beneath them, and they live on the choicest nuts and fruits. No chicken was ever so sweet and tender as baked monkey. I do confess, though, that on one of the last occasions of my dining in Honduras I did not feel that all was well, when at the end of the meal I found I had stuffed myself with baked lizard. Of course, there is nothing wrong with the lizard, except our petty prejudice. It tasted splendidly, but when at last I saw the big, scaly leg and the claw of the lizard, I don't think I liked it.—Washington Post.

LUXURIOUS BATHS.

Cleanliness, Neatness and Chiropody for the Nation's Law-Makers.

The bath accommodations of the House are a luxury that brings to the mind of back county constituents fairy visions of Oriental grandeur. Away down in the depths of the capitol, down still yet below the basement, the marble tanks of tempered water into which the members plunge are located. When the elevator bumps against the bottom and can go down no further, there are three steps with a brass rail on each side, and then you are in a little square room almost as warm as a steam bakery. A door leads into a short passage between the heavy foundations. Here the air is warmer than in the room. Suddenly it turns at right angles into another short passage, where the thermometer registers still higher. Another turn and another thermometric jump, and there are the bath-rooms. The plural applies to the big walnut cabinets with blind doors which stand in a row along the wall. There are nine of these, and in each is a large tank or bath-tub which can be filled with hot or cold or tepid water in a very few minutes. These are all in a narrow "L"-shaped room, which is presided over by a big colored man and his assistant. The cabinets, or baths, are about the size of an ordinary hotel bed room, and the tubs are big enough for the largest sized statesmen to wallow about in with ease and comfort. Tom Reed, and Barnes, of Georgia, test their capacity more than any other members, but they even can roll over and flounder about in one of the marble tanks with as much ease as they could perform the same evolutions anywhere.

Some of the tubs are simply iron, nicely painted, but the new ones are made of marble and each looks like a great sarcophagus. Three ordinary men might get in one of them without much crowding. The marble sides are as slippery as glass and as warm as the flesh that touches them. Thermometers are hung in each bath and on the walls in the passage. The temperature is kept always the same, and the member might promenade for three hours in nothing but his epidermis without danger of cold. It was here that Mr. Reagan struggled with a tight undershirt on the occasion of his famous bath while the vote on the Morrison bill was being taken.

The temperature is just at a point where the least exertion would bring on a profuse perspiration, and but little rubbing in the bath is sufficient to bring a ruddy glow. Members come up in the elevator from these regions with the hair curling about their temples and their cheeks as pink as a baby's.

Some of the older members take a bath as the last step in their preparation for making a speech. They write the speech, commit it to memory, take a bath and then deliver it. If a member has the rheumatism or a cold, or for any other reason feels the necessity of being parboiled, there is a Russian steam bath at the end of the bath-room to which he resorts. It is a little close room furnished with a wooden bench and a coil of steam pipes that cover the walls of the compartment. When the door shuts there can't much heat get out, and the thermometer naturally runs up into the big combinations. A member lies on the bench, the door is shut and the steam is turned on. He is then in about as hot a place as he is likely to enter in this life. He gets enough of this in a little while, and he has to be cooled off gradually by being plunged first into a tub of hot water, next into cooler water, then cooler and cooler, until he gets back to the temperature of ordinary mortals. It takes about an hour or an hour and a half's cooling before he ventures out into the colder atmosphere of the House; and it is best for him to walk rapidly on his way home.

Members of Congress can bathe here any day, provided not more than a hundred select the same day; but on Saturday none but members can enter. On other days employes of the House, or men who have been given tickets by members, may bathe. On Friday business is most brisk, and the swashing of the water may be heard from early morning until the place is closed in the evening. It is hard to tell how many people are bathed on this day, but ordinarily a hundred is as many as can be handled "in hours." After an all-night session the capacity of the rooms is strained. Members have all their toilet made here except their barbering. The air smells moist with steam, and is fragrant with perfume and scented soaps. The very finest toilet furnishings are used. The "black man of the bath" will rub you down and perform all the services of the bath.

Besides this he has proper instruments for the purpose, and he will trim off the corns and keep the feet in order. When a new member is elected from a country district it generally takes "a right smart while" to get his feet in condition. They require much care and attention. But this man keeps all the Congressional feet in order without regard to size or previous condition.—Washington Star.

—The infertility of many soils is due more to their mechanical condition, their texture, and relations to heat and moisture, than to lack of plant food. Such soils want amendments first and manures afterwards. Some soils will give good returns for manuring; others, without irrigation or amendment by drainage, tillage, use of lime, marl or muck, or otherwise, will not.

—Barley is largely used in California as food for horses. It is also used largely in Egypt, and among the Arabs, and it is said is one secret of the excellence of their horses.

FAILURE IN LIFE.

It Is Due in Most Instances to the Absence of Application.

Well now, the failure of many young men in life is distinctly due to the absence of application. I could easily give you not a few instances that have come under my notice here; lads, not deficient in ability, not addicted to vice, but so destitute of the power of application, that, no matter what line of business they enter on, they could not stick to it. A young fellow enters a merchant's office; good opening; excellent prospects; but before a twelve month is out, he finds he has made a mistake. He now determines to be a doctor; starts a course of medical study; but in a few months gets heartily wearied of that, and is persuaded that he is cut out for the law. So he sets forth on a fresh line of rails, only to discover that a professional life will not suit him at all; his ambition now is to be on the Stock Exchange. But the work there soon proves equally distasteful, and he throws it up in disgust; and unless he marries a rich wife (which such a man often contrives to do), he hangs about a penniless good-for-nothing to the end of his days. It is an excellent thing for a youth, almost as soon as school-days are over, to have to depend to a great extent upon his own exertions. If he is saved from the efforts of making his own way in the world, and the necessity of establishing a position for himself, he is denied a powerful stimulus to toil and perseverance. The late President Garfield, who rose by his own exertions from the humblest to the highest station in his own country, once observed: "In nine times out of ten, the best thing that can happen to a young man is to be tossed overboard, and compelled to sink or swim for himself. In all my acquaintance, I never knew a man to drown who was worth saving."

There is now an honored and respected member of the House of Commons who was once a working stonemason, and he says: "In my opinion, truthfulness, sobriety, absolute punctuality and self-reliance are indispensable factors to success. A young man should never be afraid of work, however hard or common it may seem to be." The men who in my trade or occupation have risen to the top of the tree, have generally been men who, to use President Lincoln's favorite expression, "kept pegging away," and were never in the habit of shelving their own work upon other persons. There is a proverb I used to meet with in Turkey, which advises you never to do to-day what can be left off till to-morrow, and never to do yourself what you can get another to do for you. I hope you will go as much as possible in the teeth of such degrading counsel. The advice General Gordon gave is incomparably more worthy your acceptance. The occasion I allude to was the first day on which fire was opened at Sebastopol from the twenty-one gun battery, and when the sand-bags forming one of the embrasures caught fire. A corporal and a sapper of the Engineers were told off to repair the damage. The corporal ordered his companion to mount the embrasure, undertaking himself to hand up the fresh bags to him. The firing was heavy at the time, and the sapper demurred to this arrangement, suggesting that the corporal should get up, and that he would do the handing-up business. There was a bit of wrangling over it. General Gordon, hearing the dispute, came to the spot, mounted the pile of bags himself, and whilst a storm of bullets swept around him coolly performed the task. Thereupon he quietly descended, and looking sternly at the corporal, said: "Never order a man to do a thing you are afraid to do yourself."—J. Thain Davidson.

Switzerland's President.

William Frederick Hertenstein, recently elected President of Switzerland, was Vice President last year. He belongs to the canton of Zurich, the second in importance in the Confederation, Bern being the first. President Hertenstein is about sixty-three years old. He was born at Kyburg, canton Zurich. After receiving a good academic education, he entered the service of his native canton as forest officer, whence he was promoted, after some years, to be inspector of the forests of Zurich. During the nine years from 1870 to 1879 he was a member of the government of that canton. Since the second of those dates he has been a member of the National Assembly and of the Council of States, also Vice President, as previously stated. Since 1872 Mr. Hertenstein has been a Colonel of artillery. He has been head of the Military Department in the Swiss Council.—Chicago Inter Ocean.

Tact in Leap-Year Matters.

It is seldom necessary for a bright girl to take advantage of the prerogative leap year gives her, for there are so many more ingenious and satisfactory means at her disposal. For several weeks a group of young people in Albany been devoting themselves to amateur theatricals, paying particular attention to the presentation of a drama which has its culmination in a proposal and acceptance by the leading actors. In this case the heroine was even more deeply interested in the hero than the exigencies of the play required, and in accepting the offer of his affections was so ardent that it set the young man thinking, until he decided that he would like to make the stage scene real. This he effected just after the last rehearsal a few evenings ago, and his prospective bride will take care that he never learns how artfully she set his mind moving in the direction she desired.—Albany (N. Y.) Journal.

TEMPERANCE READING.

YOUNG MEN, TAKE HEED!

The Sad Career of One Who Migrated from Temperancetown to Rumville.

A fine young man was Frank Dale and his prospects for a good and useful career were very promising.

His parents lived in Temperancetown and here Frank was brought up, amidst good influences, and at the age of twenty-one he was as fine a specimen of manhood as one often meets. But, alas! he became dissatisfied with his quiet home life. He began to consider the good people of Temperancetown too strict and absurd in their notions, and his opinions were strengthened by the pompous talk of his friend Charley Jonely. This same Charley Jonely had once been a resident of Temperancetown, but the gay life of the neighboring town known as Social Glass had attracted him away. Now Charley was trying to induce Frank Dale to take up his residence in Social Glass. For a time Frank persistently declined the oft-repeated invitations of his friend to at least pay him a visit, knowing the bad reputation of Social Glass. But in an evil hour he yielded and left the pure and peaceful atmosphere of Temperancetown for the gaities of Social Glass.

For a time he was content to remain here with his friend Charley Jonely. But by and by he began to consider Social Glass a trifle dull and unsatisfactory. So he resolved to go elsewhere in search of the pleasure which he now considered essential to his existence. So he one day started for Brandywine. On his way to this large and fashionable city he came to a lovely little village composed principally of dainty whitewashed cottages nestling among green trees. Here he beheld quaint arbors covered with lovely flowering vines, sparkling waters leaping and laughing down a rocky bed, flowers blooming in profusion and tiny song birds flitting gaily from tree to tree. The name of this village was Loveland, and the place was noted for the number of lovely young ladies who dwelt there.

Being weary from his long journey, Frank approached one of the white, vine-covered cottages to procure some refreshments. In answer to his knock on the half-open door a lovely young girl appeared and graciously bade him enter.

He obeyed, and having made known his wishes food and clear, cold, sparkling water for drink was soon placed before him. While he ate the maiden sat near and entertained him with pleasant conversation.

Her modest, graceful manners charmed him and he found excuse for tarrying in the little village and frequently dropped in to spend an hour or two with the maiden. Finally he concluded that he would give up his intended trip to Brandywine and take the gentle maiden to his parents' home in Temperancetown as his wife. To his joy, she offered no objections. They were married and at once started on the road to Temperancetown.

When they reached Social Glass Frank could not refrain from tarrying a short time to renew old acquaintances. In vain, his lovely bride tried to influence him to pass by Social Glass without stopping.

Frank had not been in Social Glass long before he abandoned all thought of returning to Temperancetown to live and soon took his wife and went to Brandywine.

When Frank left Temperancetown he had both wealth and influential friends. He had not lived long in Brandywine, however, before he began to be in want. Still he managed for a while to keep up a respectable appearance. But at length he realized that for want of sufficient funds he must seek a more modest place of residence.

Correspondence with his friend Charley Jonely, who had moved to Rumville, revealed the fact that living was cheaper there, so thither he went. But his mode of life had sadly impaired both his health and his influence, and he could find no way to add to his funds, which were daily growing less. Then, too, there was now the burden of supporting not only his wife but two children as well, and his friends had almost deserted him. Under these awful weights his spirits sank.

Had he remained in Temperancetown no such dire misfortune would have overtaken him. True health might be temporarily impaired and "riches take to themselves wings and fly away" even there, but he would still have had what is better than health or riches—the respect and confidence of his fellow-citizens and a clear conscience. But this fact remains—he left Temperancetown and thus sank lower and lower in the scale of humanity till he was but little better than the brutes. You might see him reeling through the narrow, dirty streets of Rumville, with bloated face and ragged clothing.

In his miserable home, with its scant and rickety furniture, cowers his poor wife, her youthful grace and beauty gone. His scantily-clothed children shiver and cry for bread, but both wife and children dread the coming of him who has been the cause of all their misery. Frank Dale, who could have made his life so noble, so useful, so honorable had he shunned the first step in the downward road to ruin, is now a miserable drunkard nearing the brink of eternal destruction.

Oh, it is terrible to thing of, and yet is it not true that there are thousands of young men ready to follow in his footsteps? Will they not take warning from the fate of so many who have gone before them and never leave Temperance-town?—Kate M. Farlow, in Toledo Blade.

LINCOLN ON TEMPERANCE.

What He Said Before His Election, and Afterwards While President of the United States.

Rev. Dr. James B. Dunn, in his history of the Temperance movement in the "Centennial Temperance Volume," says:

When the committee of the nominating convention came to him at Springfield, Ill., to inform him of his nomination, some of his neighbors, acquainted with his temperate habits and consequently unprepared to give a political committee the usual treats, sent to his house some bottles of champagne, but he said: "It won't do here," and ordered it back where the committee might be assembled. When offered wine at Cincinnati on his way to take the reins of government, he said: "For thirty years I have been a Temperance man, and I am too old to change;" again, when asked by a friend, after his inauguration, "if he was not overawed in addressing that immense audience of intellectual men?" "Not half so much," he replied, "as he had been in addressing a Temperance meeting."

At the celebration of the twenty-first anniversary of the order of the Sons of Temperance, in Washington, the Grand Division, under the chief-marshalship of F. M. Beadley, marched with music and banners in large numbers to the White House and presented an address to President Lincoln, in which they asked that drunken officers might be discharged from the service; and that facilities might be extended to organize in divisions and hold Temperance meetings in the departments and hospitals about the city. The following is Mr. Lincoln's reply in full:

"As a matter of course, it will not be possible for me to make a response co-extensive with the address which you have presented to me. If I were better known than I am, you would not need to be told that in the advocacy of the cause of Temperance you have a friend and sympathizer in me.

"When I was a young man—long ago—before the Sons of Temperance, as an organization, had an existence, I, in an humble way, made Temperance speeches, and I think I may say that to this day I have never, by my example, belied what I then said.

"In regard to the suggestions which you make for the purpose of the advancement of the cause of Temperance in the army, I can not make particular response to them at this time. To prevent intemperance in the army is even a part of the articles of war. It is a part of the law of the land, and was so, I presume, long ago, to dismiss officers for drunkenness. I am not sure that, consistent with the public service, more can be done than has been done. All, therefore, that I can promise you is (if you will be pleased to furnish me with a copy of your address), to have it submitted to the proper department, and have it considered whether it contains any suggestions which will improve the cause of Temperance and repress the cause of drunkenness in the army any better than it is already done. I can promise no more than that.

"I think that the reasonable men of the world have long since agreed that intemperance is one of the greatest, if not the very greatest, of all evils amongst mankind. That is not a matter of dispute, I believe. That the disease exists, and that it is a very great one, is agreed upon by all.

"The mode of cure is one about which there may be differences of opinion. You have suggested that in an army—our army—drunkenness is a great evil, and one which, while it exists to a very great extent, we can not expect to overcome so entirely as to have such successes in our arms as we might have without it. This, undoubtedly, is true, and while it is, perhaps, rather a bad source to derive comfort from, nevertheless, in a hard struggle, I don't know but that it is some consolation to be aware that there is some intemperance on the other side, too; and that they have no right to beat us in physical combat on that ground.

"But I have already said more than I expected to be able to say when I began, and if you please to hand me a copy of your address, it shall be considered. I thank you very heartily, gentlemen, for this call, and for bringing with you these very many pretty ladies."

A NOTABLE lesson in Temperance was given the other day at Honolulu by the Consul-General of Japan, Mr. Ando, who is a native Japanese. He had received as a present from some friends two casks of liquor; but for the purpose of warning his fellow-countrymen in Hawaii against drinking habits, and to show them that he meant what he said on the subject of Temperance, he took the casks into his yard, had holes bored into them, and poured out the contents upon the ground. Would that all consuls were like this Japanese official at the Sandwich Islands!—Union Signal.

THE Floating Church Temperance Society of New York City recently celebrated their seventeenth anniversary. During the last year 257 seamen have signed their pledge, making a total of 7,542 names upon their books.

THE Catholic Total Abstinence Union of Philadelphia has passed a resolution that it is inconsistent with the pledge of a member to sign a liquor dealer's petition for license or go on his bond.

MISCELLANEOUS.

—The consumption of coal at Pittsburgh, Pa., has diminished 4,500,000 tons a year since the introduction of natural gas.

—In the palace of Catherine the Great, near St. Petersburg, there is a room which is lined, walls and ceiling, with the finest amber.

—A novelty in church organs is being exhibited at Milan, Italy. It is constructed entirely of paper. The inventor is a priest.

—In Ovid, Mich., after Sunday morning service, the prominent citizens may usually be seen racing horses up and down the main street of the town.

—All the street railways in Dover, N. H., are under the presidency of a woman. The treasurer is her husband, and the company feels safe that he will never get into Canada.

—In a graveyard in America stands a tombstone with the following inscription: "Here will lie Mr. James Jones; at present he still lives and carries on his shoe store at 150 Franklin street."—Fliegende Blatter.

—A Montreal newspaper says that a citizen who had agreed to lease a certain house on University street was considerably surprised when he came to sign the lease to find that a clause had been inserted forbidding him to play the piano, play cards, or open the windows on Sunday. He didn't sign.

—A traveling manager of a theater company, who intended playing "Paradise" in the south of France and feared to shock fastidious matrons, to remove prejudices added to his playbill that no anxiety need be felt by the most refined and moral, as Adam and Eve would appear in costumes.

—The Merced Canal, thought to be the largest irrigation work ever constructed in this country, representing an expenditure of five years of time and $1,500,000 of money, has just been opened. It is expected to irrigate about one-quarter of the county of Merced, Cal., which lies in the heart of the San Joaquin Valley.

—An Eastern man took his underwear to a Chinese laundry in Stockton, Cal., forgetting that he had $115 in greenbacks sewed in his undershirt. He hastened to the wash-house, but found his clothes already in hot water. The Chinamen all denied having seen the money, but he looked around for himself and found the greenbacks behind the stove, where they had been placed to dry.

—A Philadelphia servant has distinguished herself by an original sort of private theatricals. While her mistress was away she attired herself in the best dress of the lady of the house, made calls upon strange ladies and invited them to return her courtesy. When they called she entertained them appropriately, showed them over the house and felt provoked because her girl had gone out. The farce continued for some time.

A POPULAR INDUSTRY.

A Manicure Talks Unreservedly About His Peculiar Trade.

A professional manicure, who has made a small fortune in the practice of his peculiar profession in this city for the past ten years, delivered himself thus pointedly in relation to his peculiar art.

"Less than fifteen years ago manicuring was an unheard of industry in this country, and it was impossible to procure the implements necessary to its practice anywhere but in Paris. Now there are few towns so small that they have not at least one manicure, and no druggist's stock is complete without a supply of the requisites to the care of the finger-nails. Doubtless the present practice is preferable to the old style pen-knife butchery, but it is questionable whether our women and dudes have not let the customary American excess creep into this as into most other vices and virtues that we import from abroad.

"Civilization eliminates from the uses for the hands certain things which would make the growth of nails none too great for the natural wear and tear on them, and, therefore, cutting or filing them as they grow too long is an actual necessity. To produce an agreeable result from this process is desirable from an æsthetic point of view. That the sharply-pointed and highly-polished nail prescribed by the professional manicure as the professional thing is either agreeable to the eye or in good taste is doubtful. Of course it is to the interest of the professional manicure to foster the art.

"Taken by itself the finger-nail is not altogether a lovely object. There is in it a suggestion of our animal nature and origin. As an unobtrusive portion of a shapely hand, it is not objectionable, but the present object of manicuring seems to me to bring the nails into the utmost conspicuousness. Nature has provided the nail with a soft, dead luster, which the manicure surplants with patent-leather polish. To this is added a point, suggestive of the beast of prey, and a barbarous snipping of the skin surrounding the nail.

"Good taste would suggest that instead of a point the object aimed at should be a graceful curve, and common sense teaches that the skin-snapping process be avoided altogether. The peculiarity of American fashions seems to be that it imports from other countries only the more senseless of their fashionable customs, and we are more likely to follow the Chinese, of letting the nails grow so long that they have to be worn in ornamented cases than to imitate the Chinese or any other foreigners in the sensible things which tend to make life simpler and easier."—*N. STYLES IN UMBRELLAS.

Elaborate Designs for Handles Originated by Americans.

It may often puzzle a person where all those new styles in umbrellas and parasols come from which are constantly thrown on the market here. They flourish, more or less, for a few brief months, and then they disappear forever. The representative of the biggest umbrella house in the country—the latter located in Indianapolis—said on that point to the Stroller: "American manufacturers have freed themselves completely from the thralldom of foreign styles in the matter of umbrellas. As to parasols, no. Two Philadelphia houses keep some agents constantly employed in Europe picking up the newest 'kinks' in style in advance. They have to exercise great judgment and discretion, however, and must understand the bent of the American ladies' taste to perfection, otherwise they are said to make mistakes which would cost their employers thousands of dollars and them their good jobs. Many styles in parasols which become the rage in Europe will not sell here at all. You see, in the matter of parasols such weighty questions as complexion, climate, prevailing style of dresses, etc., have to be considered, and an error as to one of these points will make a parasol unsalable. Women of means want a parasol to match each dress, you know. Then the question comes up whether they will have silver tips or gold ones, black ribs or white and big or little handles. As to umbrellas now, our native manufacturers show both more taste and ingenuity in inventing styles. No such elaborate designs for handles, nor such original conceptions, are to be seen in London or Berlin shops as you may find in any first-class store in New York or Chicago. And our American men seem to be willing to spend more money on a costly fanciful article in umbrellas, than do the foreign gentlemen of means. Why, it's nothing unusual for an American clubman to lay out from $20 to $50 for a really fine and costly-handled umbrella.—Chicago Journal.

DIDN'T GO DRY.

When a Spring Becomes Simply a Hole in the Ground.

A man who had gone to Tennessee to buy a stock farm, after looking at a place which seemed to suit him, asked:

"Does this spring go dry?"

"No, sir," said the owner of the place. "I have been living in this neighborhood for thirty years and have never known that spring to go dry."

The prospector bought the farm. Six months afterwards he sought the man who had sold it to him, and asked:

"I want to tell you that you are an old liar."

"I don't know what you mean, sir."

"I bought a stock farm from you about six months ago."

"Yes, sir, that's a fact."

"I asked you if a certain spring ever went dry?"

"Yes, I believe you did."

"And you told me that it did not?"

"Yes, I remember."

"But, sir, it is as dry as a powder horn."

"Wait a minute. I told you that the spring didn't go dry?"

"Yes, you did."

"And you say there's no water there?"

"Not a drop."

"Well, then, it's not a spring. When any thing goes dry it is not a spring, but simply a hole in the ground. Webster tells us that a spring is a stream of water flowing out of the ground, and if there is not water flowing out of the ground at the place which you designated, why, it is not a spring. If you had asked me if the water gave out I might have told you yes, but as it was I was compelled to yield to an impulse of truth and say that the spring did not go dry. Sorry you are dissatisfied with the farm. You ought to be a little more explicit."—Arkansaw Traveler.

She Wouldn't Be Conquered.

An old-fashioned Yankee of Quaker stock, who ran a shoe factory in New England, indulged in a theory that a moral wrong was somehow perpetrated upon the community if a woman were allowed to earn above the stipulated sum each week. As the help was paid by the piece, and he had to keep tally in the main with current prices, he found this rather hard to manage at times. The swiftness of one young woman especially troubled him. She would persist in running financially ahead of the others. At last he made a special cut-down in her prices, and told her why he did it. She gave him a baleful glance, tightened her lips, and went on working. By Saturday night next, despite the cut-down, she made ten cents above the week before. Another week went by, when he cut her down still more. The damsel still proved game and rose to the occasion. After a week or more the Quaker conscience grew "scared" and asked her what she meant. "It means," said the girl, "that you may keep on and I'll keep on till you have a corpse on your hands in this workroom, for I'm grit and you can't conquer me!" The race ended there, and the girl was allowed normal pay.—N. Y. Post.

A Fine Piece of Goods.

"Did I understand you to say, Mr. Kendricks, inquired Dumley, who was trying to carve the duck, "that this is a canvas-back?"

"Yes," returned the landlady, "Why?"

"I was only going to remark that there is nothing of the shoddy about the material."—N. Y. Sun.

LIFE IN NORTH CHINA.

The Crooked Per Ho River and Its Heavily Armed Mud Forts.

Nearly two months have passed since our arrival at this place—a city of many hundred thousand inhabitants on the Per Ho river, fifty miles from its mouth. This stream is one of the crookedest in the world, many of its turns being so abrupt that it requires skill to navigate it. At the entrance of the river is an immense mud bank, which can only be crossed at high tide by vessels of light draft, so when a steamer arrives she must anchor and be lightered to about ten feet, when it it is possible to cross the bar, which is three or four miles wide. The Chinese Government will not allow this natural barrier to be cut away, as it most effectually prevents foreign gunboats from entering the river, while on both sides are mud forts called the Takee forts, heavily mounted with artillery. About half-way up the Tientsin is another of these forts, which is the largest of its kind in the world and the best. So say engineerin gexperts. At Tientsin there are two forts, an arsenal and two powder mills. English army officers are employed by the Government to drill native soldiers in the arts of modern war.

I have not as yet explored the country about here very much.

It is a vast plain, scarcely above sea level. Just west of us is a vast graveyard flooded with water. The plats of ground are walled around with mud. The coffins are made of heavy plank, and rest on the top of the ground. The head of the family occupies the most prominent part of the plats, and whenever a new occupant is added an additional pile of earth is heaped upon this grave till the family lot looks something like a small haystack. Some build these mounds above the water line, and they are carefully kept, but in some cases the coffins are exposed to view, and others covered with water and mud.

Tientsin is the home of the Viceroy Li Hung Chang, one of the most liberal and progressive of Chinese officials. He is having his sons taught English by an American, and is interested in the building of a military college at this place.

His edicts are characteristic of this sort of government. When about to start for his winter home he issues an order that for six days no one can travel over any part of the road connecting his summer and winter palaces. His retinue consists of his official staff, a company of soldiers, his family servants, a caravan of 160 carts to carry his baggage and his private equipage. The passenger vehicles are drawn by horses or mules. These carriages are cloth-covered and have some appearance of comfort. The freight or baggage carts are a primitive sort of affair with shafts, and are drawn by one ox, a cow, or a mule, three of them abreast, with an unending variety in the combination, with generally a horse leading the whole, make up the unique procession.—*Cor. RUNNING A LOCOMOTIVE.

An Old Fireman's Experience with an Incompetent Engine-Man.

The danger of running on an engine handled by an incompetent engineer or a man who has remained at some other business long enough to get rusty is not fully understood by the traveling world. I had an experience of that kind that drove me off the road and into more pleasant lines of labor. The Iowa Legislature passed a law in 1877, holding all railroads responsible in heavy amounts for loss of life or injuries incurred in their service, and to offset the liability the railroad addressed a circular to all employes asking them to relinquish their claims. One morning I had fired up as usual and run the engine around to await the freight which we were to take west from Burlington. Before the hour an agent stepped up and asked the engineer to sign the agreement. He refused and was discharged on the spot. A new man was put in the cab. He had an engineer's license, and every thing looked straight, so far as papers went. During the talk my fires had run down, so I filled in coal until steam was hissing out of the safety valve, and then I opened the furnace door. Having taken our train, an hour later we were spinning along nicely when I turned to feed the fire. Throwing open the door I observed the crown-sheet and rivets showing through the fire-box, and looked up at the gauge only to find that we were running with a dry boiler. I yelled to my partner, and he started out on the running board with a hammer in one hand. The pump had stopped working. The new man struck the metal gently to loosen the plunger. That's all I saw. I started over the coal in the tender, and, climbing up on the side of the first car, was not long in putting twelve or fifteen cars between me and that engine. Reaching the caboose and sitting on the cupola, I waited for the explosion. If that fool with his hammer had succeeded in starting that pump he would have gone into eternity the next second, for the boiler was at white heat. I wasn't in a suicidal frame of mind, and that's why I lit out. But the old adage about fools and children proved true, for that engineer had to stop, draw the fire and wait for a relief engine. We had only run fifteen miles, but the damage in half an hour took three months to repair.—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

THE VILLAGE SOLOMON.

Every town in the United States of Boston possesses a man who seems so much a part of the town that one would fancy he was made out of what was left over when the town itself was constructed.

He is generally a man who has just about enough to live on without working, so that his leisure may be spent in gathering all sorts of odds and ends of information, and, in short, imbuing himself with the town. Not imbuing himself with the spirit of the town, but imbuing himself with the town itself—the trees, the sidewalks, the pump and the malaria.

He is looked upon as the guardian spirit of the place, and "sad historian of the pensive plain." He is busier doing nothing than is a plumber working by the day. He is a cyclopædia of nothing. His nothingness makes him the most pre-eminently nothingy man in the place. His knowledge extends only to the limits of the town. Six feet over the township line, he would fancy himself lost in a wilderness. He has not been out of the town for thirty years.

He thinks that Barnum's Museum is still on the corner of Ann street and Broadway, and that the brown-stone seat of A. Hamilton still stands in the City Hall Park, as a rebuke to people who come from Brooklyn by some other ferry than the Hamilton. He still thinks the same park is surrounded by an iron fence, decorated with a long line of tinny songs, and canary birds in small wooden cages, and that the ancient fountain is still there, full of the old time languid lillies that always looked as though suffering from torpidity of the liver. He also thinks that the post-office is down on Nassau street, full of pie-stands, and that No. 444 Broadway is still a popular place of amusement.

Yet, the nothing man is usually regarded as a very important personage. He decides questions, and settles wagers on village topics, and no one thinks of appealing to a higher authority; because there is no higher authority. When he renders a decision, the man in whose favor it is given is looked upon as a pretty level-headed person, for knowing a thing just as the rural Solomon knows it. And the man against whom the decision is given tells the buckwheat Solomon how he came to think as he did, that his reasons may be considered sufficiently sound to save him from the mortification of being chaffed and laughed at by the others.

He is generally at the post-office an hour before the letters are distributed. He chats with the various people who congregate there, and gets the latest news that's of no importance to any one but himself.

Then he drifts into the barber-shop, and learns all the news of the week three days before the barber gives it to the editor of the local paper for publication. After leaving the barber's he drops into the real estate office and finds out all about the taxes and fluctuations in land. Then he calls on the grocer and druggist, and chats with them on this and that and the other thing.

Putting together the various scraps he has gathered, he knows all the people who don't pay their bills; he knows a man is going away for a change of air before the man has quite made up his mind to do so; he can tell you how many bricks there are in the schoolhouse, and the aggregation of the dog taxes for 1873, or any other year, for that matter.

He can remember perfectly well when there used to be a big sunfish pond where the Dutch church stands; and tells with great gusto, of the time when he used to dive off a rock located where the pulpit is built.

Of course he remembers when the railroad did not run through the place, as well as he remembers the period when there was but one store, that sold every thing from unbleached muslin to basaltic codash.

The mail at that time, used to be brought over from the nearest railway station ten miles off. He remembers the color of the calico bag in which the letters were brought, and the fact that the horse that the messenger rode had a blazed face and was spavined in both hind legs.

He knows the salaries of the clergymen and whether they get them or not. He is a chairman at each and every meeting of political or town meeting, and on the subject of a local nomination, the opening of a new road, or the draining of a stagnant pond, his advice and counsel are ever sought. His indorsement of a scheme is a signal to go ahead. But when he shakes his head in Sphynx-like silence as to the ultimate success of a scheme, no matter whether it be an electric-light plant, or a system of drainage, the tax-payers lose faith in its feasibility, and refuse to countenance it with their gold.

The Village Solomon is, in short, the life of the town when he is well enough to be about; but when he is prostrated by sickness the town is simply dead—so dead that when he is out again he has nothing new to learn; because the town has stood still with his sickness, and is now ready to go ahead with him once more.—Puck.

—A mound that was opened near Paris, Ky., recently, contained three skeletons. The remains lay with their feet lapping together around a small circle. Pieces of mica and a large war club were also found. There was a large oak tree growing from the center of the mound, showing that the place must have been used as a burial ground hundreds of years ago.

A MANDAN'S CAVE.

The Retreat Made by a Scalpless and Disgraced Warrior.

I was riding leisurely along over the prairie one day, about three miles southwest of Fort Berthold, when I saw, standing ahead of me about two hundred yards, four Indians. I thought nothing of it, and turned my head to look at a deer that was bounding in fright over a distant hill. When I looked in the direction in which I had seen the Indians there was a blank. Where could they have gone? There was no butte behind which they could possibly have hidden, and not a gully was to be seen in which they could have crept. I looked in every direction, and suddenly as they had disappeared they appeared again, though for the life of me I could not have told where they emerged from. They arose as if they had sprung out of the ground, as did soldiers that grew from the dragon's teeth which Jason sowed.

I went up to the band. They happened to be a tribe with whom I could converse without difficulty, and I asked them where they had been while I was looking. They pointed in reply to a flat stone that looked as much as any thing like the side or end of a massive piece of sandstone. There was a crack in the stone, it was true, but it was of such a nature as to excite no suspicion. One of the party pressed against the stone, and it fell inward. It afforded an opening large enough for a man to creep through without any trouble. I was invited to follow the leader of the gang. I dismounted, and, handing the pony I was riding to one of the Indians, entered the strange retreat. It was a queer cave cut out of the hill. There was a bench on which a man could get a good night's rest if he were sleepy, a number of holes cut in the wall overhead looking like pigeonholes, and, although there was a grimy look to the walls, it was not an uncomfortable abode. There was a heap of bones in one corner, which I afterward learned were the remains of many a feast of the owner of the hole in the ground.

A Mandan Indian, who, unfortunately for his peace of mind and social standing, lost his scalp in battle several decades ago, constructed this home here. He was disgraced by the loss of his scalp, and never more could live with his tribe, or abide with his squaw or little ones. Determined to make as much as possible of what of life he had remaining to him, he hewed a place out of the earth where he was free from molestation. Here he lived alone and in comparative comfort, secure against blizzards, and equally protected against the heat of summer.

This unique specimen of a fast-dying race was something of an artist. Around on the rock of his lonely abode he had carved a number of the most primitive-appearing designs. I could not learn from my guide whether or not it was probable that the artist was accustomed to drinking the peculiar brand of whisky that years ago the white man traded to the red-skins for pelts, but it was a strange fact that the artistic skill displayed appeared to run to snakes. Representations of snakes in all attitudes adorned the walls. In some cases they were represented as swallowing a man, and now a huge crawling monster would have an expiring buffalo within his coils. There were a dozen well-preserved impressions of snakes, all of which represented monsters, and not the small, harmless reptiles that are found in this region.

My guide informed me that the scalpless man depended for his artistic ideas upon a legend of a huge serpent that existed in this region, and which legend has fed upon a peculiar underground passage tortuous and sinuous in the extreme, which is pointed to by the natives as being the home of a bad spirit in serpent form.—St. Paul Pioneer-Press.

PRESERVING LIVE FISH.

A Discovery of Great Use to Shippers and Sportsmen.

A new method of preserving live fish, which seems to depend upon some phenomenon that it is at present difficult to explain, has been patented in America. The discoverer is Mr. W. G. Murphy, of New York City, who found, from numerous experiments, that fish can be kept alive for a long time without either change of air or water, by placing them in a vessel partly filled with water, but hermetically sealed. Fish so placed in a closed jar were found alive and apparently in good health at the end of three weeks' confinement; while fish placed at the same time in an open jar of water all died within forty-eight hours. It was also found that when the air in the jar containing the fish and water was compressed, their life was still further prolonged. It has been suggested that the reason for these strange results lies in the fact that the water in the jar which is hermetically sealed does not undergo such rapid changes as water left in an open vessel. But the discovery is one which will be of very great use in the carriage and transportation of fish. Sportsmen, too, will appreciate a method which will permit them to carry live bait for an indefinite period.—Chambers' Journal.

COTTON-SEED'S ROMANCE.

The Story of Its Rise in Importance Reads Like a Fairy Tale.

Was ever there a history, this side of Cinderella, of the uprising of humility, like that of the cotton-seed? See!

For seventy years despised as a nuisance and burned or dumped as garbage.

Then discovered to be the very food for which the soil was hungering, and reluctantly admitted to the rank of ugly utilities.

Shortly afterwards found to be nutritious food for beasts as well as soil, and thereupon treated with something like respect.

Once admitted to the circle of farm husbandries, found to hold thirty-five gallons of pure oil to the ton, worth in its crude state $14 to the ton, or $40,000,000 for the whole crop of seed.

But then a system was devised for refining this oil up to a value of $1 a gallon and the frugal Italians placed a cask of it at the root of every olive tree and then defied the Borean breath of the Alps.

And then experience showed that the ton of cotton-seed was a better fertilizer and a better stock when robbed of its thirty-five gallons of oil than before.

And the hulls of the seed made the best of fuel for feeding the oil mill engine!

And that the ashes of the hulls scooped from the engine's drift had the highest commercial value as potash!

And that the "refuse" of the whole made the best and purest soap-stock to carry to the toilet the perfumes of Lubin or Colgate!

About this time we began to spell cotton-seed with capital letters.

And how it traveled abroad in its various dresses! As meal cakes it whitened the meadows of England with wooly fleeces and flattened the British cattle under the oaks; it spurted on the stoves of the Dutch in lieu of lard; it glistened in the cafes of Paris as olive oils under seals and signatures it couldn't even pronounce to save its life, and from under the dykes in Holland it went forth to parade in all the bravery of butter and butterine.

In our own country it removed the wasting strength of Southern fields and clad them with whiteness that would shame the fleeces of England land, or yellow that would pale the fleeces of Argonauts. It knocked the Western hog into spots and poured the Western lard out of the frying-pan into the fire. It furnished the Armours and Fairbankses with a pure substitute for the rancid fat they had been shipping us, and suggested the possibility of a clean and cheap lard.

And now comes a gentleman of this city with a process by which he extracts thirty gallons of fine oil from every ton of cotton-seed meal after the oil mills have done with it. In the "tailings" of the oil mills he finds this unexpected and ample store, which he deftly extracts with naptha, leaving the meal more nutritious as food for beast or field than before he took $10 per ton from it.

This process he has proved repeatedly in his laboratory and will approve in wider practice in a mill erected for the purpose near Atlanta. This invention will add 40 per cent. to the quantity of oil taken by the old process from a given quantity of seed.

More than this, it suggests the splendid possibilities yet undeveloped for this rural Cinderella that has risen all so swiftly from the ashes and the waste heap.—Atlanta Constitution.

NAPOLEON'S ARMY.

The Forces With Which He Fought the Battle of Waterloo.

The army of Napoleon was composed entirely of veteran troops. It was also in excellent order and condition. It was a homogeneous army; all the men were Frenchmen. The troops were eager to fight, to retrieve the reputation of the French arms, to recover their lost renown. It was prepared for a desperate struggle. The Emperor, in his address to the army dated at Avesnes on the 14th of June, had roused the spirits and determination of the soldiers to their highest pitch. He had reminded them that this was the anniversary of Marengo and of Friedland; he had pointed out that they were about to encounter superior numbers; he had told them to conquer or die. Nevertheless it is a mistake to call this army, as many writers have done, the finest which Napoleon ever took into the field. In two points, especially, this army was not the equal of that, for example, which he commanded at Austerlitz. In the first place, it had not the inestimable advantage of being led by those brilliant officers, then in the early prime of manhood, who had been brought to the front in the turmoil of the revolutionary struggle. Of the two who were at Waterloo, Ney and Soult, one, Soult, was performing the functions of chief of staff. Ney was the only one of the Marshals who commanded troops on that fatal field. Not that the corps commanders lacked experience or devotion. They were unquestionably excellent officers, who had seen many years of faithful service. But Napoleon's earlier exploits had been to a large extent rendered practicable only by the exceptionally able men who were his own contemporaries—Massena, Lannes, Davout, Murat and the rest. Secondly, there was in this army of 1815, and there could not but be, a certain amount of distrust, of lack of entire confidence, on the part of the soldiers towards their superiors, the result of the so recent overthrow of the Empire in 1814, which had been associated in their minds with suspicions of treasonable conduct on the part of certain officers of high rank.—Scribner's Magazine.

Panic and Death.

CELAYA, MEXICO, April 4.—Eighteen persons were killed and over one hundred injured at a bull fight here on Sunday afternoon. The bull ring was crowded with spectators and the bull fighters were still playing with the first bull when a fire suddenly broke out on the sunny side of the plaza. A panic seized upon the assemblage. The plaza was constructed of wooden masts, reeds and the like, and it was due to this fact that the majority of the people escaped without injury, being able to force an opening for exit at different points, but many women and children jumped from the top, a distance of 200 to 300 feet.

The sides of the plaza being lined with matting as dry as tinder, and there being a slight wind blowing, the amphitheatre was in a blaze in a few seconds. Nine dead bodies, in some cases so charred as to be unrecognizable, have so far been taken from the ruins. Nine persons were so badly burned that they died yesterday. Sixty-eight persons were very badly burned, and, though they still live, at least ten of them will die this week. Fifty persons, in escaping, were knocked down and trampled upon by the panic-stricken throng and are very seriously but not fatally injured.

The bulls, maddened by the roaring of the flames, broke loose from their stalls and rushed wildly through the surging mass of humanity, tossing aloft and knocking over all who stood in their way. Among the eighteen dead were two women, who were first gored to death by the bulls and their bodies afterward burned. The scenes in the neighborhood of the bull ring were sickening. Nude women and children, crazed with suffering from their burns, ran aimlessly through the streets, and could scarcely be overtaken or collected by their friends. Several persons lost their reason.

The fire was incendiary. In the Celaya jail were a number of prisoners, army deserters and petty criminals who had obtained permission from the authorities to attend the bull fight. They were accompanied by a strong guard of soldiers to prevent escape, but one of the deserters surreptitiously struck a match and lighted one of the dry petates (mats) and in an instant the side of the ring was ablaze. In the confusion and excitement the prisoners escaped

Sold Himself into Servitude.

For three or four years past John S. Hughes, of Atlanta, Ga., has borrowed money from Augustus Kaglemacher, and never made any payment on it. Recently Kaglemacher insisted on having his money. Hughes, half in fun, made a proposition to deed himself to Kaglemacher in liquidation of all the debts.

"I'll take you," was the answer and lawyer Charles F. Baker drew up a bill of sale, in which Hughes sold "Himself and his body after death to Gus Kaglemacher, the said Kaglemacher to have control of the said Hughes as long as he might live, and to barter, sell or convey him to others, if he so chose to do." The sale was signed and witnessed, and a copy given to each party.

Later in the day Hughes asked a lawyer if such a contract was legal. He was told it was, and then he went off and got drunk. He was arrested, and shortly after his owner came down, gave him a lecture and accompanied him into the Recorder's court. Hudges entered a plea of guilty, and was fined $5.75. Kaglemacher paid the fine, put Hughes in his wagon and drove off with him to his farm, three miles from Atlanta. Hughes said he was drunk when he made the contract; that it was done in fun, and he was going to the farm to sober up. Kaglemacher says he owns Hughes till he dies, and that he will make him work as long as he lives.

Bringing Up Children Rationally.

It is as natural to a child to be happy, says a writer in Woman, as it is to a fish to swim. But for this they need a certain amount of "letting alone." It is a great mistake for parents to hamper children with foolish restrictions. We pity the little B.'s, our next door neighbor's children, from the bottom of our heart. There is a picket fence in front of the house and they are scarcely allowed to go near it lest they should climb and hurt themselves. They cannot climb a tree for the same reason. They may not skate or swim, or have a gun. The consequence of this training is that their parents have made cowards of them all, with the exception of little Bessie, who is the most daring little mischief that ever wore a sunbonnet, and she learned to be deceitful and plays all her mad pranks well out of sight of her parent's eyes. We caught her the other day walking the railing of a bridge that crossed the track of a railroad a hundred feet below. The railing was not a foot wide, and she triumphantly told us that she had walked it while the train was passing under. It was enough to make one shudder.

Don't fancy your boy is made of glass. Grant a reasonable request, and let him feel that when you refuse it is for his own good. Between the Jellybys and the Gradgrinds of life children have a hard time of it. The youngest child needs some sort of agreeable occupation and a certain amount of physical freedom. There is nothing more painful to young people than to feel that life is a dull routine and that "nothing never happens," as we once heard a disconsolate lad remark.

The Miller and his Son.

A miller and his son once drove an ass to the town, in order to sell it at the market. There met them a man on horseback, who laughed and said, "You are dull fellows to let the ass go idle, and neither of you on it!" So the father immediately called his son to mount.

After awhile a wagon met them. The driver called out to the son, "Are you not ashamed, young fellow to ride, while your old father has to go along by your side on foot?"

As soon as he heard these words he immediately jumped off the ass, and let his father get up.

After they had gone some distance farther along a sandy road, a peasant woman met them, who carried a basket full of vegetables on her head. She said to the father, "You are a merciless father to make yourself so comfortable upon the ass, and to let your poor son there toil through the deep sand!"

The father therefore took his son also up on the ass. But when a shepherd, who was keeping sheep on the road, saw them both riding along on the ass, he called out loudly, "Ah, the poor beast! he will surely fall to the ground under such a double load. You are unmerciful tormentors of the animal!"

They then both got down, and the son said to his father, "What shall we now do with the ass, in order to satisfy the people? We must at last tie his feet together, and carry him on a pole on our shoulders to the market."

But his father said, "You observe now, my son, that it is impossible to please everybody; and that the advice is very wise:

"Seek to perform your task as best you may,
And little heed what others think or say."

Democratic Failure.

New York Sun (Dem.).

The six definite enterprises which constitute the whole book of Mr. Cleveland's policy, so far as his administration has had a distinctive policy, are these:

The reform of the civil service on the so-called non-partisan or Mugwump plan;

The suspension of silver coinage in order to avert the predicted financial panic;

The negotiation of an extradition treaty with Great Britain;

The settlement of the fishery troubles by the negotiation of a treaty with Great Britain;

The reduction of the surplus by means of an extensive reduction of customs duties, retaining the internal revenue taxes;

The Pan-electric suit to annul the Bell telephone patents;

In every one of these six cases the result of the undertaking can be recorded in a single word:

The administration's civil service reform policy.—Abandonment.

The administration's demand for the suspension of silver coinage.—Relinquishment.

The administration's extradition treaty.—Collapse.

The administration's fishery negotiations.—Surrender.

The administration's surplus reduction plan.—Repudiation.

The administration's Pan-Electric suit.—Disgrace.

Very Stubborn Facts.

President Cleveland said in his free trade message to Crogress, and Democratic newspapers have been industriously saying ever since, that "the amount of duty means the tax paid by those who purchase for use the imported articles." It is an easy matter to explode this fallacy, as is shown by Mr. Charles H. Clark, an accepted authority upon matters of finance and public economy, in a few plain illustrations which we give below:

"The President," says Mr. Clark, "gives no specific examples to prove that his statement is true." We shall give something, however, to prove that it is positively incorrect. Such examples are abundant. Here are two that are both familiar and striking:

"The present price of steel rails in this country is $33 per ton. The duty is $17 and freight is $2.50, together making $19.50, the tax on imported rails. This deduction from the $33 leaves $13 50 which would be the British price for steel rails, if the President's theory is correct. But the British price is in fact $20 instead of $13 50.

"Further, the steel rail industry of this country was built up under a duty of $28 a ton. In 1885 steel rails were sold for $27, just $1 less than the original duty.

"Take another illustration. The price of cut nails in Philadelphia is $2 per keg of 100 pounds. The duty on cut nails is $1.25. If the President's propositions be correct, cut nails should be bought in Europe for 75 cents a keg. In fact they cannot be bought anywhere on this earth for less than $1.50 a keg.

"Again cut nails have been sold in this country as low as $1.85 a keg, of 100 pounds, while the duty was $1 50 a keg. Thus, according to the President, cut nails must have been purchased in Europe for 35 cents a keg.

"An example even more remarkable is found in the fact that while chloroform is subject to a duty of 50 cents per pound the domestic article is selling in this country for 35 cents a pound, or actually for 15 cents a pound less than the duty."

These facts are beyond controversy.—Ex.

There is much talk in New York of Mr. Depew as a candidate for the Republican Presidential nomination. He is an excellent man, of splendid executive ability, but his nomination can not be looked for. Whatever his personal merit may be, the fact that he is at the head of one of the great railway lines of the country would render him an extremely weak candidate in the West, from the Alleghanies to the Pacific. The Eastern people do not understand the strong feeling existing among Western people, the farmers especially, against the railways, on account of what are considered oppressively high freight rates. No man affiliated with railway monopoly can make headway against this feeling, and all talk of Mr. Depew is idle. He could stand no chance in the convention.

AN ACT

To repeal Chapter 86 of the Acts of Assembly passed at the January Session, 1886, entitled "An Act to regulate the trial of causes before Justices of the Peace for Garrett county," and to enact the following Sections in lieu thereof, requiring security for costs.

SECTION 1. Be it enacted by the General Assembly of Maryland, That Chapter 86 of the Acts of Assembly passed at January Session, eighteen hundred and eighty six, entitled "An Act to regulate the trial of causes before Justices of the Peace for Garrett county," be and the same is hereby repealed, and the following Sections be enacted in lieu thereof:

2. In any suit or action before a Justice of the Peace in Garrett county, where the plaintiff is not a resident of the State of Maryland the Justice of the Peace shall upon motion of the defendant, require the plaintiff to give security for the payment of the costs and charges which may be recovered against him in such action. When such security is required in any case the plaintiff shall be entitled to a continuance for not less than six nor more than fourteen days, and if the security required be not then given he shall be non-suited.

3. In all cases of appeal from Justices of the Peace in said county to the Circuit Court the plaintiff, if he be a non-resident of the State of Maryland, may be required to give security for costs in the same manner and to the same extent in all respects as if the case had originated in the Circuit Court for said county

JOHN DALE'S FAILURE.

John Dale was one of the richest men in Bondburg. He was still on the sunnyside of 40, but gray haired business men and financiers consulted hem on the most important matters, and whenever it was known that John Dale was connected with any enterprise the success of the project was assured.

Dale was lavish in his expenditures, and his beautiful wife did not try to restrain him. Mrs. Dale outshone the younger beauties and belles of the place, and her husband was proud of her.

In Bondburg the main staple of the talk was the Dales, their movements, their extravagance, and their good fortune. Sometimes old men shook their heads, but everything that Dale touched seemed to turn into gold. The young speculator established a bank and built a railroad, and took hold of a dozen other big enterprises. The entertainments at the Dale mansion were on a scale of magnificence never seen before in that part of the country. Among the invited guests were millionaires who travelled in special cars. It was a common thing for people to rush across the continent to see the Dales.

The financial crash in 18— was a terrible disaster. It was felt not only in the great cities but in the smaller towns as well. In Bondburg the oldest business houses went to the wall.

When a man is in trouble he finds out his real friends and enemies. The panic struck John Dale at a bad time. At first he was confident that he would come out all right. He borrowed right and left and made a brave effort to push his way through. He even called on Steele, but the old usurer told him that a loan was out of the question.

One day it was whispered that Dale would have to go under, and that he would be left seven hundred thousand dollars in debt. That night there was a reception at his house, and many of the guests went simply out of curiosity. They wanted to see how the great speculator would look on the eve of his failure. If these people expected to see a crushed man they were disappointed. The entertainment was the most delightful of the season, Dale's bright and handsome face showed not the slightest trace of care, and his wife was in her most charming mood.

"They are frivolous people," said one of the guests to old Steele early the next morning. "I gave Dale credit for being a thoughtful man, but he and his wife seem to be too light-minded to appreciate the gravity of the situation."

"They will appreciate it to-day," said Steele, grimly. "I've got a lot of Dale's paper, and I'm going to close down. You will see my lord and my lady come to grief."

The news of Dale's failure created quite a sensation, but business men remarked that they were not at all surprised and that they had been looking for it all along.

"And he will have nothing left," said a merchant to Mr. Steele, "not a cent, will he?"

"No," replied Steele, "he will be worse off than a beggar, because he will be heels over head in debt. There will be a meeting of the principal creditors to-morrow, and the result may land Dale in the penitentiary."

"It will be a terrible blow to Mrs. Dale," said a leading society lady, "and may kill her."

This was the general run of the talk about the failure. Very little sympathy was expressed. In hard times sympathy is a very scarce commodity.

On the same morning John Dale took his wife into the library after breakfast and told her all. Mrs. Dale was silent for a moment. Then she put her arms around her husband's neck and kissed him.

"At least we love each other," she said.

"But," exclaimed Dale, in some amazement, "you do not understand. We must give up our house. There will be nothing left. My creditors may pursue me all my life, and there is nothing but poverty before me."

Mrs. Dale gave him another kiss. "Do you think I care? she said

"My dear," said Dale, and his voice trembled. "I must tell you the worst. My success made me reckless, and if some of my creditors push me to the last extreme they will be able to send me to prison, although I had no criminal intention in my transactions with them.

"No matter what befalls you," said the beautiful woman by his side, "I will stand by you, and suffer with you, and you will wait for better days."

Then, for the first time John Dale shed tears. Later in the day he went to his office and devoted his attention to his business affairs.

"You will see him beg for mercy," said old Steele to the meeting of creditors. "I know these extravagant spendthrifts. Dale will come here and cry and plead. You must be firm with him."

Just then the object of his talk entered the room.

"Hello, Steele," he said, with his customary carelessness. "Well, gentlemen, here we are. Now let us see what can be done about this little matter."

Old Steele glared at Dale, and the others looked at him in astonishment. Dale did not look like a man who had been crushed by some great misfortune. He looked younger, brighter and handsomer than ever, and there was a ring of triumph in his tones.

"Curse that fellow," said old Steele, "I wonder what is up now."

"Gentlemen" said Dale, "before proceeding to business I desire to say a few words."

Instantly there was a dead silence in the room. Dale then made a calm straightforward statement concerning his various enterprises, and wound up with the admission that his liabilities greatly exceeded his assets. Then he told them of the interview with his wife.

"You will now understand," he concluded, "that this is no great misfortune, after all. If my wife is satisfied to share my poverty, I am the happiest man on earth."

Dale looked around upon the group in such a frank and manly way that all were favorably impressed.

When the creditors consulted together in private Steele was the only man who held out against a compromise. Then the others withdrew, and in a short time returned.

"It is all right," said the leader to Steele. "We will settle your claims and give Dale another chance. He is a good fellow and shan't be sacrificed.

"Well, if you will be fools," snarled Steele, "I have no objection.

John Dale did not have to give up his house, and there was no talk of a criminal prosecution. His manly way of meeting his difficulties and the devotion of his wife rallied a band of strong friends around him, and in the course of a few days he was on his feet again.

Perhaps the Dales profited by their experience during the panic. At all events they did not rush headlong into a career of extravagance. They modified their style of living, and in the course of a few years they had the satisfaction of knowing that they were out of debt and again on the high road to fortune.

And yet it might have been very different. John Dale said one day to his wife:

"When I told you of my failure if you had broken down under the news it was my intention to go to my room and blow my brains out."

"Why, John!" exclaimed the little woman, "how could I have given you any other answer?"

And then Dale hugged and kissed her.

Dunkard Annual Meeting.

The annual meeting of German Paptists (Dunkards) of the United States will be held at North Manchester, Indiana, May 20th to 25th, of the present year. The meeting will be held in a large canvass tent 100x140 feet, with a seating capacity of 4,500. Two smaller tents will be used as a dining hall and restaurant and lunch room, It may not be uninteresting reading to state that to provide for the feeding of the large number who attend these annual gatherings it will take 25 beeves that will average 1,200 pounds; 14,000 pounds of bread, besides pies, cakes and buns; 175 gallons of apple butter; 1,200 pounds of butter; 100 bushels of potatoes; 400 pounds of ham for luncheon; 270 dozen eggs; 5 barrels pickles; 10 barrels sugar; 6 barrels of salt; 600 pounds of coffee, tea and other sundry articles. This meeting promises to be one of the largest ever held by this denomination.

Two little girls were playing church. One said, "Now we are going to have prayer, you kneel down and be a real Christian; I'll just sit down and put my hand up to my face, I'm going to be one of the stylish Christians."

The Only Female Mayor.

"Female Mayors are no good," said the ex-City Marshal of Argonia, Kan. "Why, Mrs. Salter has just killed Argonia. I used to have a hotel there and was City Marshal, but I couldn't stand it, so I just scooted, and I expect I'm to blame for her election, too.

"You know she wasn't nominated in any of the conventions. About 9 o'clock on 'lection day all us boys were feeling gay and agreed to meet at a hall and nominate a candidate to knock out Wilson. Jack Ducker—he is the toughest man in the place and the undertaker—got up in the meetin' and nominated Mrs. Susanna Medora Salter for Mayor, and the nomination was made unanimous. We rushed into the streets and commenced to work for our candidate. At noon her husband came to us and begged us to quit the racket, sayin' it was an insult to his wife. We wouldn't do it, and the voters commenced to come our way in clusters. We got full of whisky and enthusiasm, and at 4 o'clock every one was votin' for our candidate. Well, you know as how she was elected. We had a jollification, and when she took her seat like a man all our fun was busted.

"I sent up to Kansas City for some crab apple cider just to please the boys. She heard of it and asked me to stop it. You can't fight a woman and she the Mayor. Then I started a little poker room, more for sociability than anything else. Chips were only 10 cents. She heard of it and came to me and I had to stop. Then the druggist, before she was elected, used to keep blue grass bitters, lemon rye and extract of malt, and a few other things like that. He don't do it now. The Mayor heard of it. Then two billiard rooms were running. They're closed up now. The Mayor don't think it is fashionable to push the ivories. That's the way it is with everything. I just couldn't stand the town and so I came up here."

"She's the only woman Mayor on earth, is she not?

"That's just what she is. You ought to see the letters she gets, foreign letters and the like, askin' for her autograph, and askin' her if it is true that she is the Mayor, and all questions like that. When I was Marshal I used to act under her, and many's the letter she has shown me from abroad.

Romance and Reality.

"James, dear, will you bring me up a hod of coal from the celler?" said a busy house wife.

"That's just the way with you," said James, with a black frown, as he put down his book and rose up from the lounge.

"Just the way with me?"

"Yes," he snapped. "As soon as you see me enjoying myself, you have some chore or another for me to do. Didn't you see I was absorbed in my reading?"

"Well, dear, I will do it myself."

"Yes, and tell everybody, your mother, especially, that you have to carry your own coal up from the cellar. No, I'll do it. Let me mark my place."

So he marked the place in the book at which he had ceased reading and when he went down the cellar grumbling all the way, she picked up the volume and found it was a love story and the passage he had been so absobed in was as follows: "My darling, when you are my wife, I will shield and protect you from every care, the winds of heaven shall not visit your face too roughly; those pretty hands shall never be soiled by menial tasks; your happiness——"

Just then he reappeared, and, dumping the hod on the floor, said: "There's your darned coal. Give me my book."

Is life worth living?

"Have you joined the church?"

"No; the dying thief didn't join the church, and he went to Heaven."

"Have you been baptized?"

"No; the dying thief was saved and he never was baptized,"

"You take the sacrament of the Lord's supper, of course."

"No; the dying thief was all right, and he never took any sacrament."

"How much do you give to missions?"

"O, I'm just like the dying thief; he never gave anything to missions."

"Just like the dying thief, are you? But there's one difference at least; he was a dying thief, and you are a living thief!"

THE COUNTRY EDITOR'S WIFE.

You have heard of the country editor's life,
With its care and worry and doubt;
Of the shabby genteel of his seedy clothes,
Of his diamond pins, and his calm repose.
His happiness, money, and gout.

But say, have you heard of the editor's wife?
Of that silent copartner, who,
With a blending of sentiment, beauty and skill,
With temperate knowledge, with tact, and will,
The whole of his labor can do?

It is she who embroiders the garments worn
By the editor's hard old chair,
Now dressed with cushions, soft and neat,
And trimmed up with tidies and ribbons sweet,
Which once was so poor and so bare.

If the editor's sick, or away, or behind,
In need of more hands and more haste,
She directs his wrappers so they can be read,
And writes the leaders right out of her head,
And willingly makes his paste.

She reads the magazines, papers, and books,
As the cradle she softly rocks;
While the editor sits in his easy chair,
With his fingers thrust in his tangled hair,
She quietly mends his socks.

Then she reads the ads. with the editor,
Just to find what each has paid.
"But the column ad. of the jeweler, there,"
So he says, "and the harness and human hair
Must be taken out in trade."

She wears the corsets he gets for ads.,
And ruffles his sewing machine;
She uses the butter, and eggs, and things,
The country subscriber so faithfully brings,
With a cheerfulness seldom seen.

But her life so full of merry delight,
Has one dark cloud, alas!
Though she shares his ticket to circus and play,
To lecture, and negro minstrels gay,
She can't use his railroad pass!

When time hangs heavy on his hands,
She beguiles the hours away
With joke and laughter, music and song
And pleasant talk, and thus ripples along
The whole of each leisure day.

O, who would exchange this sweet content,
This simple and trusting life,
For that of a queen of royal birth?
For the happiest woman on all this earth,
Is the country editor's wife.

O'SHERRY'S TRICK.

How Captain Dallimore Lost His Whiskers.

How many men enter the army solely on account of the uniform? How many of those who are supposed to be enamored of the adventures and perils of a soldier's life are enamored only of the tinsel and trappings of a soldier's coat? It would be interesting to know, but, owing to the unaccountable reticence on the part of those so influenced, it is impossible to discover.

Still, occasionally there occur cases where, though no confession is made, a shrewd guess may be hazarded that æsthetic considerations had much to do in inducing the gallant warrior to choose a military career. Captain Dallimore's was one of these. Captain Dalton Dallimore was not a very adventurous, nor a very courageous, nor a very ambitious man, but he was unquestionably a very conceited one. His conceit, however, referred only to his appearance. He never imagined that he was cleverer, braver, or more high-minded than his fellows; in fact, his private opinion was that in these qualities he was rather below than above them. But when it came to good looks—well, every time he glanced in his glass, and that was pretty often, he felt, with a thrill of pleasure that there he had the advantage of most people.

And he was not a bad-looking fellow. He had a rather long face, passably good features, and fairish hair, and he wore a mustache, large mutton-chop whiskers, and a pompadour. He was very tall and very slight; and his clothes—which is not always the case even with military men—were obviously made for himself.

His appearance was better than his manner; that was affected and insipid to a degree. He could be induced to manifest nothing but the most languid interest in anybody or any thing about him. No matter what was the subject which was occupying the attention of the rest of the company, his attention was concentrated on himself. While the others were jesting, chaffing, or disputing he was engaged examining the fit of his jacket or the cut of his overalls, or else stroking his mustache and passing his fingers affectionately through his whiskers.

These latter hirsute appendages were the cause of much mockery and heartburning in the regiment. His brother officers strongly disapproved of them. They could understand and sympathize with his devotion to his mustache—they all wore mustaches themselves, which they carefully nurtured and tenderly cherished—but he was the only man in the regiment who sported whiskers, and the others regarded his indulgence in them as an unwarrantable license, not to say breach of discipline.

"Dolly, my boy," one would say, "why don't you shave and look like a Christian?"

"Prefers to look like a goat," another would growl.

"You see," a third would put in, "he's not very energetic, and the whiskers save him a good deal of work; with them he has only to wash half of his face."

"If I were the Colonel," a fourth would declare, "he should either shave or leave the regiment."

But Captain Dallimore would only laugh languidly at all such coaxing, bullying and remonstrance. He loved his whiskers, and was determined not to lose them. Besides, he suspected that envy had something to do with his fellow-officers' disapproval.

Captain Dalton Dallimore never regretted his choice of a profession. The Lancer uniform exactly suited his taste and figure. His duties he found light, and, on the whole, agreeable; while the effect of his lace, spurs and charger upon the ladies was all that could be desired. The only drawback he ever found was the fact that his regiment was so frequently stationed in remote villages, where he had little company and little opportunity of receiving what he felt was his due of feminine admiration and attention.

His delight, therefore, can be imagined when his regiment received orders to leave the obscurity of Braxby for the publicity and gayety of the Irish metropolis. He had been in Dublin before, and knew what he had to expect there—not an occasional dinner at Lord Broadacre's or Squire Cherry's, or a dance every six months at the town hall, but a succession of banquets, receptions and balls, and the admiration and devotion of scores of the prettiest women in Europe.

The gallant Captain was not doomed to disappointment. Dublin proved every thing that he expected. All that was wealthy, beautiful and fashionable in the city received the Lancers with open arms. Cards of invitation from the castle, Merrion square, and Old Trinity came in scores to every officer's quarters. From Colonel to Lieutenant they were all in demand everywhere, but none of them seemed to be quite in so great demand as Captain Dalton Dallimore.

It was about a month after the regiment's arrival in Dublin that Captain Dallimore was, alone of all the Lancers, present at a dinner given by Mr. Justice McMurther in his fine house in Fitzwilliam square. Judge McMurther was famous for his dinners, and though Captain Dalton Dallimore knew that there would be no ladies there—the host was a bachelor—and that he would be acquainted with few of the guests, he gladly accepted the invitation. And he did not regret it. A better dinner he had never eaten, and the wines were simply incomparable. The only thing, besides his appearance, in which Captain Dallimore took an absorbing interest, was his stomach.

The company, like dinner, was the best Dublin could supply. It consisted of some members of the vicereyal household, two peers resident in the neighborhood of the capital, three judges and several of the most distinguished lawyers, doctors and capitalists in Ireland. Captain Dalton Dallimore, however, knew very few of them, and the two between whom he sat at dinner did not seem to take much interest in him or his conversation. When, then, Judge McMurther led the way into the drawingroom, the gallant Captain sat down in a corner, there to digest his dinner in silence.

He had been sitting by himself some time when suddenly it occurred to him that one of the guests was a gentleman he had met before, a distinguished lawyer, Sergeant O'Sherry. The learned sergeant had dined on the previous night at the mess, and his conversation had been most clever and entertaining. Captain Dallimore resolved to renew the acquaintance.

He made his way over to the sergeant, and, holding out his hand, affably said: "I think we have met before, Sergeant O'Sherry."

The sergeant rose quickly to his feet, and, bowing very low, said: "I have that honor, sir."

Captain Dallimore was surprised and pleased at the lawyer's very deferential manner.

After a slight pause Sergeant O'Sherry spoke again:

"I was not aware, sir," he said, "that you were of the company or I should have paid my respects sooner."

"O, I suppose," answered Captain Dallimore, more surprised than ever, "you were like myself. I did not at first recognize you."

"Ah! that," replied the sergeant smiling, "is not strange. That you should forget so humble a person as myself is not wonderful, but that I should forget you is."

"Really, I don't see it," said the Lancer. "We only met once before."

"Yes; but one in my position rarely forgets meeting one in yours."

"In mine?" repeated Captain Dallimore, "I really don't understand you. My position is in no way remarkable."

"Well, really, Mr. Kilpatrick——"

"Kilpatrick!" repeated Captain Dallimore.

"Yes, sir," said the sergeant, looking very much surprised. "I understood I was speaking to Mr. Kilpatrick, the Scotch gentleman who is chief secretary to the Lord Lieutenant."

"Well, really," said Captain Dallimore, laughing, "I assure you I'm no such exalted person. I'm plain Captain Dallimore, of the 87th Lancers."

"You don't mean it!" cried his lawyer, amazed. "It's wonderful—marvelous! I never saw such a striking resemblance! As like as two peas! Same eyes, nose, chin, complexion, mustache, whiskers—especially whiskers! Marvelous! amazing!

"Did you take me for Mr. Kilpatrick?" asked Captain Dallimore, greatly amused.

"Take you for him," said Sergeant O'Sherry vehemently. "Why, his own mother would take you for him! I never saw any thing like it before! I remember meeting you, now. It was last night, at mess. Strange that the resemblance didn't strike me then! Perhaps it was the uniform made the difference."

"Upon my word, you make me laugh," said Captain Dallimore.

"Well, let me tell you Captain," said the sergeant, lowering his voice in an impressive way, "it's no laughing matter. I wouldn't be in your shoes for something."

"Why!" asked Captain Dallimore, opening his eyes in amazement.

"Why! Don't you know?"

"Not I! I'm rather pleased than otherwise to find I'm like so distinguished a man."

"Are you? Well, I suppose you're a soldier and don't care, but I'm only a civilian, and for my part I wouldn't take ten thousand a year and run the risk you do."

"Run the risk I do! Really, sergeant, I do not comprehend."

"Don't comprehend! Why, don't you know that there are dozens of men about Dublin looking out for a chance of putting a bullet into Kilpatrick! Now, what would happen if they made the same mistake as I did, and took you for him?"

"By George," exclaimed Captain Dallimore, thoroughly startled. "I never thought of that."

"Perhaps you will soon have reason to do so," said the sergeant, gravely. "It's all right for Kilpatrick himself; he never goes out unguarded—he takes good care of that; but with you it's different. You might get a bullet through you any day."

"Upon my word," said Captain Dallimore, seriously, "that's quite true. Am I really very like him?"

"Very like him! It's no name for it. You're just himself over again. Of course you're a soldier and a brave man, and so laugh at danger; but if I were in your shoes I'd pretty soon make a change in my appearance."

"How could I do that?"

"How! Why, as easily as possible. Shave off your mustache."

Captain Dallimore thought a moment, and then shook his head. The sacrifice was too great.

"Well, yes," said the sergeant, in reply to the motion, "I forgot you're a military man, and so wouldn't like to part with your mustache. Well, let us see. Why not shave off your whiskers? That would be nearly as good."

Captain Dallimore writhed under the suggestion, but nevertheless he considered it.

"That wouldn't be quite so bad," he said at length. "But do you think it would be enough?"

"Well, it's hard to say," answered the lawyer; "but I'm inclined to think it would. You see, you wear your whiskers exactly as Kilpatrick does. They no doubt do much to produce so striking a resemblance. If you took them off I dare say it would be scarcely noticeable."

Captain Dallimore and Sergeant O'Sherry continued talking earnestly until the time for departure arrived. They left together, when the lawyer showed how deep and sincere his concern was for the risk Captain Dallimore ran by insisting on accompanying the officer home the whole way to the royal barracks.

"Even my presence," he said, "will add something to your safety, and so I feel it my duty to go with you."

All night long Captain Dallimore tossed about, unable to sleep. He was tortured by the prospect of a dreadful alternative. It seemed as though he must either shave off his beloved whiskers or go about for the rest of the regiment's stay in Ireland with his life in his hands. He thought the matter over and over again, in hopes of discovering some third course, but none appeared. The position seemed to be: Your whiskers or your life!

One small hope did, indeed, still remain. He might not be so very like Mr. Kilpatrick as Sergeant O'Sherry thought. He, himself, had never seen Mr. Kilpatrick, but he had often seen his photograph—it was in every shop-window—and it never had struck him that there was any very wonderful resemblance between that distinguished gentleman and himself. Now, however, when his attention was called to it, he could not deny that there was a considerable likeness. As Sergeant O'Sherry said, it was partly to be accounted for by the similar way in which both wore their mustaches and whiskers. But, besides that, their features, build, and he believed height were much the same. There was, undoubtedly, a marked resemblance between them.

That resemblance, however, might not be so great as to lead an ordinary person to mistake them. He hoped such might prove to be the case. He resolved to test it the next morning, and to abide by the result of the trial.

Immediately after breakfast he made his way to his chum's—Hon. Frank Terrington—quarters. Lieutenant Terrington had just finished breakfast. After the usual greetings Captain Dallimore said, in a careless sort of way: "Do you know, Frank, a funny thing happened last night? I was actually mistaken for a leading public man here."

"Leading public men here," said Frank, "must look doosed stupid."

"But seriously, Frank, I was, and I'm anxious—curious, I mean—to know if there really any likeness. Now, would mind taking a good look at me, and me whom you think I'm like?"

Hon. Frank looked at Captain Dallimore as he was requested, but in a very puzzled sort of way. Suddenly he opened his eyes as if a little startled.

"By George!" he exclaimed, "you are like one of them though. It never struck me before."

"Who is it Frank?" asked Captain Dallimore, with a slight tremor in his voice.

"Why, Kilpatrick, to be sure," answered Hon. Frank, unhesitatingly. "It's those blessed whiskers, I think. You've got 'em docked exactly as he has."

With a sad heart Captain Dallimore left his friend's quarters and went to his own. He bitterly felt that his last faint hope was gone and his much-loved and much-admired whiskers must also go. He went to his dressing-room and gazed gloomily into the mirror and caressed again and again the dear bristles, as he used to do in happier times. Alas, they were doomed! If he had been a braver man he might have clung to them, but he was timid and would rather part even with them than with his life.

He took up his razor to remove them, but his heart failed him, and he put off the dreaded moment for a little while. He had laid down the fatal instrument and walked about the room depressed and miserable, hour after hour. The shades of evening were beginning to fall, when a desperate resolve entered his mind. He determined, as a last hope, to go out to the barracks to walk about the streets until mess hour, and see if any one noticed him, or by any word or sign showed that he was taken for Mr. Kilpatrick.

With a trembling heart he left the barracks and hurried along the river quay. He was approaching the western wing of the Four Courts, when a ruffianly fellow who was standing at the end of one of the lanes which ran up north from the Liffey, cried out at him: "Bad luck to ye for a murtherin' villain!

With a wild start Captain Dallimore turned round and faced the rough.

"Hi!" yelled the scoundrel up the lane. "Hi, come down wid ye. Shure, here's Kilpatrick, the coercionist! Come on, we'll bate him."

Captain Dallimore did not stay to explain nor stop to be "bate." With lightning speed he turned in his course, and, darting off toward the royal barracks, soon reached the friendly shelter of their walls.

Flushed, breathless and panic-stricken, he hurried up to his dressing-room, and, seeing his razor, cleared his face of his whiskers before it had regained its color. Then he paused and gazed at himself in the glass. He was no longer the same man; much of his glory had departed; but, under the circumstances, he did not regret it. He felt sorry, but satisfied.

As he gazed sadly at his image in the glass, it occurred to him that he would have to give his brother officers some explanation of his accession to their wishes. It would not do to tell them the real story; for a soldier to shave through fear would, he felt, be disgraceful. What, then, should he say? He set about inventing a plausible tale, and only settled upon it when the dinner hour arrived.

Hurriedly finishing his toilet he went to the mess-room. He was a little late in arriving, and when, blushing and hesitating, he entered, all the other officers were there. The moment his face was seen a roar of laughter went up from the table. Roar after roar followed, while Captain Dallimore stood speechless, crimson to the hair. At last it became sufficiently quiet to permit of his speaking.

"I'm glad," he said, with a sickly smile, "that my act has met with your approval."

Another burst of merriment was the answer. When it calmed down Captain Dallimore heard Major Berkeley's voice.

"Colonel," he said, as he wiped the tears out of his eyes, "O'Sherry has won."

"Yes, yes, and gloriously," replied the Colonel, still laughing; "he has done in three days what the whole regiment failed to do in twice as many years."

A horrible thought flashed upon Captain Dallimore's brain. Hurrying up to Lieutenant Terrington he whispered to him:

"Tell me, Frank, what does all this mean?"

"Why, man," answered the Hon. Frank, still shaking with laughter, "why, don't you see? You're no more like Kilpatrick than you are like the Prince of Wales. It's all a trick of O'Sherry's. He bet the Colonel a pony that if we'd assist him he'd make you shave inside a week, and that's the way he did it."

Luck in a Bat's Liver.

Of all the queer superstitions of which I ever heard, there is one possessed by a man on 'Change that caps the superstitious climax. I won't tell you his name, but he is one of the most prominent grain and pork dealers in the city. One night last summer he was visiting at the Fifth District police station. We were bothered a good deal just then by bats which were flying up and down through the stable attached to the station. Our visitor and the stable boy killed several of the bats, and the liver was taken from each of them and carried away in the merchant's pocket. He wanted them, he said, to give him luck in his business transactions, for he declared there was more good luck in a bat's liver than there was in half a hundred rabbits' feet, which were well known to possess luck in no mean proportions.—St. Louis Globe-Democrat

SCIENCE AND INDUSTRY.

—The largest cotton mill is said to be located at Kranholm, Russia. The establishment contains 340,000 spindles and 2,200 looms, disposes of a force of 6,300 horse-power, and gives employment to 7,000 hands.

—Pillsbury mill "A" grinds 7,000 barrels of flour daily, which is enough for New York, Brooklyn and Jersey City. It is eight stories high, and work is never stopped. It keeps two hundred railway cars busy. An electrical apparatus enables a watchman to locate a heated box and where in the mill.

—A "cable anchor" for stopping has been successfully tried on the Seine. The apparatus consist of a cable having on it a series of canvas cones, which open by the action of the water, and close when drawn the usual way. A steamer running thirteen knots was stopped in thirteen seconds, and in a space of from twenty to thirty feet, by this arrangement.

—While considering it doubtful whether ants and bees can hear, Sir John Lubbock believes it to be quite possible that they may hear sounds so shrill as to make no impression on the human ear. A like fact may be true of their perception of colors. To insects the world may be full of music we can not hear, colors we can not see, and sensations we can not feel.

—During the past two seasons E. B. Poulton has made observations which prove that the silk of at least three species of English moths is greatly affected in color by environment at the time of spinning. The cocoons were dark brown when the larvæ had been placed in a bag of green leaves, and white when they had been freely exposed to light in the neighborhood of white surfaces.

—It having been demonstrated that the most solid ice may contain elements which, when taken into the human system, cause disease and death, it becomes very important for one to know where the ice he uses was obtained, as the contamination of ponds, lakes and rivers by sewage is getting to be alarmingly prevalent. Some scientists think that the artificial production of ice from purified water, in quantities sufficient to supply the demand for it, will eventually be the only way of guarding against the dangers to which people are exposed by the use of impure ice.

—The efficiency of oil, when dropped upon the water, to calm boisterous waves may now be regarded as established. It is astonishing how small a quantity of oil will answer the purpose. Admiral Clone gives the amount as from two to three quarts an hour dropped from perforated bags hanging over the sides of the ship in positions varying with the wind. The oil, then, by its own outspreading, extending over the waves, forms a film of less than a two and a half millionith part of an inch in thickness; and this is enough to reduce breaking waves and dangerous "rollers" to unbroken undulations that are practically harmless.

—The four feet of an ordinary ox will make a pint of neats-foot oil. Many cattle shin-bones are shipped to England for the making of knife-handles, where they bring $40 a ton. The thighbones are the most valuable, being worth $80 a ton for cutting into toothbrush handles. The foreleg bones are worth $30 a ton, and are made into collar-buttons, parasol handles and jewelry, though sheep legs are the staple parasol handles. The water in which the bones are boiled is reduced to glue, and the dust which comes from sawing them is fed to cattle and poultry.

CONCERNING MONEY.

Why It Should Always Be Regarded With a Certain Seriousness.

There are those who think it a fine thing for a young man to spend his money with a careless, dashing freedom; and all over the world the spendthrift is a character less odious than the miser. We think, on the contrary, that the miser and the spendthrift are essentially the same character. The weak vanity which prompts the inexperienced youth to scatter his money in profligate profusion, easily changes into that weak cowardice which induces the miser to devote his later years to hoarding. Carelessness of expenditure is one of the surest signs a young man can give that his life is destined to be unprosperous and unhappy.

Some of the greatest crimes, and many of the most poignant miseries, have been due to carelessness in the spending of money. There is reason to think that one of the leading causes of Arnold's treason was the pecuniary embarrassment caused by his extravagance. The same cause had much to do with precipitating Burr from the height of honor into the depths of infamy. Swartwout, the great defaulter, was not what is commonly called a dishonest man, but only a criminally careless one; one of those "fine fellows"—hearty, jovial and "whole-souled"—whom everybody likes, from whom everybody borrows, whom nobody is compelled to pay. Than such a man there is no more fatal character under the sun. Ruin lies in wait for him, and is sure to devour him at last.

Money should always be regarded with a certain seriousness, for it is the quintessence or representative of the gifts of Providence and the toil of man. It is hard to get, and easy to spend. There is peril in it, and blessedness in it. To the wise and good it is the best of all servants; to the weak and foolish it is the most terrible of all tyrants. Carelessness is always perilous and wrong, but habitual carelessness in the spending of money is, of all its forms, the surest to lead to misery and shame.—N. Y. Ledger

POLICE COURT RECIPES.

A Harmless Youth's First Attempt At Practical Newspaper Work.

In order to afford that variety which is the spice of life and papers, we concluded to have a man attend the sittings of a New York police court. It happened, however, that the only member of our large and talented staff who was at leisure Monday morning was the young gentleman who edits Household Recipes. He is an enthusiast upon the subject of recipes for the construction of soft gingerbread, cream pies, dried apple jelly and the like, and his mind seems to run on such matters continually. He will go further to learn some new way for getting up a salad than the most enthusiastic naturalist would to secure a new species of snapping turtles.

The following in his first attempt at police court reporting:

The first prisoner brought up—and he must have been badly brought up, by his looks—stood charged with having been intoxicated on the streets. He wasn't entirely sober when arraigned, looking as though he had about two cupsful of whisky to six cupsful of beer too much, mixed with four to five pounds of a policeman's club put on to warm. The court allowed him to stew about five minutes, and then sent him to the Island for sixty days to cool.

A tramp was hauled up, who looked as though he had had not more than two cups of sour milk, one teaspoonful of saleratus, ditto of cream of tartar, some ginger (pop), and a little caraway with stale bread crumbs for six weeks. He was mixed to a smooth batter and set before the fire to rise.

A thief was arraigned, charged with breaking into a bakery. He was in his cups—about three and a half cups, I should say, mixed with sugar. He said he mistook the bake shop for a paint store, on account of the chrome yellow on the buns. When he resisted arrest the policeman gave him a recipe for pound cake that he will remember for some time. It raised puff balls on his head without the aid of yeast, and made his nose into a batter. He was laid away in the station-house oven to brown.

John Smith, being drunk, attempted to beat his wife, but found himself in hot water, with a flavoring of lemon and whisky. His wife added three dessert-spoonfuls of stove leg for every loaf, the loafer. A lump of sugar was added, together with a lump over the eye for top dressing. French mustard and a Mansard roof completed the structure. Court ordered a dressing of vinegar and prison apparel.

"Got the ear-ache, have you?" remarked the court to the prisoner with his head tied up. Court recommended as a recipe for the cure of ear-ache, two parts water, one part his hair in the middle, and one part from his family and friends for thirty days Texas Siftings.

THE HAUNTED CLOCK.

Queer and Uncanny Habits of an Ancient Family Time-Piece.

In a farm-house near Devon, Pa., there is a haunted clock, with a weird legend of revolutionary times connected with it. A cold-blooded murder of a drummer is in the legend, and once a year "the clock acts strangely" and can not be made to go. This is a true bill, you understand, and I believe the story. I know that "haunted clock." I have met it in a Pennsylvania tavern more than once. Only the legend doesn't do the haunted clock full justice. Not only once a year, on the anniversary of the drummer's death, does it "act strangely." It acts strangely all the time. It chokes and gurgles in ghastly gutterals for about five minutes before it strikes, and heard, in the dead of night, these awful sounds petrify the terrified guest with horror, for he firmly believes that the man in the next room is hanging himself with his suspenders. When the haunted clock strikes eleven, it starts off with ponderous solemnity and strikes six. Then it stops, groans twice, gurgles, makes a muffled noise with something that needs oiling, strikes one, wheezes and goes to sleep. About 11:30, however, it wakes up, grunts, sneezes twice, strikes the other four, and, with a hollow groan goes on its limping with tick tocks, of alternating loudness and softness, sometimes falling asleep and missing two or three ticks altogether, always waking with a start and tick tocking very loudly for the next minute. And then, along in the afternoon, when you are anxious to go to the station to catch the five o'clock train, the hour hand points to three and the minute hand is at five and the clock strikes nine, you know it is a quarter past six and your train has gone more than an hour ago. There is also a calendar on this clock, showing the days of the week and the months, but it is stuck fast between Monday and Tuesday at the 31st of February, and there is a hole in the dial where a moon shows itself in the full dark all the year round. O, it is a sure 'nough haunted clock. I've seen it, many a time, and have missed more trains by it than there are spooks in Virginia or "thengs" in Indiana. Every body about the hotel "sets" that clock. The landlord looks at it about once or twice a week and sets it by a silver watch that looks like a slung-shot. Then by and by the oldest boy comes along and sets it by the school bell, which rings about nine o'clock. Then the porter-hostler comes along and sets it "by the sun." And, finally, the landlady comes in and sets it "by guess." And the old clock, remarking, "None of these things move me," haunts on in the same distracted, time-killing old way as of old. —Burdette, in Brooklyn Eagle.

SPAIN'S QUEEN REGENT.

Daily Life of an Interesting Member of Europe's Royalty.

Queen Regent Christina is an early riser, and, after her bath, she takes a simple morning breakfast with tea. Then she sees to her children and often is present at their breakfast. The rest of the morning is given up to public business and listening to what her Ministers may have to say in their daily audience. At one she lunches, sometimes alone and sometimes with the Infanta Isabel, who lives in the palace. After lunch, if she is not hindered by audiences, the Regent goes out for a couple of hours of recreation. When she returns, the little King and Princesses join their mother in her own room, and she reads and writes whilst they play around her. Then her Majesty dresses for dinner, which takes place at eight o'clock in the large dining-room, hung with rare tapestries. The royal table is very large, even when there are no guests, for, besides the Infanta Isabel, Queen Isabella, when in Madrid, dines with her daughter-in-law, as also the ladies and lords in waiting, the aides-de-camp, the chaplain, the commander of the halberdiers, and several palace officials and dignitaries.

At table, the Queen likes everybody to converse freely, and she joins in the conversation, taking care to address all her guests in turn. After dinner all assemble in Her Majesty's drawing room and whist tables or chess are set out for those that care to play. The Infanta often withdraws early in order to go to the opera, but the Queen remains with her guests until eleven o'clock.

There is often music on these occasions. Great singers are invited to the palace, and they say that nothing can be more pleasant and homelike than the Queen's drawing room.

At 11:30 every thing is quiet in the Royal Alcazar, as Spaniards call the Queen's home. The massive gates are closed and barred, guards are doubled, and nobody can go in without giving the countersign. This watchword is chosen every day by Her Majesty herself when, in conformity with the ancient usage of the Spanish court and capital, she receives the visit of the Captain General of Castile. This, the highest military official in the capital, is just now the King-maker himself, Marshal Martinez Campo, who proclaimed Alfonso XII., in 1874, in the old Roman city of Sagontum. Every morning at twelve he calls on Dona Christina to say that all is well and to receive from her royal lips the password for the twenty-four hours to come.—Madrid Letter.

FARM AND FIRESIDE.

—A farmer can not afford to plant poor seed. A mongrel crop of any kind of vegetable is a poor class of goods to thrust upon a market expecting to receive remunerative prices.

—Spinach: Pick and wash, put in a sauce-pan without water; sprinkle with salt. Let cook half an hour; add butter and pepper; dish, pour over boiling cream, and place slices of hard boiled egg over the top.

—The farmer objects to giving his note and having it discounted for cash. The sharper says: "O, we'll keep the note," and he writes across the face "not transferable." In a short time it is found in the hands of another party, with an "e" added to the "not" which makes it read "note transferable."

—Recipes—To make a lemon drop: Let it fall off the table. To make a stomach cake: Use plenty of unripe fruit. To make a (n)ice (s)cream: Stick a pin in the baby. To make pastry neatly: Have every thing in apple-pie order. To make cats-sup: Give them milk. To make a nice pickle: Hunt in a drawer for something in the dark.

—Honey-comb pudding: Half a cup of flour, half a cup of sugar, half a cup of butter, half a cup of milk; beat these together well. Then add four eggs well beaten. Into half a pint of molasses stir one teaspoonful of soda until it foams, and add this last. Bake in a slow oven. Serve with cream sauce or beaten cream.

—An Illinois horticultural society decides that the deterioration of orchards noticeable everywhere, is due principally to double cropping the land and starving the trees; and that the secret of their restoration lies in plowing under green crops, or sowing clover to remain uncut for the double purpose of mulch and manure.

—A correspondent of the Scientific American, who speaks from long and actual experience, says that the best of all remedies for one who has been poisoned by poison-ivy is hot water, as hot as it can be borne, applied every hour or two, or as often as the itching returns. He says that this will effect a cure in two days, and that poisoned sumac yields to the same remedy.

—It certainly does not pay to keep a low grade of sheep and then let them take care of themselves. The small amount of wool secured, as well as the poor quality, is such that no margin of profit will be left to the farmer over and above the cost. Even with poor sheep a much better growth of wool can be secured if they be reasonably well cared for than if they be left to themselves.

—In regard to getting the best yield of choice honey, try and have all your colonies very strong when the honey flow comes. This is best accomplished by feeding a thin sirup or honey each evening, commencing about six weeks before the expected yield. Give room in the sections as soon as needed to delay swarming as long as possible. You can not expect to extract much honey from weak colonies. Honey should not be extracted before it is sealed up by the bees, or it may sour on your hands.

—A simple, homely remedy for many tree ailments and enemies is wood ashes, or, if not to be had, coal ashes with a sprinkling of lime—but ashes; ashes to be used freely before mulching (against frost or drought); after mulching, that no tree enemies may harbor therein, the mulching itself, when gathered up, to be burned and returned to the trees. Young trees should have plenty of iron filings or cinders around the roots when planted. If the iron is not needed it will not be absorbed, therefore there can be no harm in its use.

FIRST-CLASS SEEDS.

Why Farmers Should Under No Circumstances Use Others.

Few farmers give enough attention to the proper selection of seed. The price is of little importance provided one gets just what he wants, pure, true to name and of good germinating force. Take cabbage seed for instance. Every year there are acres of cabbage stumps set and the seed put on the market which is comparatively worthless. The seed should be grown from cabbage heads carefully selected in the fall; those which least resemble the true type of the variety should be cast aside and sold, only the true stock being kept for resetting for seed.

No farmer who proposes to grow onions for market should buy seed that he knows nothing about. Price is no object. If onion seed is selling at one dollar per pound, and some grower has by careful selection, hand shelling, etc., produced seed that is really worth twice as much by the labor and care bestowed on it, ought he not to ask two dollars per pound? Some buyers will refuse to pay it, thinking the cheapest will be good enough. But suppose the seed fails, proves to be of some inferior variety, full of scullions and with a tendency to "stiff-neck," the labor and seed are both lost. I have grown 1,030 bushels per acre of white globe onions from selected seed for which I paid $8 per pound, while an adjoining planting immediately beside the first on same land and under same conditions, did not produce bushels enough to be profitable; the seed cost only $2 per pound. I have grown 880 bushels red globe per acre, and 778 Wethersfield large red, and I have seen over 1,200 bushels of the latter on a single acre. Many seeds that go through dealers' hands are mixed with old or a cheaper seed, the germinating power of which has been destroyed by heat, so that they will not come up and expose the fraud. The farmer wonders why his seed did not come up well, but does not think it was tampered with. Buy your seeds of some expert grower or seedsman who has a reputation, or grow them yourself.—N. E. Farmer.

METHODS OF FARMING.

The Difference Between Good and Indifferent Management.

There are many ways of managing a farm. Every man is of course expected to have ways of his own. His individuality may show itself in the construction of his house and barns, in the breed of stock which he raises, in his personal appearance, style of dress, etc. Those things, unless indulged to extremes, do not effect his material prosperity. There are other matters, however, which concern his getting along in the world which will admit of little latitude.

A good farmer will take care of his property. His buildings are kept in good repair. There are no barn doors off the hinges, no shingles off the roof. His gates are in good condition with proper fastenings. He does not climb over the fence because it is easier than to open a gate. His plows, mowers, reapers, rakes and harrows are put under a shelter when he is through with them. His wagons are under cover. His buggy, if he has one, is in a carriage-house, clean and ready for a trip. The harness is hung upon a peg, also brushed clean. The carriage robe is put away from the dust.

The straw of his last threshing is nicely stacked to carry his stock through in case of a hard winter. His fences are all in good condition, and do not encourage a hungry animal to try to break them. His orchard is well dressed out. The prunings from his orchard and vineyard are piled out of the way. His woodpile is under cover. His animals have comfortable quarters. When Sunday comes he can take his wife or children to church or to see his neighboring farmers. There is an air of respectability about his neatly-dressed children, his tidy wife, his contented-looking horses. All things point to his being a good farmer, a respectable, substantial man.

The poor farmer shows his want of method quite as decidedly as does the good farmer his thrift and take-care-of things. The poor farmer has boards off his barn and sheds; shingles off the roof, and doors off the hinges. His fences being out of repair, his cattle are tempted to reach over to "get a bite," breaking them down still worse. He has no gates, or if he has any they are nailed up, because it is easier to climb a fence than to fix up a gate every time he goes through. When he moves from field to field he must take down and put up the fence; he has no time to make a gate. His wagons are left under an oak tree for the cattle to rub against, and for the chickens to roost on. He has no place to store any thing. His plows and other agricultural tools are either left in the field where he used them last, or they are set against the barn to be out of the way. He has no woodpile but occasionally throws a chunk or two into his wagon as he returns from town. His wife and daughters often have to hack off wood enough to get supper "against he comes home." He is always behind about his work and always in a hurry. He sows his grain after other people's is several inches high. His plows are dull; his horses thin and his grain getting badly put in, he only has half a crop which he is obliged to sell as soon as it is threshed, to pay bills. He did not get time to prune his orchard or thin out his fruit, so he could get nothing for it. His hogs are of the razorback-breed and will crawl through a crack of the fence and between the pickets. He don't have good luck raising cattle or horses. "Pears like luck was agin him." He is tired of the farm. His sons want to go to the city. His daughters want to learn a trade, dressmaking or tailoring. His wife looks dragged out as though she would welcome death as a day of rest. Nothing about him looks respectable. The cattle, horses and hogs all have an inhospitable, unsatisfied look. Even the large yellow dog that at other places fiercely barks awhile and then joins in the general welcome, here only growls, and as for showing signs of joy, he forgot how to wag his tail years ago. All looks dilapidated and discouraged, all because their master never learned to take care of things.—San Francisco Chronicle.

How to Start a Creamery.

To organize a co-operative cheese factory or creamery, you should first write to the manufacturers of dairy supplies, and get all the information they can furnish in their printed matter or letters. Then call a meeting of your farmers and tell them all you know. This meeting should appoint a committee to further investigate, and if possible the committee should visit several such factories. If their report is not sufficiently complete, get some experienced creamery manager to address a meeting later. After you have adopted a constitution and by-laws (in the preparation of which a lawyer should be employed to make sure that your State laws are complied with and that you start right,) you can then decide whether to use the cream-gathering or the whole milk system, what apparatus to employ, etc. Whether butter-making will pay better than cheese depends largely upon the market, but as a rule, the creameries can return a larger price for milk than cheese factories. You can equip a factory to make either butter or cheese, as the market warrants, although we prefer to have it confined to one thing. —Farm and Home.

CURSED BY WEALTH.

Increase in Suicides Among the Young Sons of Rich Fathers.

But the poor devil who, in the midst of a great city, without money, home or friends, decides that the best road for him leads through potter's field may derive some small consolation from the fact that riches, too, sometimes lead to a voluntary funeral and a hole in the ground. The political economist and the Anarchist may extract a double kernel from this nut of city life and mammoth fortunes, for suicide among the young sons of wealthy fathers is reaching a point which calls for reflection. To be sure, the coroners' inquests in these cases are "doctored" by an adequate outlay of cash, and they go upon the official records generally as accidental death. Nevertheless, they are cases of self-murder, and the public know it, while wondering at the causes which should lead a youth, the heir apparent to a million or more and untold luxury, to take his own life.

The very wealth is at the root of it all. The boy is indulged in money and the disposition of his time. He plays billiards and cards all night, smokes cigarettes immoderately, drinks whisky in proportion, indulges in other pastimes and vices, and bribes the servants to lie about his comings and goings at home. The father, engrossed in large affairs, frequently has a young drunkard sitting opposite him at dinner without being aware of the fact, and the mother's love is too blind to observe. The boy's health is damaged, his morals strangled, and his pocket mortgaged. He gets into all sorts of scrapes that he is ashamed of, until finally one more outrageous than usual, and perhaps with a female attachment, drives him, with a mind weakened by debauchery, to despair. Then he shoots himself; and he's usually drunk when he does it.—N. Y. Letter.

Vaccination Statistics.

The following extract from the Santtarian would seem to indicate that a compulsory vaccination law has its advantages: "The success of the anti-vaccinationists is aptly shown by the results in Zurich, Switzerland, where for a number of years, until 1883, a compulsory vaccinnation law obtained, and smallpox was wholly prevented (not a single case occurred in 1882.) This result was seized upon in the following year by the anti-vaccinationists, and used against the necessity for any such law, and it seems they had sufficient influence to cause its repeal. The death returns for that year (1883) showed that for every thousand deaths two were caused by smallpox; in 1884, there were three; in 1885, seventeen; and in the first quarter of 1886, eighty-five."

NERVOUS SUFFERER.

Do Not Fail to Heed the Warning.

Have you dyspepsia, indigestion, constipation, kidney and liver disease? Every hour you neglect them may take years from your life.

Have you nervousness, weakness, nervous debility, sleeplessness and exhaustion? Every beat of your heart is but a funeral march towards your grave.

Have you neuralgia, rheumatism, epilepsy, palpitation, tobacco or morphine habit? Any one of these is but a moment to take your heart in its deadly grasp.

Have you headache, loss of memory, numbness, trembling, prickly sensation, cold feet or weariness of the limbs? The sword of Damocles is suspended above you, for just as sure as you neglect these symptoms, just so sure will paralysis, insanity, prostration or death follow.

Save yourselves from these alarming results while there is yet time by the use of that most wonderful discovery for the nerves, Dr. Greene's Nervura Nerve Tonic, which is a perfect and complete cure for all the above diseases. It is purely vegetable, and pronounced the greatest medical discovery of the century.

It will take away your nervousness and make your nerves strong and steady. If you are weak, tired and exhausted, it will make you strong and vigorous. It will cure your indigestion and dyspepsia, give you an appetite, regulate your bowels, kidneys and liver. It will give you natural and refreshing sleep, stop all palpitation of the heart, trembling, numbness, headache and neuralgic pains. It is a perfect specific for nervous debility and exhausted nervous vitality. It is the best spring tonic, invigorator and restorative in existence, for it makes the weak strong, invigorates the tired and overworked brain, nerves the weary brain, and restores health, strength and vitality.

IF DO NOT FAIL TO USE THIS WONDERFUL REMEDY, AND YOU ARE SURE OF A CURE. For sale by all druggists at $1.00 per bottle. If your druggist does not have it he will get it for you. Insist upon having DR. GREENE'S NERVURA NERVE TONIC, for nothing in the world can take its place. Its discoverer, DR. GREENE, is the great specialist in the cure of nervous and chronic diseases, of 35 West 14th Street, New York, who can be consulted FREE OF CHARGE, personally or by letter.

Now vs. Then

Our oldest inhabitant delights to refer to the good old times, but when you pin him down he reluctantly yet honestly admits that he can not name an item or an industry that is not greatly improved in these later days.

Take for instance the article Hood's Sarsaparilla. Why, it would have been almost an impossibility to have produced it in the olden time.

In the preparation of this medicine the articles which investigation has proven to be inert are discarded, those which have proven their merit are retained and a combination formed of the most effective medical agents of the vegetable kingdom peculiar to this medicine alone. Their active properties are secured by a process so modern and original that an eminent professor in the Massachusetts College of Pharmacy, while being shown through C. I. Hood & Co.'s mammoth establishment, stopped and looking Mr. Hood in the eye exclaimed, "This is the present, that is the past,"—referring to competing houses.

Another point worthy of mention right here: Hood's Sarsaparilla is not an accident, but the ripe fruit of industry and study. It was originated by men thoroughly educated in the manipulation of medicines and is made to-day under their personal supervision. If the public could see the care exercised in the selection and purchase of every article that enters into Hood's Sarsaparilla, and the cleanliness and neatness with which its whole preparation is conducted, they would not wonder at its great curative power or at the hold it has on public confidence. Its success is the natural result of real merit and giving every purchaser a fair equivalent for his money—One hundred doses one dollar.

FARM AND FIRESIDE.

—A farmer can not afford to plant poor seed. A mongrel crop of any kind of vegetable is a poor class of goods to thrust upon a market expecting to receive remunerative prices.

—Spinach: Pick and wash, put in a sauce-pan without water; sprinkle with salt. Let cook half an hour; add butter and pepper; dish, pour over boiling cream, and place slices of hard boiled egg over the top.

—The farmer objects to giving his note and having it discounted for cash. The sharper says: "O, we'll keep the note," and he writes across the face "not transferable." In a short time it is found in the hands of another party, with an "e" added to the "not" which makes it read "note transferable."

—Recipes—To make a lemon drop: Let it fall off the table. To make a stomach cake: Use plenty of unripe fruit. To make a (n)ice (s)cream: Stick a pin in the baby. To make pastry neatly: Have every thing in apple-pie order. To make cats-sup: Give them milk. To make a nice pickle: Hunt in a drawer for something in the dark.

—Honey-comb pudding: Half a cup of flour, half a cup of sugar, half a cup of butter, half a cup of milk; beat these together well. Then add four eggs well beaten. Into half a pint of molasses stir one teaspoonful of soda until it foams, and add this last. Bake in a slow oven. Serve with cream sauce or beaten cream.

—An Illinois horticultural society decides that the deterioration of orchards noticeable everywhere, is due principally to double cropping the land and starving the trees; and that the secret of their restoration lies in plowing under green crops, or sowing clover to remain uncut for the double purpose of mulch and manure.

—A correspondent of the Scientific American, who speaks from long and actual experience, says that the best of all remedies for one who has been poisoned by poison-ivy is hot water, as hot as it can be borne, applied every hour or two, or as often as the itching returns. He says that this will effect a cure in two days, and that poisoned sumac yields to the same remedy.

—It certainly does not pay to keep a low grade of sheep and then let them take care of themselves. The small amount of wool secured, as well as the poor quality, is such that no margin of profit will be left to the farmer over and above the cost. Even with poor sheep a much better growth of wool can be secured if they be reasonably well cared for than if they be left to themselves.

—In regard to getting the best yield of choice honey, try and have all your colonies very strong when the honey flow comes. This is best accomplished by feeding a thin sirup or honey each evening, commencing about six weeks before the expected yield. Give room in the sections as soon as needed to delay swarming as long as possible. You can not expect to extract much honey from weak colonies. Honey should not be extracted before it is sealed up by the bees, or it may sour on your hands.

—A simple, homely remedy for many tree ailments and enemies is wood ashes, or, if not to be had, coal ashes with a sprinkling of lime—but ashes; ashes to be used freely before mulching (against frost or drought); after mulching, that no tree enemies may harbor therein, the mulching itself, when gathered up, to be burned and returned to the trees. Young trees should have plenty of iron filings or cinders around the roots when planted. If the iron is not needed it will not be absorbed, therefore there can be no harm in its use.

FIRST-CLASS SEEDS.

Why Farmers Should Under No Circumstances Use Others.

Few farmers give enough attention to the proper selection of seed. The price is of little importance provided one gets just what he wants, pure, true to name and of good germinating force. Take cabbage seed for instance. Every year there are acres of cabbage stumps set and the seed put on the market which is comparatively worthless. The seed should be grown from cabbage heads carefully selected in the fall; those which least resemble the true type of the variety should be cast aside and sold, only the true stock being kept for resetting for seed.

No farmer who proposes to grow onions for market should buy seed that he knows nothing about. Price is no object. If onion seed is selling at one dollar per pound, and some grower has by careful selection, hand shelling, etc., produced seed that is really worth twice as much by the labor and care bestowed on it, ought he not to ask two dollars per pound? Some buyers will refuse to pay it, thinking the cheapest will be good enough. But suppose the seed fails, proves to be of some inferior variety, full of scullions and with a tendency to "stiff-neck," the labor and seed are both lost. I have grown 1,030 bushels per acre of white globe onions from selected seed for which I paid $8 per pound, while an adjoining planting immediately beside the first on same land and under same conditions, did not produce bushels enough to be profitable; the seed cost only $2 per pound. I have grown 880 bushels red globe per acre, and 778 Wethersfield large red, and I have seen over 1,200 bushels of the latter on a single acre. Many seeds that go through dealers' hands are mixed with old or a cheaper seed, the germinating power of which has been destroyed by heat, so that they will not come up and expose the fraud. The farmer wonders why his seed did not come up well, but does not think it was tampered with. Buy your seeds of some expert grower or seedsman who has a reputation, or grow them yourself.—N. E. Farmer.

METHODS OF FARMING.

The Difference Between Good and Indifferent Management.

There are many ways of managing a farm. Every man is of course expected to have ways of his own. His individuality may show itself in the construction of his house and barns, in the breed of stock which he raises, in his personal appearance, style of dress, etc. Those things, unless indulged to extremes, do not effect his material prosperity. There are other matters, however, which concern his getting along in the world which will admit of little latitude.

A good farmer will take care of his property. His buildings are kept in good repair. There are no barn doors off the hinges, no shingles off the roof. His gates are in good condition with proper fastenings. He does not climb over the fence because it is easier than to open a gate. His plows, mowers, reapers, rakes and harrows are put under a shelter when he is through with them. His wagons are under cover. His buggy, if he has one, is in a carriage-house, clean and ready for a trip. The harness is hung upon a peg, also brushed clean. The carriage robe is put away from the dust.

The straw of his last threshing is nicely stacked to carry his stock through in case of a hard winter. His fences are all in good condition, and do not encourage a hungry animal to try to break them. His orchard is well dressed out. The prunings from his orchard and vineyard are piled out of the way. His woodpile is under cover. His animals have comfortable quarters. When Sunday comes he can take his wife or children to church or to see his neighboring farmers. There is an air of respectability about his neatly-dressed children, his tidy wife, his contented-looking horses. All things point to his being a good farmer, a respectable, substantial man.

The poor farmer shows his want of method quite as decidedly as does the good farmer his thrift and take-care-of things. The poor farmer has boards off his barn and sheds; shingles off the roof, and doors off the hinges. His fences being out of repair, his cattle are tempted to reach over to "get a bite," breaking them down still worse. He has no gates, or if he has any they are nailed up, because it is easier to climb a fence than to fix up a gate every time he goes through. When he moves from field to field he must take down and put up the fence; he has no time to make a gate. His wagons are left under an oak tree for the cattle to rub against, and for the chickens to roost on. He has no place to store any thing. His plows and other agricultural tools are either left in the field where he used them last, or they are set against the barn to be out of the way. He has no woodpile but occasionally throws a chunk or two into his wagon as he returns from town. His wife and daughters often have to hack off wood enough to get supper "against he comes home." He is always behind about his work and always in a hurry. He sows his grain after other people's is several inches high. His plows are dull; his horses thin and his grain getting badly put in, he only has half a crop which he is obliged to sell as soon as it is threshed, to pay bills. He did not get time to prune his orchard or thin out his fruit, so he could get nothing for it. His hogs are of the razorback-breed and will crawl through a crack of the fence and between the pickets. He don't have good luck raising cattle or horses. "'Pears like luck was agin him." He is tired of the farm. His sons want to go to the city. His daughters want to learn a trade, dressmaking or tailoring. His wife looks dragged out as though she would welcome death as a day of rest. Nothing about him looks respectable. The cattle, horses and hogs all have an inhospitable, unsatisfied look. Even the large yellow dog that at other places fiercely barks awhile and then joins in the general welcome, here only growls, and as for showing signs of joy, he forgot how to wag his tail years ago. All looks dilapidated and discouraged, all because their master never learned to take care of things.—San Francisco Chronicle.

How to Start a Creamery.

To organize a co-operative cheese factory or creamery, you should first write to the manufacturers of dairy supplies, and get all the information they can furnish in their printed matter or letters. Then call a meeting of your farmers and tell them all you know. This meeting should appoint a committee to further investigate, and if possible the committee should visit several such factories. If their report is not sufficiently complete, get some experienced creamery manager to address a meeting later. After you have adopted a constitution and by-laws (in the preparation of which a lawyer should be employed to make sure that your State laws are complied with and that you start right,) you can then decide whether to use the cream-gathering or the whole milk system, what apparatus to employ, etc. Whether butter-making will pay better than cheese depends largely upon the market, but as a rule, the creameries can return a larger price for milk than cheese factories. You can equip a factory to make either butter or cheese, as the market warrants, although we prefer to have it contined to one thing. —Farm and Home.

—The Jambue seed, or "Eugenia Jambolana," is now recognized to have the property of arresting the transformation of starch into sugar, and hence its great value as a medicine. Specimens of this medicinal plant are now being cultivated in England

CURSED BY WEALTH.

Increase in Suicides Among the Young Sons of Rich Fathers.

But the poor devil who, in the midst of a great city, without money, home or friends, decides that the best road for him leads through potter's field may derive some small consolation from the fact that riches, too, sometimes lead to a voluntary funeral and a hole in the ground. The political economist and the Anarchist may extract a double kernel from this nut of city life and mammoth fortunes, for suicide among the young sons of wealthy fathers is reaching a point which calls for reflection. To be sure, the coroners' inquests in these cases are "doctored" by an adequate outlay of cash, and they go upon the official records generally as accidental death. Nevertheless, they are cases of self-murder, and the public know it, while wondering at the causes which should lead a youth, the heir apparent to a million or more and untold luxury, to take his own life.

The very wealth is at the root of it all. The boy is indulged in money and the disposition of his time. He plays billiards and cards all night, smokes cigarettes immoderately, drinks whisky in proportion, indulges in other pastimes and vices, and bribes the servants to lie about his comings and goings at home. The father, engrossed in large affairs, frequently has a young drunkard sitting opposite him at dinner without being aware of the fact, and the mother's love is too blind to observe. The boy's health is damaged, his morals strangled, and his pocket mortgaged. He gets into all sorts of scrapes that he is ashamed of, until finally one more outrageous than usual, and perhaps with a female attachment, drives him, with a mind weakened by debauchery, to despair. Then he shoots himself; and he's usually drunk when he does it.—N. Y. Letter.

Vaccination Statistics.

The following extract from the Sanitarian would seem to indicate that a compulsory vaccination law has its advantages: "The success of the anti-vaccinationists is aptly shown by the results in Zurich, Switzerland, where for a number of years, until 1883, a compulsory vaccinnation law obtained, and smallpox was wholly prevented (not a single case occurred in 1882.) This result was seized upon in the following year by the anti-vaccinationists, and used against the necessity for any such law, and it seems they had sufficient influence to cause its repeal. The death returns for that year (1883) showed that for every thousand deaths two were caused by smallpox; in 1884, there were three; in 1885, seventeen; and in the first quarter of 1886, eighty-five."

Dr. Talmage Writes as Follows:

"The Christian Herald has for many years had full permission to publish my sermons. I shall continue to revise them for this paper, which is growing with miraculous rapidity in circulation, influence and moral power." The same paper is also authorized to publish Rev. C. H. Spurgeon's sermons, which are sent direct from London every week by special arrangement. Every issue contains the portrait of one or two eminent persons with pictures and biography; a summary of the week's news from all parts of the world; part of a thrilling serial story; Sunday-school lesson; short illustrated stories and missionary scenes, anecdotes, etc., etc. In short, it is a complete and excellent family illustrated paper of 16 pages, and is rapidly increasing in popularity. Subscription price is $1.50. Special terms to clubs of two or more. Send postal card for free sample copy to the Manager, 63 Bible House, New York City. We would strongly advise our readers to send 25 cts in stamps or currency for a two months trial subscription.

NERVOUS SUFFERER.

Do Not Fail to Heed the Warning.

Have you dyspepsia, indigestion, constipation, kidney and liver disease? Every hour you neglect them may take years from your life.

Have you nervousness, weakness, nervous debility, sleeplessness and exhaustion? Every beat of your heart is a funeral march towards your grave.

Have you neuralgia, rheumatism, epilepsy, palpitation, tobacco or morphine habit? Any one of these is any moment to take your heart in its deadly grip.

Do you headache, loss of memory, numbness, trembling, prickly sensation, cold feet or weariness of the limbs? The sword of Damocles is suspended above you, for just so sure as you neglect these symptoms, just so sure will paralysis, insanity, prostration or death follow.

Save yourselves from these alarming results while there is yet time by the use of that most wonderful discovery for the nerves, Dr. Greene's Nervura Nerve Tonic, which is a perfect and complete cure for all the above diseases. It is purely vegetable, and pronounced the greatest medical discovery of the century.

It will take away your nervousness and make your nerves strong and steady. If you are weak, tired and exhausted, it will make you strong and vigorous. It will cure your indigestion and dyspepsia, give you an appetite, regulate your bowels, kidneys and liver. It will give you natural and refreshing sleep, stop all palpitation of the heart, trembling, numbness, headache and neuralgic pains. It is a perfect specific for nervous debility and exhausted nervous vitality. It is the best spring tonic, invigorator and restorative in existence, for it makes the weak strong, invigorates the tired and overworked brain, nerves the weary limbs, and restores health, strength and vitality.

IF DO NOT FAIL TO USE THIS WONDERFUL REMEDY, AND YOU ARE SURE OF A CURE. For sale by all druggists at $1.00 per bottle. If your druggist does not have it he will get it for you. Insist upon having Dr. Greene's Nervura Nerve Tonic, for nothing in the world can take its place. Its discoverer, Dr. Greene, is the great specialist in the cure of nervous and chronic diseases, of 35 West 14th Street, New York, who can be consulted FREE OF CHARGE, personally or by letter.

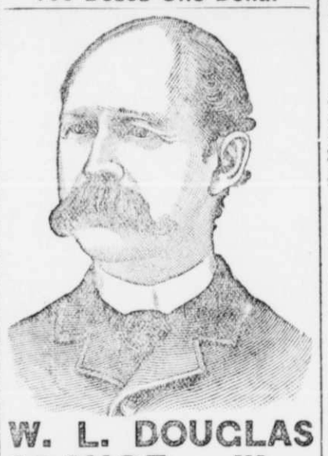
Now vs. Then

Our oldest inhabitant delights to refer to the good old times, but when you pin him down he reluctantly yet honestly admits that he can not name an item or an industry that is not greatly improved in these later days.

Take for instance the article Hood's Sarsaparilla. Why, it would have been almost an impossibility to have produced it in the olden time.



In the preparation of this medicine the articles which investigation has proven to be inert are discarded, those which have proven their merit are retained and a combination formed of the most effective medical agents of the vegetable kingdom peculiar to this medicine alone. Their active properties are secured by a process so modern and original that an eminent professor in the Massachusetts College of Pharmacy, while being shown through C. I. Hood & Co.'s mammoth establishment, stopped and looking Mr. Hood in the eye exclaimed, "This is the present, that is the past,"—referring to competing houses.

Another point worthy of mention right here: Hood's Sarsaparilla is not an accident, but the ripe fruit of industry and study. It was originated by men thoroughly educated in the manipulation of medicines and is made to-day under their personal supervision. If the public could see the care exercised in the selection and purchase of every article that enters into Hood's Sarsaparilla, and the cleanliness and neatness with which its whole preparation is conducted, they would not wonder at its great curative power or at the hold it has on public confidence. Its success is the natural result of real merit and giving every purchaser a fair equivalent for his money—One hundred doses one dollar.

SATURDAY, APRIL 21, 1888.

The Republican State Central Committee which met in Dushane Post Hall, Baltimore, Wednesday of last week, decided that the Congressional conventions to nominate delegates to the national convention and electors shall be held on May 9th, and the State convention on May 17th, in Easton, Talbot county. The convention of this district, the Sixth, will be at Cumberland. The county primaries will be held at such time and places as may be designated by the members of the State Central committee of the respective counties. All the counties were represented except Alleghony, Calvert, Garrett, Somerset, St. Mary's and Wicomico. The general feeling of the convention was for Blaine and the balance about equally divided on Sherman and Allison.

The following is Congressman Rayner's estimate of Hon. L. E. McComas as given in an interview recently: "In the Sixth, I know of no one that can beat Mr, McComas. Though a Republican, he is not an extremist. He is one of the most popular men in Congress; his ability is eqaled by his integrity; he is influenced by the highest principles of honor in his political action, and he never permits his party feeling to lead him from the path of duty. He is esteemed upon both sides of the House, and you cannot help being attracted to him. He has been of the greatest service to his State, and I do not care what his politics are he is an honor to Maryland. It would de a very good thing if Maryland did as other States, and kept her delegation here as long as they were deserving, provided they want to stay. There is no bonanza in it to men who do the work."

Gone.

Woodbury News, Democrat.

The adjournment of the Legislature brought joy to the hearts of the people. This is a sad truth, and we regret that it is so. We wish that our Legislators had gone to their homes honored and respected by those who commissioned them as representatives, but on the other hand, with a few honorable exceptions, they have gone to their habitations bearing with them the maledictions and contempt of all who were in any wise familiar with their methods. We have been informed that a more contemptable body have never assembled in our legislative halls. How true this may be we know not, but we do know the State and the people would have been better off if the Legislature had never been born.

Not a single measure calculated to advance the interest of the State has been passed, but many good and wholesome things have been killed or allowed to die.

The working classes were snubbed on every hand, not a single measure in its interest receiving any attention. They were treated with silent contempt.

It is to be regretted that our State is so cursed with politics that it is impossible to get anything done for the people. Nothing will save us from ruin but a slaughter of the political leaders that are sucking the life-blood of our grand old State.

A Russian Prince Purchases a Historic Virginia Estate.

[Special Dispatch to the Baltimore Sun.]

RICHMOND, VA., Mch. 21.—Prince Nestorovitsch, of Russia, has purchased "Sabot Island," the farm of the late Hon. James A. Seddon, the Confederate Secretary of War. This estate is in Goochland county and is one of the most historic homes in Virginia. The Prince expects to make his future home on this farm, and with this object in view contemplates making extensive improvements on his purchase. He has been in Richmond for several weeks past.

The stingily abridged news item given in the above paragraph, clipped from a recent issue of the Baltimore Sun, is well calculated to provoke amazement in the minds of the sober-thinking citizen of a republic like ours. But those familiar with the exhilarating climate and charming section of Virginia to which this brief news mention invites attention; with the broad acres and fair fields of almost inexhaustable agricultural wealth; with the castle-like residences rising as crowns of beauty along the highlands and commanding enchanting views of the sparkling surface sweep and spread of a great river, and familiar, particularly, with the surpassing attractions, so pleasing to the eye and stimulating to the fancy, about the family seat of the Seddons—those who have looked upon this pretty prospect under the glories of the southern sun, will not share the amazement of the stranger when he hears that a Prince has wandered so far beyond the reach of the sceptre and the dominion of the sovereign to live as a plain citizen, amenable to the mandates of a popular form of government. Leaving to others such deductions as may be drawn from this possible suggestion of governmental preferences or prejudices, it suffices us to believe that while in such a locality the destiny of the man was determined by the plentitude of his surroundings. "Sabot Island" is a part of Goochland county, Virginia, twenty miles above Richmond, on the North side of James river, and in a fertile belt of delightful country, posessed for generations by planters of wealth and culture—among whom was the Hon. James A. Seddon. In the fast drift of events that marked that turbulent period, Mr. Seddon succeeded Gen. George W. Randolph as Secretary of War in the Jefferson Davis Cabinet. In the winter of 1864 the capacious and costly barns and stables on this noted farm, with the valuable flouring mills near, were all burned in the reckless raid of the Federal General Dahlgreen. Pilotted by a negro man, General Dahlgreen, with dash and daring, hurried his jaded troopers over roads running often in close proximity of the winter quarters of Confederate forces, to a point in the vicinity of Mr. Seddon's, on the river, assured by his deluded pilot that the calvary could ford the river below the dam. Crossing this perplexing barrier, the design was to strike and tear up a part of the South-side railroad, which was the chief medium of supply to Richmond and to Lee, and move around Pettersburg on the route back to the Federal lines.

When the anxious General discovered that the depth and breadth of the river precluded every hope of fording, he turned in desperation to the unfortunate pilot as a traitor, had him hung, and left his body swinging from a tree limb over the public road from Sabot Island to Richmond. The foiled purpose, with its consequent delay and counter-marching, proved fatal. Not many hours after the little tragedy under the tree, the ill-fated commander, already maimed by the loss of a leg in earlier battles, met his death and his followers were scattered and most of them captured. It is the writer's impression that to this day the grave of Gen. Dahlgreen is unmarked and unknown. When the heart of the Confederacy was stilled by the fiat at Appomattox, and once more "Grim-visaged war smoothed his wrinkled front," Mr. Seddon, after a short imprisonment, returned to his delightful home, where, to hosts of friends and many distinguished guests, he dispensed a hospitality for which an enriched mind, with copious social amenities, thoroughly equipped him, and the like of which the mutations of time have left but memories among that people. Since his father's death, the youngest son of Mr. Seddon has up to the date of this sale to the noble Russian, resided at the ancestral home and farmed its ample lands.

April 11, 1888. RELLIM.

OUR WASHINGTON LETTER.

(From our Regular Correspondent.)

WASHINGTON, April 16th, 1888.—Senator Morrill, of Vermont, who is the senior member of the United States Senate, celebrated his 78th birthday last Saturday evening by a reception at his residence in this city. The distinguished gentleman is a veteran in legislation, having served nearly thirty-two consecutive years in Congrass, and that he has lost none of the ability for which he has been famous for many years was fully proven by the able speech which he delivered last Wednesday on the tariff. Mr. Merrill has been a member of the Senate continuously for 21 years, one month and ten days, and no member of that distinguished body enjoys the confidence of the people and of his colleagues to a greater extent than he.

The House committee on invalid pensions have amended the Dependent Pension bill entirely out of its original shape. But it matters little what they do with it in committee, as the Democrats of the House have fully decided that it shall not pass that body until next session, and then they depend on Cleveland to veto it. As the election will be over by that time he will probably not disappoint them.

Another Presidential candidate is out of the field. Mr. Chauncy Depew of New York has stated positively that he is not a candidate and that he does not want the nomination. He is for Blaine, who he believes posesses elements of strength not found in any other candidate. That Mr. Depew's belief is shared by the masses of the Republican party is a question that does not admit of a doubt.

The Republican caucus committee of the Senate held a meeting Friday and discussed the condition of legislation before the Senate. No change was made in the present "order of business." But they will hold another meeting on Tuesday.

Senator Hale has received a letter from Mr. Godkin, editor of the New York Evening Post, re-affirming the charges he recently made against Mr. Maynard, Assistant Secretary of the Treasury, of interference in the custom House management of that city to accomplish political ends. The letter has been followed up by a dispatch offering to produce the witnesses. Mr. Godkin is one of the distinguished Mugwumps who joined the Democrats in the last Presidential election because he believed Cleveland to be a civil service reformer. He has probably changed his mind on that subject ere this.

Mr. Blaine's family physician in this city states that when Mr. Blaine left here his health was perfect. Senator Hale had a letter from his brother who is travelling abroad now in which the latter said he had just spent four or five days with the Blaine family in Italy, and that Mr. Blaine was looking spendidly and was in the best of spirits. Still these facts will not prevent the publication of sensational stories to the effect that Mr. Blaine is about to die from some dread disease or other. It is the fear of Blaine, although in Europe, which originates these stories. His health is good enough, and unless present appearances are very deceitful he will be nominated for President by the Chicago convention.

The latest demand of the Southern Democrats—he nomination of Gen. Fitzhugh Lee of Virginia for Vice-President, this year—has created a regular panic among Cleveland's friends. They are moving heaven and earth to convince the Southerners that it will mean sure defeat to grant their demand. So far they persist in the demand, saying that they are expected to furnish 153 of the electoral votes and that they are entitled to name part of the ticket. What the result will be I cannot say but it is probable that the Southerners will compromise and take Irish promises of patronage under the next administration, in lieu of the nomination for Vice-President.

The Mills tariff bill will be taken to-morrow and it is likely to monopolize the attention of the House, with the exception of the time devoted to regular appropriation bills, for the remainder of the session. What its final fate will be no man can tell at this time, but, judging from present appearances, it will be defeated. It will have served a good turn after all however, for the hundred or so speeches that will be made over it, will furnish the voters of the country much valuable information on the tariff question.

The abject surrender made by a majority of the Democratic members of the House to the filibustering minority in the caucus last Wednesday night, has been the source of much amusement among the Republicans. The bill to refund the direct-tax to the several States, which caused the ten-days deadlock, goes over until next December. This is a great victory for the Southern Democrats, although there was nothing strange in that, They have been running the Democratic party for many years, and will continue to do so.

Conkling Dead,

NEW YORK, April, 18, 2:30 A. M.—Mr. Conkling died at 1:50 o'clock. At the bedside of the dying man were Mrs. Conkling, Judge Coxe, Dr. Anderson and Mrs. Oakman. Mr. Conkling passed away without moving a limb. He looked as though peacefully sleeping. There was a number of persons outside on the street waiting to catch the latest report. Within doors there were forty or fifty persons, also waiting to hear the worst. They were composed chiefly of representatives of the press and friends of the dead Senator.

HOMOEOPATHY.—32,655 cases in European hospitals receiving Homoeopathic treatment showed a death rate of 4.4 per cent., while 119,630 cases under old treatment had a death rate of 10.5. (See Sharps' Tracts.)

Official figures in Bavaria give Homoepathy a death rate in Cholera of 6.75 against 48.50 of old treatments. (Dr. Rath)

These figures, whose accuracy has never been refuted, should make every one give the matter a more than passing thought, and it would be well to write for a copy of our Book Catalogue, and "Medical Index," also, if interested in live stock, of our "Veterinary Index." We mail them free. Many druggists keep our medicines or they may be ordered direct.

To repeal section thirty, thirty-one, thirty-two, thirty-five, thirty-six, forty-two, forty-eight, forty-nine, fifty, fifty-one, fifty-two, sixty six, sixty-seven, and eighty-one of Article eighty-one of the Code of Public General Laws of Maryland, title "Revenue and Taxes," as enacted by the act of January Session, eighteen hundred and seventy-four, Chapter four hundred and eighty-three, so far as the same relates to Garrett county; and sections seventy-one, seventy-two, seventy-three, seventy-four, and seventy-five, of Chapter one hundred and eight, of the acts of assembly passed at January Session, eighteen hundred and seventy-eight, entitled An act to add an additional article to the Code of Public Local Laws to be entitled Garrett County, and to enact the following sections in lieu thereof, providing for the appointment of a County Treasurer for Garrett county, and defining the duties of said Treasurer.

SECTION 1. Be it enacted by the General Assembly of Maryland, That Sections thirty, thirty-one, thirty-two, thirty-five, thirty-six, forty-two, forty-eight, forty nine, fifty, fifty-one, fifty-two sixty six, sixty-seven, eighty-one, of Article eighty-one of the Code of Public General Laws of Maryland, title "Revenue and Taxes," as enacted by the acts of January Session, eighteen hundred and seventy-four, Chapter four hundred and eighty-three, so far as the same relates to Garrett county, and sections seventy-one, seventy two, seventy-three, seventy-four and seventy-five, of Chapter one hundred and eight, of the acts of assembly passed at January Session eighteen hundred and seventy-eight, entitled an act to add an additional Article to the Code of Public Local Laws, to be entitled Garrett County, be and the same are hereby repealed, and the following sections enacted in lieu thereof, providing for the appointment of a County Treasurer for Garrett county, and defining the duties of said Treasurer:

SEC. 2. And be it enacted, That the County Commissioners of Garrett county, on the third Tuesday in April of every second year, or as soon as may be thereafter, shall appoint from among the residents of said county, a competent person County Treasurer for said county, who shall give bond and qualify as hereinafter directed, and shall hold his office two years, or until his successor is appointed and qualified, except as hereinafter provided, and shall be re-eligible thereto, and shall be subject to removal from his said office at any time by the County Commissioners for any wilfull neglect of duty or misbehavior in office. The said Treasurer shall be the collector of all State taxes and of all County taxes, for whatsoever purpose levied or to be levied, for or within said county during the term of his office, or that may be placed in his hands for collection, and he shall have full power and it shall be his duty to receive and collect all State and County taxes levied as aforesaid after the passage of this act, and so put in his hands for collection, and all monies which may be due said county, with full power to enforce the payment of the same by sale or otherwise, as hereafter prescribed, and to convey title to any real or personal estate sold by him, for the payment of State or County taxes in the manner as prescribed by the succeeding sections, and all taxes levied in said county after the first day of January, A. D., eighteen hundred and eighty-eight, for State and County purposes, shall be collected by the County Treasurer.

SEC. 3. And be it enacted, That the person so appointed, before he enters upon the duties of his said office, shall take an oath before the clerk of the Circuit Court for said county, in form similar to that now taken by collectors of taxes, except as to the title of his office and to be similarly certified; he shall execute to the State of Maryland, such bond as is now or may hereafter be required by law, as the collector of State taxes, which bond shall be approved and filed in like manner as other bonds of collectors of state taxes, and he shall execute to the State of Maryland, a separate bond in the penal sum of thirty thousand dollars, with at least three sureties to be approved by the County Commissioners of Garrett county, with the condition that if the above bounden Treasurer shall well and faithfully execute his office of Treasurer, of Garrett county, and shall account for, and pay to the County Commissioners of said county, or their order, the several sums which he shall receive for said county, or be answerable for by law, at such time and in such manner as the law shall direct, then the said obligation to be void, otherwise to be and remain in full force and virtue in law; and the said bond, when approved, shall be recorded in the office of the Clerk of the Circuit Court for Garrett county. In case of the refusal of the person so appointed to qualify and execute the bonds hereinbefore required within thirty days after his appointment, or in the event of the Treasurer's removal from said county or his death or resignation during his term of office, the County Commissioners shall at once proceed to fill such vacancy by the appointment of a competent person for the remainder of the term, who shall within twenty days from the date of his appointment, qualify and bond as hereinbefore directed, and the County Commissioners shall continue after twenty days to make such appointment until a Treasurer shall qualify and bond as aforesaid; provided that such new Treasurer, so taking the place made vacant by removal, death or resignation, shall not collect nor take charge of any of the taxes that may be in the hands of such late Treasurer uncollected, and for which the bond of such late Treasurer is responsible, except as herein otherwise provided, but such taxes shall be collected under existing laws applicable to colle tor of State and County taxes when there is a death or resignation. The sureties on any Treasurer's bonds shall, when so required by said Commissioners, make oath in due form of law respectively, that they are the owners in their own right of real estate situated in said county, equal at least over and above their debts and liabilities in value to the amount of the bond. The said Commissioners may at any time demand of any Treasurer such other or further bond with such other or further security as in their judgment the interests of the State may require.

SEC. 4. And be it enacted, That the County Commissioners shall provide and furnish the Treasurer an office in the Court House building, or in some other building as near to the same as possible, in the town of Oakland, which office shall be plainly designated by external sign as the office of the County Treasurer, and it shall be the duty of the Treasurer to keep his said office open from nine o'clock in the forenoon, until three o'clock in the afternoon, and to attend there in for the transaction of business in person or by deputy, on every day in the week, except Sunday and legal holidays, and except when he is absent from the town of Oakland for the purpose of collecting taxes as hereinafter provided for. It shall be his duty to attend in person or by deputy in each election district of said county, two days each tween the first day of July and the first day of September, in each year, to collect and receive taxes, and he shall give at least ten days notice of the time and place of such visits to the respective districts.

SEC. 5. And be it enacted, That the County Commissioners of said county shall make their annual levy for State and County taxes on or before the third Tuesday in April, in each and every year, and the same shall be levied payable on the first day of August next, succeeding the date of the levy thereof, and all tax bills for county purposes which shall be paid prior to the first day of September, in the year of the levy thereof, a discount of five per centum shall be deducted from the amount thereof, from all such bills paid during the month of September succeeding the levy thereof, a discount of four per centum shall be allowed, and all taxes levied for county purposes remaining unpaid on the third first day of December, in the year of the levy thereof, shall be in arrear and interest shall be charged and collected thereon, from the date when the same shall have been due and payable, to wit: on the first day of August next succeeding the levy thereof, and the Treasurer shall make deductions from and charge interest on the tax bills for county purposes, receivery in the manner aforesaid and shall note the same upon his book and upon the receipt given for taxes so paid, but the deductions allowed on county taxes by this section, shall not be made to any person, persons or corporate institution, unless the whole amount of State and County taxes due by such person, persons or corporate institution for the current year be paid when the same is due.

SEC. 6. And be it enacted, That it shall be the duty of the Clerk of said County Commissioners, within ten days after the annual tax levy shall have been made, to deliver to the Treasurer a fair copy of the assessments lists of said county, showing the aggregate assessment of every person, corporate institution, or set of persons, as the same then appears on the assessment books of said county, with the names of said owners arranged according to election districts and alphabetically for each district; and also to deliver to said Treasurer a certified copy of the order or resolution of Commissioners making such tax levy.

SEC. 7. And be it enacted, That it shall be the duty of the Treasurer to keep certain books to be supplied by said Commissioners, in which shall be entered a full account of all receipts and disbursements of said Treasurer. He shall also keep a full and fair cash account showing all sums of money received by him so as to indicate the source whence the same were received respectively, and showing all sums of money disbursed by him, so as to indicate the purpose to which the same were applied respectively. The said treasurer shall report and exhibit to the said Commissioners at each of their regular meetings, a full and partial statement and account of his receipts and disbursements from the time of his appointment, or from the time of his last report, as the case may be, and shall exhibit his vouchers for his disbursements, which vouchers after cancellation, shall be retained by said Treasurer; all books, documents and papers belonging to the Treasurer's office, shall be the property and records of Garrett county, and at all times shall be subject to the examination of County Commissioners thereof. All books, documents and papers, goods and chattels, accounts and credits, money and deposits belonging to the Treasurer's office, or in his custody as Treasurer, shall deliver up and transferred by him to his successor in office when such successor is duly appointed and qualified; provided that the tax levy or levies placed in his hands for his collection, or so much thereof as may be uncollected or unaccounted for by him, and for which his bond is responsible, shall not be delivered or assigned over to his successor in office by such Treasurer, except as hereinafter provided, but his rights, powers and duties, as to collecting and reporting the same shall continue, and he shall collect and pay over the same as collected, to his successor in the manner and within the period hereinafter prescribed.

SEC. 8. And be it enacted, That the said Treasurer shall at the close of each week deposit in a bank to be designated by the Comptroller of the Treasury, of Maryland, all State taxes and money due the State, which may have come into his hands during the week, to the credit of the Comptroller of the State Treasury, and shall receive there or from said bank a certificate of deposit, which he shall immediately forward to the Comptroller, showing the amount placed to his credit; and said Treasurer shall in like manner deposit all money in his hands at the end of each week received for county taxes and dues in such bank as he may see fit, to the credit of "The County Treasurer of Garrett County," which money shall be drawn only by the Treasurer making such deposit, and only for claims which may have been levied or ordered paid by the County Commissioners.

SEC. 9. And be it enacted, That it shall be the duty of the Treasurer as soon as the annual tax levy shall have been made to give notice thereof in one newspaper published in said county, and by hand bills posted in each district of said county, and to prepare the tax bills of each tax payer, and on application he shall forward the bill by mail or otherwise, or deliver the same to the person, persons, or corporate institutions to whom the property included in such bill is assessed.

SEC. 10. And be it enacted, That the said Treasurer shall, the first week in December of each and every year, publish in one newspaper published in said county, and by hand bills posted in three of the most public places in each election district, in said county, a list of all delinquent tax payers for the current year, which list shall contain the names of said delinquents, the amount of assessment of each, and the taxes due by each, with a notice appended thereto that the payment of said taxes will be enforced by advertisement and sale, unless the same are paid by the first day of January then next following.

SEC. 11. And be it enacted, That it shall be the duty of the Treasurer to enforce the payment of all taxes remaining unpaid on the first day of January, in the year succeeding that in which the same shall have been levied provided the notice required by the preceding sections shall have been given. If the taxes be due and owing upon real property, or upon real and personal property, the Treasurer shall be authorized to enforce payment in the manner hereinafter prescribed, by a sale of either realty or personalty, whenever real estate is susceptible of division so that a part thereof will sell for enough to pay the taxes due and all costs, the Treasurer may in his discretion employ a surveyor to divide the same, and tax, as a part of the costs in such proceeding such compensation for the services of such surveyor as he may consider just, not exceeding the sum of three dollars per day, or the Treasurer may sell the whole of any tract of land at his election.

SEC. 12. And be it enacted, That whenever it becomes necessary for said Treasurer to enforce the payment of taxes by a sale of realty, he shall advertise such real estate once a week for three successive weeks in one newspaper published in Garrett county, and by hand-bills set up near said property and at the Court House door, and any advertised notice of a sale under the provisions of this act shall be deemed sufficient if it contains the time, terms and place of such sale, the year or years for which the taxes are due, to whom the property is assessed, the district where located, and the description of such land which is contained in the assessment books of the County Commissioners. In no case shall a discription by metes and bounds be necessary.

SEC. 13. And be it enacted, That whenever it shall be necessary to enforce the payment of taxes by a sale of personal property, the said Treasurer shall make out a bill of such taxes, in the usual form, with an order at the bottom of said bill, directing the Sheriff of said county to levy upon the personal property of the delinquent, and sell the same to satisfy and pay the taxes so due. And it shall the duty of said Sheriff upon receiving such tax bill and order to levy upon and sell the personal property of such delinquent in the same manner and upon the same notice, and he shall be entitled to the same fees as if he were proceeding under an execution from a Justice of the Peace, and he shall immediately after such sale pay over to said Treasurer the amount due on said tax bill, and any surplus which may remain after the payment of taxes, interests, and costs shall be paid by said Sheriff to such delinquent tax payer. And the said Sheriff's bond shall be liable for all such tax bills placed in his hands by such Treasurer to the same extent and in the same manner that it is liable for execution claims issued to him.

SEC. 14. And be it enacted, That when any real estate shall be sold under the provision of this act for taxes, the same shall be reported to the Circuit Court for said county by the Treasurer, upon which report if the Court shall find that the provisions of this act in relation thereto have been compiled with, there shall be a brief order nisi passed and a copy thereof published, as in case of judicial sales by trustees, and if no objections to the ratification of such sale be filed within the time limited by said order nisi, or if objections be filed and the objector is unable to show that the Treasurer has failed to comply with the provisions of this act, the sale shall be ratified by said Court, and for the purpose of hearing objections or passing orders under this act, said Courts shall be deemed to be always open as in chancery proceedings. If the objector to such sale show to the satisfaction of the judge or judges that the Treasurer has failed to comply with the provisions of this act, said sale shall be set aside, in which case the Treasurer shall forthwith proceed to a new sale of the property; upon the ratification of such sale the Treasurer shall convey to the purchaser the property purchased by him, upon payment of the costs of such deed by the purchaser, and the bond of the Treasurer shall be liable for the money paid by the purchaser, in the event of the sale not being so ratified with interest, and for all costs and expenses accruing from such sale. The Treasurer shall retain out of the proceeds of the sale when ratified, the amount of taxes and interest thereon, and all costs incurred in advertising, making, reporting and ratifying such sale, and shall pay over any excess to the owner or owners of the property thus sold. No such sale shall be set aside if the provisions of this act shall appear to have been substantially complied with and the burden of proof shall be on the exceptant thereto.

SEC. 15. And be it enacted, That if the said Treasurer shall for himself or any other person discount or buy or receive for less than its face and real value, any claim against said county, the person so offending shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon indictment and conviction, shall be fined not less than one hundred nor more than five hundred dollars for each and every offence.

SEC. 16. And be it enacted, That it shall be the duty of said Treasurer to inform himself by all lawful means of all property, stocks, or investments in said county liable to taxation, and not included in the last revised list of assessment, and of all buildings and improvements, and of all property created or acquired since said revised assessment; and he shall value the same at the full cash value thereof, and shall make return thereof to the said County Commissioners; and for the purposes of this section, the said Treasurer shall be clothed with the powers of general assessor, and his valuation of such property shall be subject to revision and correction by said Commissioners.

SEC. 17. And be it enacted, That the Treasurer shall pay over according to law or to the order of the said County Commissioners, in the manner hereinbefore prescribed by this act, all County taxes and all monies due said County, and collected by him, and he shall also pay over to the Treasurer of the State of Maryland, according to law, all the State taxes levied in said county, and collected by him and he shall be allowed two years from the date of each levy placed in his hands for collection, to complete the collection thereof, and to make his final settlement with said County Commissioners and with the Treasurer of Maryland, respectively; all claims for erroneous, insolvent or uncollectable tax bills for which he shall claim a credit, shall be presented before or at the time specified for said final settlement, and in no case shall said Commissioners allow credit for erroneous, insolvent or uncollectable taxes, unless satisfactory proof be produced under oath, that the same cannot be collected. The said Commissioners, in their discretion, at any time after the expiration of the term of any such Treasurer, or at the final settlement aforesaid, may direct and require him to deliver over to his successor in office, all balances of collected taxes due upon the lexies with which he was charged, and also so to deliver over the notices, levies and other proceedings, had for the enforcement of the payment of said taxes, and in said case the said successor or newly appointed and qualified Treasurer upon the delivery to him of the bills for such taxes, shall be empowered and required to enforce the payment of said taxes in the same manner as his predecessor could have done, and he shall have all the powers and authority in law with which his predecessor was clothed for that purpose; in such case the bond or bonds of the newly elected or succeeding Treasurer shall become responsible for the proper collection and disbursement of such taxes, and the bond or bonds of the retiring or retired Treasurer, shall be released from responsibility therefor; provided that no Treasurer's bond shall be considered as released or be cancelled, until in one mode or the other he has fully settled his accounts secured thereby, and fulfilled the duties of his said office.

SEC. 18. And be it enacted, That the said Treasurer shall receive as compensation for all the services required of him under this act four per cent. on all the taxes actually collected by him, and should said Treasurer find it necessary for his convenience at any time to appoint a deputy, he shall pay said deputy out of his commissions, and he shall be answerable for the acts of such deputy. And the County Commissioners shall, at the time of making the annual levy, levy a sufficient sum, by estimate, to cover the discount to tax payers, and compensation to the Treasurer, provided for in the preceeding sections.

SEC. 19. And be it enacted, That where land is in the hands of a trustee for sale or otherwise whether by virtue of a decree of Court or under a deed of trust, and the taxes thereon are in arrears, under the provisions of this act, the said Treasurer may enforce the payment of such taxes in the same manner as if such land were not in the hands of a trustee.

SEC. 20. And be it enacted, That whenever land shall be sold by the Treasurer the owner thereof, prior to the sale, may redeem the same by paying into Court, to be paid to the purchaser thereof, within the period of six Calendar months, from the date of such sale the amount of the purchase money, with interest thereon, at the rate of twenty per cent. per annum from the date of sale.

SEC. 21. And be it enacted, That the provisions of the Code of Public General Laws of Maryland now in force, or hereafter enacted applicable to collectors of State and County taxes, except where the same are repealed by this act or are inconsistent with the provisions of this act, shall be held to apply to the Treasurer of said county, who as to his powers, rights, duties and liabilities, both Civil and Criminal, and those of his bond or bondsmen, shall be in all respects on a footing with State and County collectors, except as herein provided.

SEC. 22. And be it enacted, That all acts or parts of acts inconsistent with the provisions of this act are hereby repealed, so far as they apply to Garrett county.

SEC. 23. And be it enacted, That this act shall take effect from the date of its passage.

Approved, Elihue E. Jackson, Governor.
George M. Upsheer, Speaker House of Delegates.

George Peter, President of the Senate.

I hereby certify that the foregoing is a true copy of An Act of the General Assembly of Maryland, passed January Session, 1888.

Mr. Kepner will have the washer on exhibition during court. 4 21 3t

A New M. D. in Town.

We acknowledge the receipt of an invitation to be present at the 81st annual Commendment of the University of Maryland, held at the Academy of Music, Baltimore, Tuesday last, when, among others, our young friend and fellow-townsman, H. W. McComas, received the degree of M. D. We understand Henry proposes to locate for the practice of his profession in Oakland, and have no doubt that he will be successful. He has our best wishes.

Death of Charles Casteel.

Charles Casteel, living near Altamont, Md., and who was employed as sawyer on A. C. Browning's steam saw-mill on Roaring creek, northwest of David Morgan's house, met with a fatal accident on Tuesday about 3 o'clock P. M.

The unfortunate man was gumming the saw with an emery wheel which was running at a terrific rate of speed. Just as Mr. Casteel was about to tell the engineer to shut off the steam, the wheel burst into a thousand pieces. Casfeel was struck in the right chest, and his ribs were broken loose from the breast bone, and crushed into small pieces, Dr. W. S. Martin, of Kingwood, was sent for, but found him past all surgery, and could do nothing save ease the poor man's terrible suffering. He was unconscious for 10 or 15 minutes, after which he came to and talked, and suffered much till during the night, when he went into a stupor, and yesterday morning when Doctor Martin left him, his breathing was infrequent and irregular—in fact, he was dying.

Casteel was about 35 or 40 years of age, and married. His wife who lives at Altamont was telegraphed for, They have three children, the eldest of whom is not over seven years of age.

About six years ago Mr. Casteel, lost his left hand by having it accidently sawed off. But Mr. Browning says he is the best sawyer he ever knew, and worth more than any other similar hand he ever had.

LATER.—Casteel died last night about 7 o'clock and was buried at Altbrightsville this morning at 10:30. —Kingwood Journal, April 12.

Deceased was well known in this county. He leaves an aged mother, a wife and three small children. His wife is a sister of Mr. Joseph Cogley, of Oakland.

Corporation Election.

The election for Mayor and councilmen for the town of Oakland was held Monday. Besides electing three Councilmen for the regular term of two years, one was elected to fill the unexpired term of Mr. H. A. Rasche. The result of the vote was as follows:

For Mayor—D. M. Mason, D., 100; Dr. S. Townshend, R., 76.

For Council—Regular Term—R. S. Jamison, D., 90; John Compton, D., 90; King Delawder, D., 79; A. G. Sturgiss, R., 94; D. E. Bolden, R., 85; George Fulmer, R., 87. For Short Term—Fred Felty, D., 75; G. A. Shirer, R., 87.

When the fact is taken into consideration that the Democrats have a majority of about 20 in the town, the Republicans secured a decided victory. The council now stands 4 Republicans to 2 Democrats, the two holding over Councilmen being Republicans.

Wilson's Mills, W. Va.

APRIL 15th, 1888.

On the last day of the legislative session I received from Mr. H. H. Van Meter, of Mt. Lake Park Hotel, a special delivery package containing the signatures of something more than one hundred petitioners, protesting against the repeal of the Local Option law now in force in Garrett county. In his letter accompanying the parcel Mr. Van Meter referred me to a package of petitions he had forwarded to me a few days before by registered mail.

It must be borne in mind that ordinary letters are distributed to members of the Legislature from the special office kept in the State House, but registered packages or letters are retained in the Annapolis postoffice until called for by the proper authority.

I was not advised of the arrival of this registered package until the receipt of Mr. Van Meter's letter, when I went at once to the postoffice and took out the package.

It was then too late to present it without suspending the rules for that purpose.

I succeeded, however, in presenting the petitions at the night session and they probably had their influence in determining the fate of the measure in whose behalf they were forwarded.

The bill to repeal the present law failed in its final passage, and, as Mr. Van Meter took an active part securing signatures and appeared to be extremely solicitous concerning the final result, before leaving Annapolis on Tuesday morning I dispatched him a hurried statement of the result of the vote, expecting him, of course, to regard it as strictly condential. But a day or two later my letter was printed and sent broad cast over the county, and in the body of the circular he charged me, by implication, at least, with neglecting the petitions which had been sent me. Since my return home I have been too busy to make what seems to be a necessary explanation, and now avail myself of the opportunity to do so, as the citizens signing the petitions certainly have a right to know what disposition was made of them.

The last package of petitions received by me contained something more than two hundred signatures, but I have not an account of the exact number, making over three hundred in all received by me. If any other petitions were forwarded to me I did not receive them and have no knowledge of them whatever.

Trusting that the above will sufficiently explain any seeming negligence or tardiness on my part in reference to the question of petitions sent to the Legislature,

I remain,
Yours truly,
GEO. W. WILSON.

Swanton.

The following persons have been elected as officers of the United Brethren Sunday School for the ensuing year, beginning with April: Superintendent, A. F. George; Assistant Superintendent, C. T. Sweet; Secretary, Mrs. S. M. Fairall; Treasurer, J. D. Ashenfelter; Librarian, Miss Ada Shank. The school is increasing in interest.

Mrs. M. T. Brady, of Elk Garden, and Mrs. W. Harvey, of Shaw, W. Va., were visiting friends at Swanton and Deer Park last week.

Mr. Wm. E. George has moved from his place in Green Glades to the house lately purchased by him in Deer Park.

Rev. Kincof, the new U. B. preacher for this circuit, will preach at Swanton at 10½ A. M. Sunday, 29th inst.

Rev. Wm. Hipkins, of Oakland, will preach in Anderson Chapel next Sunday evening, 22nd inst., at 8 o'clock.

We hear that Mr. R. J. West has just received a large bill for black and yellow pine which will keep him sawing all summer.

HOOSIER.

A Big Demonstration at Parkersburg.

The Merchants and Manufacturers Association of Parkersburg have made arrangements for an imposing street pageant on Thursday Evening, May 3rd, consisting of moving tableaux and scenic display, illuminated by electric and calcium lights, illustrating the progress and manufactures of the city. Some forty floats have already been secured, and over one thousand men are expected to be in line.

To accommodate those desiring to witness the Demonstration, the B. & O. R. R. Co. will sell excursion tickets to Parkersburg and return at one fare for the round trip, from all Ticket stations west of and including Keyser, and intermediate stations between Benwood, Morgantown and Grafton.

The tickets will be sold for all trains on Wednesday and Thursday, May 2d and 3d, and good for return trip until Friday, May 4th, inclusive.

To pay this amount it was ascertained that the taxable property of the county amounted to $3,930,631.00, which at $1.10 on each hundred dollars, the County taxation will make the above amount of $43,302.94; deducting $155,-667.00 for corporations paying the State tax direct to the State Treasurer, leaves the basis for State tax $3,780,964, which is fixed at 17¾c. on each $100.00, making the State tax $6,711.21, which, added to the County, makes for county and State purposes $50,014.15.

CASTLE BUILDING.

"What are you building darling?"
I asked of my girlie fair,
As she quietly sat on the hearth-rug,
Piling her blocks with care,
And the ruddy glow of the fire light
Danced on her golden hair.

"I am building a castle, mother,"
My little maid replied—
"And these are the walls around it,
And head is a gateway wide,
And this is a funny stairway
To climb up by the side."

The busy, flitting fingers
Went on with her pretty play,
And the castle's walls were rising
In the fading winter day—
When a sudden, luckless motion,
And all in ruin lay!

Ah, merry little builder,
The years with stealthy feet,
May bring full many a vision,
Of castles rare and sweet—
To end like your baby-pastimes
In ruin sad and fleet.

You laugh o'er the toy walls fallen;
So sunshine follows rain,
And we may smile, looking backward
At ruined shrine and fane—
While the heart hath shattered temples
It may not build again.

—Lucy R. Fleming, in Christian at Work.

A SUCCESSFUL FAILURE.

How I Would Teach a Boy to be a True Bayard.

Mamma never used to act like that, till Alice was engaged. It makes all the difference in the world when you have a sister who assumes the "going to be married" dignity, and gets private letters that she goes off into a corner to read, and wears a ring with a real diamond in.

And Alice was engaged to a Toptree, and they were such an ancient family that I got very tired of their genealogical tree, besides feeling very small, and of no account, after Fenwick "Treetop," as I often called him, had condescended to come into the family, for Alice looked down on Dorothy and I from that pinnacle.

My name is plain Mary, and nothing else. Mamma often told me that she nearly called me "Rose Mary"—and that would have been pleasant, for in the language of flowers it means "remembrance."

When Jack Turpin went off to sea—as ship surgeon—she bowed him out of the front door herself, and didn't give him a chance to say good-bye to me, only she couldn't see, as I did, the pleading look in his eyes that said, "be true to me." I knew, though not a word was spoken. But papa shook hands warmly and said, "Give us the light of your countenance again, John," and I thought it perfectly sweet of the white-haired old darling. But then papa isn't a "mother with marriageable girls," so he can say things.

It was that set mamma so much against Phil Rowlock, and there comes my grievance. He was talking to the fair Ethel Winman one evening, and when speaking of a mutual acquaintance, chanced to say: "Of course she encourages all the young men to the house, for she has marriageable girls." It wasn't anybody we knew, but I saw mamma freeze up at once and knew he had offended her. For she did not want us to marry, and says it is a libel men and boys start nowadays that if you ask a male creature to your home you are yearning to take him to your heart—and half the time they are not able to support themselves, much less a wife. For boys, now-a-days, she says, are talking about the other sex as if they were grandfathers, and had experience. I know they do talk and act foolish, and when brother Will is talking about my extravagant dress, I do a sharp little sum in arithmetic, and find that while I am satisfied with a ten-cent muslin in summer, they wear dollar-a-yard tweed, and more jewelry than is good taste for a girl.

So I was provoked at Phil, for he is a good sort of a boy, only he thinks it sounds big to sneer at girls. I often wonder that boys with sisters can do it. I shouldn't wonder at an orphan, if his mother died before he knew any thing about her, but boys with sisters should know better.

And I said something like that to the boys, and that it was a mark of a higher civilization to be able to show proper respect for our sex, and not treat them as an inferior, for that day was past. And then I told them a bit in the papers about a class being asked "Why Moses was a gentleman?" and one little boy said, "Because when the daughters of Jethro went to draw water the shepherds drove them away, but Moses helped them, and said to the shepherds: 'Ladies first, please.'"

And I hope Moses did it in a friendly sort of way, as one chum might to another, and not as if the girls were his inferiors in any way. Whittier knows what I mean, for he wrote:

"O, for a Knight like Bayard,
Without reproach or fear."

And I always thought he was one of that sort himself.

Well, after that, mamma was more severe than ever, and talked severely about ladies who were too free and easy with their girls, and Phil didn't come back, and Jack Turpin was at sea.

And then one day papa's second cousin, Randolph Massey, came to visit us. He was a model young man and polite to torture, always standing till we were seated, if we entered the room just for a moment—and ever ready to pick up a peanut shell if any one happened to drop one. We all thought his manners perfect, and I held him up as a model to the boys, he was really more polite than Jack.

But one night as we sat in the drawing-room singing, there was a sudden cry of fire from the kitchen; we didn't stop for Randolph to hold the door open and bow us out, I assure you. It was in the laundry, and a cold north wind made it dangerous for the house. Will was away, there was only papa, who had rheumatism, and Tom, who was dizzy with a raging headache, to go up on that roof and hold the hose. I went up the icy ladder, and was busily drenching the roof of the laundry, when I felt myself held up by strong arms—and turned resentfully to find "Jack." He took the hose from my hand, but took the hand, too, and held me, saying wildly: "I've got you at last, dear, and I mean to keep you, though it is as breezy up here as the steamer's deck."

And he held me fast and put out the fire at the same time, while mamma, who dare not mount, kept calling: "Who is up there with you Mary?"

And all this time Bayard the Knight, who was ever ready to anticipate our slightest wish, sat by the fire in the library and smoked cigars, for it was "too cold to venture out when there was so much help, you know."

And mamma didn't say a word, even when Jack helped me put on my cloak after our toilets were renovated, and boldly took me for a long walk. I suppose she thought fate too much for her, taking the trouble to land him on the roof to find me for once alone.

But Dorothy was angry and so was Alice. "To think of you, who always said you had a career, and would never marry, taking up with a boy like Jack," said my eldest sister, who gloried in Fenwick being a dozen years the senior, and then Dorothy began: "Yes, and after all the study you have done, to give yourself away like that," but when I looked into dear Jack's dark eyes I was amply contented.

I did want to study medicine, and had pictured to myself the good I would do in the world when I got through college and put up my shingle. I had studied many books, practiced on many cut fingers, and made bushels of poultices. And when I washed out the clothes after some patient's linseed poultices, I used to think that would not fall to my share when I became a doctor, for I noticed they were very fastidious about the actual work. Then I had helped mamma pull all the children through the measles and scarlet fever, taking both diseases myself after they were all better, and helping the doctor set Tom's leg and cure Harry's gunshot wound, when Dick mistook him for a partridge, all made me handier than most girls for hospital work. For I had to be married before Alice, and Jack and I went back to the sea—and all through my brain during a long siege of sea-sickness, ran the refrain:

"Sailing, sailing,
Over the stormy main,"

and then, as a deeper lurch would be given to the vessel, I would mentally repeat:

"Many a stormy wind shall blow,
Ere Jack comes home again."

I was with Jack now, and home was afar off—we were on our way to the British Honduras for a cargo of sugar.

And one day as I lay in my berth sea-sick and home-sick in spite of Jack, he came in looking very pale. I asked languidly what was the matter, as a big green wave dashed against the port-hole.

"Don't be alarmed, dear," he said, "but there is small-pox on board, and and I must leave you and keep you isolated, with the other three first cabin passengers."

And then I arose in my might and asked him what he took me for, to keep myself like a baby when he was in danger. And I got out of bed, and dressed, and took down all my medical books, and packing away all unnecessary articles, told him I was ready for any thing. And I put on an old blue silk, for I knew that goods resisted contagion best, and wound up my hair on the top of my head. "Where thou goest I will go, Jack," I said.

It is no use to tell what we did then, for the long days and nights—of death, and loathsome, slow recoveries. And as we reached that summer land, Jack told me he was in for it, and kissed me "good-bye" just before he lost consciousness. Over his handsome face came the fearful scourge, but I painted the sores faithfully, and held his hands when he would fain tear off the terrible scars. And when months after we left home, we were once more purified and on our way back to civilization, he asked me if I ever regretted giving up my career for his sake. "You are a successful failure, dearest," he said, and I acknowledged that I had been instrumental in God's hands of doing good and helping the afflicted. But I knew I should have been a doctor if I hadn't met Jack, for he was my only, only love, and I was willing to give him the first place in my coveted career, as well as in my affections, to help him and those he wished to cure, to be his in sickness and health. But then I did not want to be thought his inferior, and when we reached home and the boys called me a "little brick," and Alice Toptree gave me a warm welcome, and Dorothy told me she was engaged to Phil, I just walked up to mamma and said: "What a relief it must be to your troubled soul, mother dear, that you can not much longer be accused of being 'a mother with marriageable daughters.'"

And when Jack calls me his "blessed successful failure," I often think, though I do not confess it, that if I ever have to teach a boy how to be a true Bayard, I will not begin by teaching him dancing attendance on the weaker sex, but will teach him in plain English the meaning of the motto: "Honi soit qui mal y pense"—Evil to him who evil thinks.—Annie J. Jack, in Women's Magazine.

ECCENTRIC VON BULOW.

The Famous Musician Now Playing the Part of a Lady Killer.

Dr. Hans von Bulow, the famous German musician, is, I suppose, well remembered in America. While unquestionably a very great musician, he has made himself unenviably notorious by his mad outbursts of temper and other eccentricities. Indeed, for years past the public has come to expect, as a matter of course, some sensational scene whenever he appears before them. Latterly he has been playing the part of a lady-killer. Though his head is bald and his face wrinkled with age, he ogles and smirks at every pretty woman in the audience, blows kisses from his finger-tips, and whenever he speaks in public fails not to declare, with his hand on his heart, that all the inspiration of his playing comes from the love-litten eyes of the objects of his adoration. Such conduct does not increase one's admiration of him. But there was an incident of another kind at Berlin the other evening which has won for him great praise, and which makes the public forget every fault of which he has ever been guilty. It was at one of the great Philharmonic concerts. There was an unusually large and brilliant audience, including several royal personages. The most attractive feature of the programme was the solo violin playing of a young lady known as a rarely gifted artist. The early part of the programme was executed, but when it came for the violinist to appear the announcement was made that she had been suddenly taken ill and could not appear. As half the audience had come for the express purpose of hearing her, the disappointment was great. A murmur of regret and almost of anger ran through the house. Then an elderly gentleman, who had been sitting unnoticed in a parquet seat, arose and made his way towards the stage. At first he was not recognized, and every one looked to see what he was about. Then some one exclaimed, "Why, its Von Bulow!" and the entire audience burst into applause, though without knowing why. No one had any idea what he was going to do. Most of them expected that he would make a violent scene of some sort. But he strode on towards the stage, waving one hand above his head and blowing kisses to the ladies from the other. Reaching the stage he looked deprecatingly downward at his clothes. He was not in evening costume, but wore a short roundabout sack coat or jacket. He lifted the short skirts of this with his hands, shrugged his shoulders deprecatingly, and then, without a word, sat down at the piano. The audience was quiet. The musicians in the orchestra laid down their instruments. Then he began. The piece chosen was a great concerta of Beethoven. For three-quarters of an hour he played as one inspired. It was remarked that no one ever heard him play so well before. Some declared that neither Liszt nor Rubinstein had ever surpassed it. Certainly, it more than atoned for the absence of the violinist. The great concerta ended, he rose and hurried unceremoniously from the stage back to his seat in the parquet, while the house literally trembled with applause. He sat down, and looked about as though expecting the orchestra to go on with the remainder of the programme. But, no. The conductor rose, looked about, and exclaimed: "After the master has spoken what more is there to be said?" And the concert was ended.—Paris Letter.

AESTHETIC DOMESTICS.

Incidents Proving the Existence of Class Prejudices in this Country.

There is on the Back Bay a certain physician, living in rather simple style for that aristocratic section, whose family has been served in a domestic capacity, as the reporters would say, by an excellent Irishwoman of mature years, who had done similar service in the "old country," before she came to this. Not long ago the physician's wife was informed, somewhat timidly, by Margaret, that she, Margaret, had been offered a dollar a week more wages than she was getting, to enter the family of a rich merchant down the street.

"Well, Margaret," said the doctor's wife, "that is more than I can afford to pay."

"Yes, mem."

"Then you will leave us, I suppose?"

"O, not at all, mem!"

"Why not? Why don't you go where you can get the most wages, Margaret?"

"Sure, mem, I niver was rejuced to the nicissity of livin' in a tradesman's family in the ould counthry, and I'll not begin it in this, mem!"

This incident proves that class prejudices really do exist in this country. The listener has in mind another case, where a stalwart native girl, of Irish parentage, having left the very modest household of a poor journalist to take service in the pretentious mansion of a rich harness-maker, returned after a couple of months and requested reemployment at her old wages.

"Why, what makes you want to come back to our poor house, Katy?" she was asked.

"O, they're not 'swell,' like you!" she exclaimed.

The favored people in this transaction thought that Katy's was the queerest definition of the word "swell" that they had ever heard. But evidently the girl's æsthetic sensibilities had missed something at the harness-maker's sumptuous abode.—Boston Transcript.

WRITING A SERMON.

A Distinguished Chicago Clergyman Tells How He Does It.

You have requested me to tell you how I make my sermons. I hardly know what to answer, as, in my judgment, nearly all preachers prepare substantially in the same way. How do painters mix their colors? How do brickmakers make their bricks? How do wall builders build their walls; or shipwrights their vessels? In all these cases there are accepted principles on which these artisans proceed, and the same is true of sermon manufacturing. If you are anxious to find out Rubens' secret of coloring, or Beecher's art of illuminating an idea, or the charm that hangs over the composition of various men, you will never be gratified; for that is something they themselves can not explain, even if they try. What the public would really like to know of the elaborations of genius can not be imparted, and what remains may be learned in any book on homiletics, with simply the uninteresting addenda as to whether certain mortals write or do not write, or whether they write only notes, or in full. These details are pitiably indifferent. But as you wish them in my case, who have no secret of genius to trouble me or others, I comply with your desire.

Some sermons are born; others, like Topsy, grow. Just as the poet has an inspiration and writes, so at times a thought comes to the preacher, and easily, almost without effort, it shapes itself on paper. But other discourses are painfully elaborated. They have to be carefully planned, sketched, revised and re-revised before the desired result is reached. My custom has been to read the Bible regularly and studiously, and to note any text that impresses me, appending such ideas as it may have given rise to; and in some instances that is all the preparation given to the sermon. The text has taken hold of me, roused my entire spiritual and mental being, has shaped itself, and appropriate words generally are found when the hour comes for delivery. These, however, are exceptional cases. Usually the marked passage in the Bible remains for future use; but, by the daily study of the book, subjects for the pulpit are kept on hand in abundance. Having text and theme, I then, as a rule, pencil a rough outline, jotting down ideas and illustrations. After the plan is drawn up, if there is need for the consultation of authorities, I perform that part of my task.

As I read what I have just put on paper, I am reminded of a story I heard of a celebrated and successful Indian captain. He was asked what plan he adopted when fighting the red-skins. He replied: "I have a very excellent one always, and always mean to follow it, but the red-skins disconcert it, and I have just to let the boys loose on them, with the advice not to miss when they fire." So it is with myself. I have an exalted idea of the way in which a sermon should be prepared, and I intend always to do my best in that line; but circumstances are changing constantly; time can not always be found for close study, and one's battle must be decided on the inspiration of the moment. My rule is to move like the old captain, and if I can only succeed in hitting somebody or something I am happy, even though critics may be shocked, and the old rifle recoil a little more violently than is pleasant.

In conclusion, permit me to add that for effective pulpit work a rested brain is the best of all immediate preparations. Had I to choose between a manuscript with a weary head on my shoulders, and a fresh head—not a new one, of course—and no manuscript, I would select the head. This pre-supposes education, experience and the ability to command one's resources in public. Given these general qualifications, and I contend the speaker will find quiet and repose an excellent library and desk for what is before him. But beginners ought not to presume. They ought to learn from this fact not to neglect needful rest for mind and body; but, at the same time, they must not forego careful discipline of thought, due reflection, and conscientious committing of their ideas to paper.—Dr. G. C. Lorimer, in Writer.

MAKING HER SHINE.

A Colored Mammy's Advice to an Inexperienced Daughter.

Negro Woman (to her daughter)—How long 'fo' dat nigger gwine ter mair you?

Daughter—Doan nome. 'Lowed he gwineter mair me putty soon.

Mother—Gwine come ter see yer ter-day, ain' he?

Daughter—Yessum, an' I's settin' yere now waitin' fur him.

Mother—Whut, waitin' fur him, lookin' ez ashy ez you is? Take down dat bacon rin' up dar an' grease dat face o' yo'n. W'y, ain't you got no better sense den ter look dat ashy? Take down dat skin up dar, I tell you, an' grease yo'se'f. It do 'pear dat de young ladies dese days hab dun los' all de knack. W'y, w'en I wuz er gal I'd dun had dat fool man maird an' would er dun furgot it by dis time. Run dat rin' ober yo' face. Harder, ef you wanter make it shine. Rub it up an' down once mo'. Now, dat's sorter like it. Now, you doan look like er black cat dat's been wallerin' in de fire-place. Take dat lump o' meat off'n de side yo' nose. Now, you look sorter 'spectable. Go on, not knowin' how ter fix yo'se'f up, an' you neber will get maird. Better take de 'vice o' yo' ole mammy dat hab went fru de mill, I tell you.—Arkansaw Traveler.

TEMPERANCE READING.

A DRUNKARD'S CHILD.

How these scars came, did you ask?
Tender are your tones and mild—
Can it be you do not know
That I am a drunkard's child?

Long ago one dreadful night,
He who claims a father's place,
Mad with rum's malignant power,
Threw a glass at mother's face.

But it missed its deadly aim—
I was sleeping on her breast.
Seeing these unsightly scars,
Need I tell you all the rest?

Deep within the vale I strayed,
While they watched with bated breath,
Then with lingering steps I came Back to life far worse than death.

Better far that I had died,
Than this lonely, bitter life,
I can never hope for love,
Never be a cherished wife.

Even little children turn
From my face in fear and dread;
Do you wonder I am sad,
Often longing to be dead?

O, these frightful, hideous scars
Close all doors to love's domain!
Blighted life, and broken heart—
I can never smile again!

Now my story you have heard,
Do you wonder that I hate
E'en the very name of rum
And all that can intoxicate?

FINANCIAL RUIN.

The Most Expensive of All Extravagant Habits—Why the Drinking Man Can Not Succeed Financially—Nine Out of Ten Business Failures Caused by Rum.

Rum costs. The man who pays a dime for a drink thinks lightly of it, but when he takes twenty drinks a day he has paid two dollars for rum alone, which, multiplied by 365, gives the neat sum of $730 per year! Now, while there are many drinkers who as yet do not indulge to the extent of a score of "nips" a day, there are also a large number who exceed that—who go as high as thirty or forty daily. Then, too, it is not necessary that a man shall himself drink the entire twenty, or the whole forty, as the case may be. Your drinking man is generally a "jolly fellow," at least while the fumes of rum are in his brain; and he is constantly "treating" as well as being "treated." He drops into a saloon to get a "sustainer," and finds a half-dozen men with whom he has a drinking acquaintance. "What will you take?" springs to his lips instinctively, and he pays for seven drinks. And this experience may be repeated a half-dozen times each day. The drinking man of convivial habits always pays more for rum than he drinks himself, because there are always a lot of hangers-on about saloons, who are generally out of money, but who will drink with any body who will stand the expense, and never return the compliment.

The actual cash outlay of the rum habit is so great that only a millionaire can stand the financial strain for any length of time. The man of moderate means ruins himself, in a money sense, in the indulgence of the appetite for that which also destroys him physically and mentally. But what is actually expended by him for his own drink is by no means all. The man full of rum is careless with his cash, reckless of his expenditures, and totally unfit to transact business of any kind which requires a clear head and a cool brain. The exhilaration consequent upon his potations makes him feel as though he is made of money, and he pays it out with a recklessness that certainly must bring regret to his sober moments. He does it with the most extravagant things, and it goes, he knows not where. Under the reckless promptings of the rum devil, the man flush of money is pretty sure to do one or two things—either visit a gambling-room and waste his money, or seek the gilded haunts of vice and pour it out in the lap of her whose footsteps, according to Solomon, "take hold on hell."

It may be set down as a fact that the drinking man can never accumulate money, unless he is the fortunate possessor of a bonanza—a business that is, as to its profits, beyond any consideration of expenditure, no matter how reckless. Rum has burned a hole in his pocket which leaks faster than any ordinary business or money-making avocation will replenish it. Bankruptcy and financial ruin are inevitable. The drinking man is at a disadvantage in his business, because the money which should be used to push trade, or tide over dull times, or extend his operations into new lines or new territory, is spent for rum, and in the excesses which follow in the trail of that demon. He becomes more and more involved, and tries retrenchment in all ways but the one which is his ruin. He will lop off all needless expenditure save that for rum and its attendant vices. But they are like the horse-leech's daughters; they cry "Give, give," until the man becomes desperate; he who was reckless incidentally now becomes reckless habitually. The crash of financial ruin comes, and his course from that time is a direct plunge into habitual drunkenness, poverty and finally death.

Reader, did you ever consider the grim fact—for fact it is—that ninety per cent. of the men engaged in legitimate lines of trade in this country fail sooner or later? And did you ever trace this back to its cause? The pathway of trade is strewn with wrecks, and nine out of ten of them was caused by rum. It should be plain to all that, in these days of fierce competition in trade, the legitimate profits in any line of business are too small to stand the drain on the pocket imposed by the rum habit. Apparently the cheapest of all dissipations, drinking is the most costly. All other extravagances have a limit; but the thirst for rum is limitless. It is like the ocean, which receives all the rivers of the world, yet is never any fuller. The more you drink the more you must, and there can be but one end to both the drinker's money and his physical endurance. Rum not only costs frightfully in money, but it takes away the power to make money. It is as dangerous to a man's finances as it is to his body, his mind and his soul.

But though it is a fact that ninety per cent. of our business men fail, sooner or later, the influence of rum in causing the failure of at least nine out of every ten is not so clearly seen. We do not mean to say that these all fail because they drink up the money that should be used in business. While many do this, there are many others who do not, and yet whose downfall is just as surely the result of rum as if they had done so. To do a successful business in these rushing days, when every avenue of trade is the arena of keen competition, requires brains. It will not do that a man shall have business sagacity, that he shall be sharp in bargaining and quick-witted to avail himself of every opening for profit. He must not only be all these, but he must remain so; and he must give all his attention to his business. Now he can not do these these things and daily with rum. With many men, a single glass of the infernal stuff benumbs the brain; and the man in this condition, with his mental faculties clouded with the fumes of rum, can never hope to succeed in the struggle with a competitor of equal natural ability who never touches rum, and so keeps his head clear, his wits keen, and has all his faculties on the alert. He who drinks will surely fall behind, through his dulled wits. His trade deserts him, he has lost the ability he once possessed through soaking his brain in rum, and he goes to the wall. The cause is stated as "bad investments," "too great competition," "bad debts," or something similar. But these are the result of drink, and rum is really the cause of his failure.

The business man who begins to drink might just as well close up his establishment at once, if he intends to continue the unequal effort to cope with rum and with his business rivals at the same time. There is no line of safety but in the entire abandonment of rum. He may keep his head above water for a few years, but the inevitable end will as surely come. Viewing these facts, is there not pertinency in the claim that it is the highest duty of man to save his brother man from himself? This insidious devil of rum, when he once gets his claws fastened upon a victim, never loosens his hold till he has him at the mouth of the pit of hell.—Toledo Blade.

SOUND LOGIC.

The Growth of Temperance—To Drink Is to Be Weak—The Voice of Public Opinion.

But whatever opinions we may hold as to the best means of promoting sobriety, there is no question that the evil of intemperance in this country was much greater in the early part of the century than at present; and the wave continues to subside. Alison, the historian, has shown that drunkenness is essentially the vice of savages and barbarians; and it is easy to observe in a cultivated people that those who are the least civilized suffer most injury from indulgence in drink. Education, in opening up new sources of pleasure and lending diversity to the interests which rob life of its wearying monotony, helps to liberate us from the sway of appetite, and thus makes the attraction of animal indulgence less irresistible. Then the motives to labor, which are greater here than elsewhere, are, at the same time, reasons for sobriety. In no other society are the weak pushed so pitilessly to the wall, do the strong so uniformly succeed; and drink, unless it be pure, which it rarely is, and unless it be used with moderation, which is not to be hoped for, weakens the body, dulls the mind and deadens the moral sense. Hence, to drink is to be weak, is to have in the race for life an unsteady step, a clouded intellect and an infirm purpose; and in the growing light of this truth men see more and more plainly that indulgence of this kind is not only wrong but foolish. Hence the voice of public opinion, through whatever organ it utters itself, becomes more and more emphatic in denouncing intemperance. The railway president knows that a glass of whisky may wreck a train, the ship-owner that it may sink a ship, the bank director that it may rob his vault, the clergyman perceives that the saloon hurts the church, the statesman that it leads to law-breaking, and the physician that it undermines health, and even those who, feeling most keenly the weight and weariness of modern life, would sacrifice almost any thing to bring back the careless light-heartedness of the early pagan Greeks, are driven to confess that Bacchus can not be a helpful god for us.—J. L. Spalding, in Forum.

If all the employes in every brewery and distillery in the country were to go out on a big strike, and stay out until there was no more whisky or beer left in the land, many of the police and work-house and jail officials would have to go out, too, as their services would be no longer required.—Chicago Journal.

The W. C. T. U. of the Hawaiian Islands have issued an appeal to the Representatives of the Legislative Assembly, petitioning that body to consider the subject of the prohibition of the manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquors in the kingdom.

FOR OUR YOUNG FOLKS.

HOPE'S FORT.

The Bounty That Was Laid Up for Her Wedding Dower.

"Be careful, Hope, and don't sing, dear; it is a dangerful road, whereon you might draw evil notice."

"Yes, mother, I'll keep my mouth just so," and the little maid pressed her lips firmly together.

"Give yourself breathing space," said the mother, smiling; and, looking into her darling's bag, to see if her luncheon was all right, she kissed her again, and watched her trip down the road. As Hope turned out of the lane she looked back, kissing her hand in farewell, and Mrs. Raymond went slowly into the house. "I don't know why it is," she murmured, "but my heart misgives me sadly. I am sore tempted to call Hope back. But foolish, sinful woman," she added, resolutely, "you have had better training than to mistrust the Lord's providence."

She set about her work, for in the early colonial days the farmer's wife afforded a very good illustration of perpetual motion. This was especially true of New-London, or Pequett, where the rocky, sterile soil demanded the constant care of husbands and wives.

The farm of Oliver Raymond was four miles from town, but it was not uncommon for the children to come even farther than this to get the benefit of the school which the colonists of Pequett had succeeded in establishing with much expense. For some time Hope Raymond ran along in strict obedience to her mother's injunction, then she paused to listen to a bird's song, or gather a flower. The road, which was newly opened, ran through the heart of the forest, and wound out into a long stretch, bordered on each side by perpendicular cliffs and dense growth of bushes, and half-way between the town and farm was a great mass of granite, fully fifty feet high.

It was a beautiful September morning, the trees, through their thick, green garb, showed here and there a faint dash of golden-scarlet; the chipmunk and squirrel darted up and down the gray trunks, or swung from branch to branch; the sober brown cedars tried to look bright with dingy red touches; the wild grape vines trailed along the ground, weighted with luscious fruit; the stately goldenrod bent its head in the gentle breeze. A wiser head than our eleven-year-old Hope might have yielded to Nature's enticing charm. She paused to pick a ripening grape, or add to her little bouquet. And as she did, her voice rang out in some childish ditty so clear and sweet that the feathered warblers stopped to listen to their new rival. But something else heard the child, and crept cautiously through the undergrowth.

"Just another, and what a pretty nosegay I'll have for the teacher," said Hope, as she bent over a flower. She had gained the curve in the road now, and yielding to a sudden impulse, turned and looked back. For a moment she stood paralyzed with fear; for down the road, gaining upon her with every lope of its long, gaunt body, was one of the terrible gray wolves of Pequett. Hope thought of every tale told of their ferocity, and with a terrified scream darted forward, but there was no tree, no refuge at hand. Oh, if she could only reach the great rock! The little feet barely touched the ground. But the wolf gained at every bound!

Hope was almost at the rock; she gained it, and with trembling fingers, tried to climb up the notches, but, frightened and exhausted, slipped back. For a second she lay motionless; her pursuer was not fifty yards distant, and at every bound gave a sharp cry which was answered by yells from the forest. Again Hope essayed to climb up the ledge. The notches had been made by the hunters of the colony, who often left signals for one another upon the flat surface of the rock, but they had been made for men, and as the child tried to reach them, she slipped again and again, and almost fell to the ground. But at last she gained a foothold; up, up, oh, she was at the very edge—another effort and she was safe on the summit!

Just in time. Four or five wolves were gathered below, and, snarling and snapping, endeavored to leap up. Hope's heart almost stopped beating, and for a moment every thing seemed to go round and round, as she watched with bated breath the infuriated beasts below. But Hope Raymond came of a sturdy Puritan stock, and something of stern courage filled the childish heart. "Now, take that!" she said, exerting all her strength to roll a huge fragment of rock upon them. It struck and stunned one, and without giving it a chance to rise, its famished companions sprang upon it, rending it limb from limb. Hope shrank back, appalled, then resolutely closing her eyes, hurled down every rock that her strength could master, but without avail. The long hours wore on until her head whirled, and the number of wolves was every little while increased. She looked despairingly up and down the road. No one. The farmers were, like her own father, all busy in the fields. Nothing but echo answered her cries. The blistering noon came, and the afternoon shadows were creeping up. Faint with hunger, Hope looked at her besiegers till her terrified fancy invested them with a thousand added terrors, and scream after scream pealed from the parched lips.

"Cheer up, Hope, take heart!" suddenly shouted a voice, and with a thrill of joy, Hope leaped to her feet to see Nehemiah Smith, the Nimrod of the colony, come crashing through the bushes, followed by three sturdy companions. Bang! whiz! down went four wolves. Hope closed her eyes, and dared not open them till Nehemiah's strong voice cried: "Now, Hope, come along down!"

Slowly Hope crept down and into the outstretched hands. "Oh, Miah," she shuddered, "let us go away."

"Not so fast," said the young man, reassuringly. "We are going to take their heads, and I tell you what, Hope, you shall have half the bounty. Sixteen shillings apiece for twenty wolves!"

"Me, Miah? I didn't kill them."

"No, but if it hadn't been for you, they wouldn't be here. You behaved with right smart spunk, Hope."

Great was the astonishment when Hope and her companions marched into Pequett with their booty, and many a bronzed cheek paled, and mothers clasped their babes closer when they heard her story.

"It ought never to be forgotten," said one, "and let the bounty be laid up for her wedding dower."

It was never forgotten, and Hope Raymond's great grandchild used to point out to strangers the rock called Hope Raymond's Fort.—C. M. Holloway, in N. Y. Examiner.

MAKING UP.

Why May Blossom Wouldn't Ever Speak to Pink Rose Again, and Why She Did.

"I shan't go over to her house never any more," said May Blossom, solemnly. "May be I shan't speak to her another single time ever."

She meant that she never would go to see Pink Rose again, nor speak to her—though that was "may be."

She had gone over to visit Pink Rose that very afternoon, with her doll Rosalinda; and here she was home again, much sooner than mamma had any reason to expect her, with a frowning, tearful little face and pouting lips, and doll Rosalinda upside-down in her arms.

Mamma was puzzled.

"Why, what is the trouble, dear?" she asked.

May began to wink very fast; but, in spite of all she could do, the tears filled her eyes and ran over, and dropped down on Rosalinda.

"O, mamma, she—she's such a bad, mean, mean girl, mamma! I can't tell!"

But she did tell pretty soon, when she was in mamma's lap, with mamma's arms around her, and mamma's kisses on her flushed face, all stained as it was with tears. And it was a doleful little story she told.

"We were having the best time you could think of, mamma, playing tea, and I took the last piece of cake, and Pink went to get some more; and I heard her tell that I was a pig, mamma, and ate every thing, and that's what I was so fat about. So, of course, I couldn't help crying and feeling just as miser'ble, and I put on my things right that minute, before she got back, and took Rosalinda and came home. O mamma, I know my heart is—cracked anyway, mamma!"

Wasn't it dreadful? Though, to be sure, mamma couldn't help smiling a little; but she thought there must be some mistake.

"Are you sure you heard just right, dear?" she asked May.

"Yes'm," answered May, "I know I did, mamma. And I sha'n't ever—"

Just at that minute the door came open, letting in a rush of cold air and half-a-dozen snow-flakes and a little girl in a white cloak and cap, with very red cheeks and very bright eyes. It was surely Pink Rose, looking frightened and bewildered enough.

May wouldn't speak; she hid her face and began to cry.

Poor little Pink! she did't know what to make of it all. Her lips trembled, and when she tried to say something she choked up; and then she began to cry, too, as hard as she could cry.

"What made her go home without telling me?" she sobbed; "what made her now?"

Then mamma knew it was all a mistake, though, of course, she couldn't quite understand how it could be; and she told Pink the story, just as May had told it to her.

"That is why she came home," said she. "Can you explain about it, dear?"

Pink was already laughing through her tears—laughing as hard as she had cried.

May lifted her face. "You needn't laugh," she said, indignantly. "You did call me a pig—you bad, bad girl!"

"No, I didn't," cried Pink. "Oh dear me! I didn't. It was my white dove, and Susan was throwing out some crumbs before she'd get me the cake, and Clover was gobbling the crumbs faster 'n all the rest of the doves, and I said she was a pig and that it made her fat eating such a lot. Oh dear! It wasn't you, Mamie; it was Clover."

May slid out of her mother's lap, and put her finger in her mouth.

"I'm orfle sorry," said she, "and I wish I didn't come home."

"Why can't you come back again?" asked Pink.

"I guess I can," said May. "Can't I, mamma?"

"Yes," said mamma, smiling, "you can stay an hour."

So May went back to finish out her visit, with Pink, and Doll Rosalinda, this time right side up.—Youth's Companion.

ABOUT THE MOON.

Facts Concerning Our Nearest Neighbor in the Solar System.

A few weeks ago an important address was given in London by Sir Robert Ball, the Astronomer Royal of Ireland, about the moon. In its course, he made known the most recent conclusions of astronomers as to the moon's composition, its climatic condition and the probability of its being inhabited.

As our nearest neighbor in the solar system, the moon must always be an object of peculiar interest and of ardent investigation to the dwellers upon the earth. So much nearer is it than either of the planets, that we can learn more about it, and observe its physical features more minutely. We know that that the moon's diameter is only one-fourth of that of our globe; that it is only two hundred and forty thousand miles distant from us; that, if the moon should disappear from its orbit as our satellite, a most important physical change on the earth, the cessation of tides, would take place; and that in bulk, the moon is eighty times less heavy than the earth. We can discern, through powerful telescopes, the general formation of that half of the moon's surface which is turned toward us. We are told that there are visible two craters of volcanoes sixty miles [illegible] another, ten thousand feet deep; that one mighty peak rises to a height of twenty-four thousand feet; and that a vast basin is visible, seventeen thousand feet deep, and over fifty miles wide.

It has long been a warmly debated question among astronomers whether it is possible that the moon could support vegetation and animal and human life. But a general agreement has now been reached by them, that the moon is much older than the earth; that it is "as dead as a door nail," that it has neither atmosphere, air or water; that, in short, it is "nothing else but a ball of extinct volcanic matter, lighted only by the rays of the distant sun." No fires ever issue from the great volcanoes which are apparent on its surface; the huge, hollowed-out craters emit no smoke. A vast and eternal silence reigns through all the dreary, treeless, lifeless expanse.

The moon, indeed, is apparently abandoned to death, nourishing no inhabitants, producing nothing resembling trees, flowers, or beautiful things of any kind—useless, in short, except as a mass of extinct volcanic rubbish, which drags the sea into tides, and reflects the sunbeams into moonlight; but whirls, like a corpse in cerements of silver-cloth and black velvet, round and round the earth."

The astronomers have carefully constructed a geography of the moon, and have mapped out its region, and given names to its various features. For instance, they have called some of the mountains of the moon, "Copernicus," "Posidonius," "Clavius," after earthly philosophers; others, they have christened by the names of the famous peaks of the earth; and the dreary valleys and waterless bays and lakes have received fanciful but inapposite names, such as "the Bays of Clouds," the "Lake of Nectar" and the "Gulf of Rainbows."

It is doubtful, according to Sir Robert Ball, if any increase of the magnifying powers of telescopes will add any further definite knowledge to that which has already been acquired about the moon. He believes that, when the moon is brought by greater lenses to within fifty (instead of, as now, two hundred and fifty) miles of the earth, as it probably will be in the near future, the result of this improved observation will be mainly valuable as confirming the conclusions already arrived at.—Youth's Companion.

ABOUT CROCUSES.

Their Intimate Connection with the Saffron of Commerce.

None of our yellow crocuses are of European origin; they come to us from the East, and appear to be comparatively recent importations. "Cloth of Gold," for instance, is a native of Turkey and the Crimea, while the original home of the large yellow crocus is Asia Minor. Many other kinds have no doubt been produced by the ingenuity of the Dutch gardeners, always skillful in their treatment of bulbs. The chief interest of the crocus lies, however, in the fact of its connection with the saffron of commerce. Twice in the course of history this latter drug has enjoyed a popularity which seems strange to us—once under the Greeks and Romans and again in Europe during the fifteenth and sixteenth centuries. Saffron itself is nothing more than the dried stigmas of a certain purple crocus which blossoms in the autumn. It seems originally to have been brought from the East. Its name in any case is Eastern, being, it is said, merely a change of the Arabic word zahfaran. The Greeks and the Romans, it is true, knew nothing of this name, but always used the term crocus for saffron. The undoubted fact, however, of its having, on its reappearance in Europe, been imported from the East, confirms the tradition or notion of its Oriental origin. It was, strangely enough, the scent which formed its chief attraction for the ancients. They regarded it as the most delicious of perfumes, and endeavored to introduce it on every possible occasion. The floors of their halls and mansions, as also of their theaters, were strewed with it, and Pliny in one place recommends that the saffron should be bruised, in order the better to diffuse its fragrance. Its flavor was also greatly appreciated, and Beckmann says that "in the oldest work on cookery which has been handed down to us, and which is ascribed to Apicius, it appears that saffron was as much employed in seasoning dishes as for a perfume."—Chamber's Journal.

A MELANCHOLY JOURNEY.

Extraordinary Narrative of a Passenger On an Erie Train.

Among the passengers on an Erie railway express train from the West was a middle-aged man who had in his charge a little golden-haired girl, three or four years old, whose piquant ways and bright sayings made her a general favorite. A gentleman sitting in the next seat in front of the passenger with the child remarked to her guardian that the longest and most tedious journey would be made cheery by such a traveling companion as his.

"Yes," replied the passenger, "but notwithstanding the sunshine of her presence, she is a constant reminder to me of one of the most melancholy journeys I ever undertook. Her mother was my only sister, who lived in Crawford County, Pennsylvania. I had not seen her for over fifteen years, and, in fact, we had both neglected our correspondence with each other, and I had not heard from her in over a year. In the meantime I had changed my address in New York, where I live, and she of course did not know it. Last week I had business in Erie, and I made up my mind to take advantage of the trip and make my sister a visit, and also visit another relative in Tioga County, whom I had not seen in many years. Sunday a week ago I stopped off at Meadville and drove to the little farming village where Mrs. Cole lived, and was directed to the house, but noticed that the man looked at me in a very strange manner. I drove up to the house, and my knock was answered by my brother-in-law. He knew me and grasped my hand, but said not a word, being overcome by some great emotion. At last he said:

"'How did you hear of it?'

"'Of what, John?' I said. 'I have heard nothing. How is Emma?'

"'Emma is dead!' he replied.

"Emma was my sister. She had died on the Friday previous, and had been buried but an hour or two when I arrived at her house. This little one here was the only living child my sister had. My brother-in-law has large interests in Illinois, and, as his presence in that State is necessary at frequent intervals, he accepted my proposition to take his child into my own family. Fortunately she took a liking to me, and I brought her with me.

"On our way East we got off at Elmira, as I intended to make the visit to my Tioga County relative, although not with the feelings I had when I first looked forward to the visit. This was Sunday evening. There was no train to my destination until the next day. In the reading room of the hotel near the depot where I stopped I picked up a local newspaper. In looking over its pages I saw an item headed 'An Entire Family Killed.' I read it. It seems, according to the item, that on Friday of week before last a farmer near Athens, Pa., was amazed to see a team of runaway horses, which had evidently broken away from a wagon to which they had been hitched, dashing down the road toward his house, where they turned from the road and entered the farmer's yard. They were caught, and the farmer went back in the direction from which the runaways had come, to see what had happened to the person or persons to whom the team belonged. He had not gone far before he saw in the road the wreck of a spring wagon, which had been crushed by an immense hemlock tree which had fallen upon it as it was passing that spot. Beneath the trunk of the tree lay the dead bodies of a man, a woman apparently his wife, and one child. Held down by a branch of the tree were two other children, not dead, but unconscious. The former summoned help and the tree was removed and the three dead bodies and the unconscious children were taken to the farm house. The two children died a little later. The man's name, the paper said, was George Bakewell, of Tioga County, who, with his family, was visiting near Athens, and to which place he was driving when the hemlock tree, which was partly decayed, was blown down just as he was driving past. George Bakewell was the relative I was even then on my way to visit, and on inquiry I found that he and this George Bakewell, who had, with his entire family, been crushed out of existence in an instant, were one and the same. So you may well see," concluded the passenger, "that it has not been possible for even this little one's sunshine to brighten this melancholy journey of mine."—N. Y. Sun.

The Gray-Hair Puller.

Possibly the most unique method of earning a living known is that adopted by a big, rosy, twenty-year-old blonde, who finds engagements with women just lamenting their first gray hairs, to weed out, so to speak, those obnoxious reminders of advancing years. The gray-hair puller is gentle in her methods of treatment and makes periodic visits at intervals of a few weeks, spending from half an hour to two or three hours, letting down the hair, combing it out and spying for tell-tale silver threads. She carries an innocent-looking little reticule which contains various glycerine and rose-water preparations for a healing application when the work of torture has been done. It is not especially disagreeable work and it is said to pay.—N. Y. Mail and Express.

THE COW-BOY COSSACKS;

OR,

Following Fortune Through the Flames. A Story of the Great Wars of To-day.

When the Grand Duke Alexis, of Russia, visited the United States he was captivated by the wild life of the far western plains, and took a great fancy to the cow-boys, who reminded him of the famed Cossacks of his own country. There were three cow-boys of whom he became so fond that he invited them to visit him in Russia. One of them was Jacques Dardeville, from New Orleans; another was Robert Macy, from Nantucket, and the third was Rory O'Brien, who came from Dublin when a baby. They all had nicknames, Dardeville's being "Daredevil Jack," Macy's "Buckaro Bob," and O'Brien's "Little Bricks," from his small stature and gamy qualities in a row.

These cow-boys liked the Grand Duke so well that they resolved to accept his invitation, and as soon as they could get ready, they went to Russia, and hearing that Alexis was in Moscow, they hastened thither. Shakespeare's Macbeth was to be played at the theater in English on the evening of their arrival, and they went to see it.

General Skobeleff, the celebrated "White General," as he was called, who was the idol of the Russian army, was present, and Daredevil Jack, Buckaro Bob and Little Bricks happened to sit in the parquet near him and his friend General Krapotkin. Skobeleff, who had been told much by the Grand Duke of his cow-boy friends, surmised who they were.

GENERAL SKOBELEFF.

Skobeleff, having fired a bullet through a mirror at an aristocratic party, had been deprived of his command, and knew that he had got to do some daring deed at the beginning of the war with Turkey, then just coming on, to get himself reinstated in the royal favor. In order to succeed, he would need some comrades skilled in horsemanship, and of unflinching courage, and he at once thought that the American cow-boys would be just the men for him. He was about to speak to them, when a loud cry arose, and the scenery and stage were seen to be on fire. At once, from every quarter, arose the shrieks of women and the shouts of men.

Within fifty seconds the front of the parquet was absolutely empty, save for the three Americans and the two officers, Skobeleff and Krapotkin, who had retained their seats with imperturbable coolness.

Little Bricks said to Macy, in a quiet way:

"Reckon thar ain't much show for us, Buckaro, unless thar's a door under that stage." Then, as he glanced around at the demoralized crowd behind them, he added, with some wonder: "Well, I swar, ef thar ain't two real men at last."

He referred to the two officers, who now rose slowly from their seats and came towards the strangers.

Skobeleff was as cool as a cucumber, as he held out his hand to Little Bricks, and said, in excellent English, or rather shouted into his ear:

"You are a melodyets—a brave fellow! How came you here? What brought you to Russia, I mean?"

Little Bricks, grasping the hand extended as if it had been that of a comrade, yelled back his answer in the other's ear:

"Came to see the Grand Duke Alexis. Met him on the plains. We three helped him his first buffalo hunt. Asked us to call on him, if we ever came to Roosha. Got on a tear and came. Here we air. Know any thing about the Grand Duke, stranger?"

"The Grand Duke is at Sebastopol. You know he is in the navy, not the army. You will not be able to do any thing with him in this war, gentlemen. You had better come with me. Here is my card. If we get out of this fire alive, call at that hotel in the morning. Is that understood?"

Little Bricks nodded, and just at that moment Krapotkin touched Skobeleff on the arm, and pointed out that, under the stage, the door by which the orchestra went out and in, was wide open, and looked black, as if there was no fire, in that direction.

The gesture was sufficient, and Skobeleff touched the three cow-boys successively, and pointed them to the door.

Then Jacques Dardeville screamed into Skobeleff's ear:

"Go and find if it leads out anywhere, and we'll bring some girls out that way."

Skobeleff nodded assent, and darted down to the opening. In a few moments he came back to shout in his companion's ear:

"It leads into an open court. If there is no jam we can get out quite a number."

Then the five men left their place of safety, and advanced to the back of the shrieking, struggling mass of humanity, that was now urging around the foot of the balcony.

The fire on the stage had spread by the curtain, over the roof of the theater, and was already licking at the curtains of the boxes.

Skobeleff, surveying the scene with undiminished coolness, pointed to the great entrance door, which could still be seen through the smoke, and roared into Dardeville's ear:

"Blocked tight! Get them back!"

So saying, they began to pull at the terror-stricken ones that they saw running to and fro in the rear of the crowd, and pointed out, by gestures, the dark door under the stage; but by the time they had escorted about a score of ladies off in this way, the fire had crept so near the stage door that the next-comers shuddered and shrank back from the apparent danger. Skobeleff yelled in Macy's ear:

"We've saved all we can. Take another girl apiece and let us go while we can."

The Americans nodded silently, and each man looked about for a woman to save, when they heard a great cry behind them, which was followed by a crash. Looking round, they saw that a part of the roof had fallen in sparks on the crowd, and that all hopes of escape seemed to be cut off; but they heard Skobeleff say aloud, in English:

"Courage, my friends. If we get out of this, you are the boys I want to have with me." HIRAM P. TASKER, 11 6 tf Oakland, Md.

Lived at the Best Hotels.

I know a "man about town" here, says a Washington correspondent of the New York Tribune, who takes a great interest in public affairs, visits the capitol regular every day, is a charming talker, a welcome guest at the home of many Senators and Members of the House—in short, a "jolly good fellow," but one whose means of support have been something of a mystery to his most intimate companions. The other day he applied to a Senator, whose wealth is counted by the millions, for the loan of $500.

"I don't know that I shall ever be able to pay you," said Jones, frankly—I call him Jones because that is not his name—"but if I am ever able I will do so."

The Senator was a good deal surprised at this unusual exhibition of candor, and replied in the same manner. "As you are so frank," said he, "you cannot object to my imitating you. I would like to know how you live. It has long been a mystery to me, and if I give you the money I want you to gratify my curiosity. Now, don't be offended."

"Not in the least," replied Jones. "On the contrary you have a right to know. I have no income, as many people suppose, but simply live on my friends. I entertain them, do little services for them, and then draw upon them, as I have on you for my pay. I have never struck you before, and I hope I shall not be compelled to do so again: but just at present I am flat broke, and you happened to be the first man I met after receiving my board bill, which, of course, has to be paid, for I don't want to move."

The Senator's astonishment may better be imagined than described. Recovering his breath, he exclaimed:

"Look here, Jones, if you live on your friends, as you say, why do you always board at a first-class hotel?"

"That's easy enough to answer," replied Jones, without a moment's hesitation. "If I didn't board at a first-class hotel I wouldn't have any friends."

A Diplomatic Clergyman.

A good minister was talking to a class of young people who had become interested in religious matters through the influence of the Moody meetings. He was impressing upon them the idea that a man should carry his religion into his business.

"Don't keep your religion exclusively for Sunday. Pray to Him for success in business. I believe it is a right for a man to ask the Almighty to increase his business and make it prosper."

"But," said a young man present, "I am an undertaker, Would it be right for me to ask the Lord to give me a boom in business?"

The minister was nonpulsed for a moment, and the class evidently regarded the question as a poser. But the divine finally arose to the emergency and replied:

"While I don't think it would be right for you to ask the Lord to make deaths plentiful in order that your business may thrive, yet you could ask that in case of any deaths in the community the funerals might be thrown in your way."—Louisville Post.

Pearls of Thought.

Overwork is a waste of capital.

The secret of thrift is knowledge.

Be not anxious about the trouble which is not yet come.

Keep clear of the man who does not value his own character.

Rich people who are covetous are like the cypress tree; they may appear well, but are fruitless.

If women did not believe men any more than they did women, it would be lucky for the sex.

Help others wherever you can; you would yourself be grateful for a helpful hand in a moment of need.

Conviction is in itself a power. The man who is sure of what he says gives assurance to those who hear him.

Light as a gossamer is the circumstance which can bring enjoyment to the conscience which is not its own accuser.

"The greatest thing for a man to know," said Alexander the Great, "is that with which he is least acquainted—himself in person."

He who posesses a friend whom he can trust, one who is found faithful through storm and sunshine, has one of the rarest treasures which this world holds.

It may be that luck goes up and down the world calling on men and women, but the name has been spelled pluck on all of her cards that have come under our eye.

Uncle Mose, entering the house of Judge Pennybunker, was astonished on hearing a parrot exclaim: "Take off your hat!" He complied at once, ejaculating with chattering teeth: "'Scuse me, boss; I mistuck yo for a bird. I did, suah."

Uncontrollable Forces.

Every now and then we get a reminder of the existence of uncontrollable elements before which man is helpless, and against which no invention can ever secure safety.

We have disastrous tempests on the high seas.

We have destructive blizzards like those in Dakota.

We have occasional warnings of danger from the slumbering earthquake.

We have extraordinary snow storms which stop the wheels of traffic and interrupt our industries.

We have the lightning that threatens.

We have the times of baleful weather, and solar fires that are almost consuming.

We are as helpless in the presence of these elemental forces as were the men who lived when first the human race took up its parable.

And the men who live in the last days of the earth will be just as helpless.

But this fact need not prevent us from enjoying the halcyon years, with their varying seasons, during the whole course of which mankind have felt reasonably secure against the menacing agencies which they cannot control.—New York Sun.

"Do you have good drinking water here?" asked a stranger in Kentucky. "Guess it's pretty good," replied the native, "never seems to hurt the horses nor cattle."

AN ACT

To repeal Chapter 86 of the Acts of Assembly passed at the January Session, 1886, entitled "An Act to regulate the trial of causes before Justices of the Peace for Garrett county," and to enact the following Section in lieu thereof, requiring security for costs.

SECTION 1. Be it enacted by the General Assembly of Maryland, That Chapter 86 of the Acts of Assembly passed at January Session, eighteen hundred and eighty six, entitled "An Act to regulate the trial of causes before Justices of the Peace for Garrett county," be and the same is hereby repealed, and the following Sections be enacted in lieu thereof:

2. In any suit or action before a Justice of the Peace in Garrett county, where the plaintiff is not a resident of the State of Maryland the Justice of the Peace shall upon motion of the defendant, require the plaintiff to give security for the payment of the costs and charges which may be recovered against him in such action. When such security is required in any case the plaintiff shall be entitled to a continuance for not less than six nor more than fourteen days, and if the security required be not then given he shall be non-suited.

3. In all cases of appeal from Justices of the Peace in said county to the Circuit Court, the plaintiff, if he be a non-resident of the State of Maryland, may be required to give security for costs in the same manner and to the same extent in all respects as if the case had originated in the Circuit Court for said county.

SEC. And be it enacted, That this Act shall take effect from the date of its passage.

Approved February 3d, 1888.

I hereby certify that the aforegoing is a correct copy of an Act of the General Assembly of Maryland passed January Session, 1888.

Paine's Celery Compound

CURES Nervous Prostration, Nervous Headache, Neuralgia, Nervous Weakness, Stomach and Liver Diseases, Rheumatism, Dyspepsia, and all affections of the Kidneys.

WEAK NERVES

PAINE'S CELERY COMPOUND is a Nerve Tonic which never fails. Containing Celery and Coca, those wonderful nerve stimulants, it speedily cures all nervous disorders.

RHEUMATISM

PAINE'S CELERY COMPOUND purifies the blood. It drives out the lactic acid, which causes Rheumatism, and restores the blood-making organs to a healthy condition. It is the true remedy for Rheumatism.

KIDNEY COMPLAINTS

PAINE'S CELERY COMPOUND quickly restores the liver and kidneys to perfect health. This curative power, combined with its nerve tonics, makes it the best remedy for all kidney complaints.

DYSPEPSIA

PAINE'S CELERY COMPOUND strengthens the stomach, and quiets the nerves of the digestive organs. This is why it cures even the worse cases of Dyspepsia.

CONSTIPATION

PAINE'S CELERY COMPOUND is not a cathartic. It is a laxative, giving easy and natural action to the bowels. Regularity surely follows its use.

Recommended by professional and business men. Send for book.

TORPID LIVER

Is known by these marked peculiarities:

1. A feeling of weariness and pains in the limbs.
2. Bad breath, bad taste in the mouth, and furred tongue.
3. Constipation, with occasional attacks of diarrhœa.
4. Headache, in the front of the head; nausea, dizziness, and yellowness of skin.
5. Heartburn, loss of appetite.
6. Distention of the stomach and bowels by wind.
7. Depression of spirits, and great melancholy, with lassitude, and a disposition to leave everything for to-morrow.

A natural flow of Bile from the Liver is essential to good health. When this is obstructed it results in which, if neglected, soon leads to serious diseases. Simmons Liver Regulator exerts a most delicious influence over every kind of biliousness. It restores the Liver to proper working order, regulates the secretion of bile and puts the digestive organs in such condition that they can do their best work. After taking this medicine no one will say, "I am bilious."

BILIOUSNESS,

"I have been subject to severe spells of Congestion of the Liver, and have been in the habit of taking from 15 to 20 grains of calomel which generally laid me up for three or four days. Lately I have been taking Simmons Liver Regulator, which gave me relief without any interruption to business."—J. HUGG, Middleport, Ohio.

CHAPTER 515.

AN ACT

To repeal section thirty, thirty-one, thirty-two, thirty-five, thirty-six, forty-two, forty-eight, forty-nine, fifty, fifty-one fifty-two, sixty-six, sixty-seven, and eighty-one of Article eighty-one of the Code of Public General Laws of Maryland, title "Revenue and Taxes," as enacted by the act of January Session, eighteen hundred and seventy-four, Chapter four hundred and eighty-three, so far as the same relates to Garrett county, and sections seventy-one, seventy-two, seventy-three, seventy-four and seventy-five, of Chapter one hundred and eight, of the acts of assembly passed at January Session, eighteen hundred and seventy-eight, entitled An Act to add an additional article to the Code of Public Local Laws to be entitled Garrett County, and to enact the following sections in lieu thereof, providing for the appointment of a County Treasurer for Garrett county, and defining the duties of said Treasurer.

SECTION 1. Be it enacted by the General Assembly of Maryland, That Sections thirty, thirty-one, thirty-two, thirty-five, thirty-six, forty-two, forty-eight, forty nine, fifty, fifty-one fifty-two sixty-six, sixty-seven, eighty-one, of Article eighty-one of the Code of Public General Laws of Maryland, title "Revenue and Taxes," as enacted by the acts of January Session, eighteen hundred and seventy - four, Chapter four hundred and eighty-three, so far as the same relates to Garrett county, and sections seventy-one, seventy two, seventy-three, seventy-four and seventy-five, of Chapter one hundred and eight, of the acts of assembly passed at January Session eighteen hundred and seventy-eight, entitled an act to add an additional Article to the Code of Public Local Laws, to be entitled Garrett County, be and the same are hereby repealed, and the following sections enacted in lieu thereof, providing for the appointment of a County Treasurer for Garrett county, and defining the duties of said Treasurer:

SEC. 2. And be it enacted, That the County Commissioners of Garrett county, on the third Tuesday in April of every second year, or as soon as may be thereafter, shall appoint from among the residents of said county, a competent person County Treasurer for said county, who shall give bond and qualify as hereinafter directed, and shall hold his office two years, or until his successor is appointed and qualified, except as hereinafter provided, and shall be re-eligible thereto, and shall be subject to removal from his said office at any time by the County Commissioners for any wilfull neglect of duty or misbehavior in office. The said Treasurer shall be the collector of all State taxes and of all County taxes, for whatsoever purpose levied or to be levied for or within said county during the term of his office, or that may be placed in his hands for collection, and he shall have full power and it shall be his duty to receive and collect all State and County taxes levied as aforesaid after the passage of this act, and so put in his hands for collection, and all monies which may be due said county, with full power to enforce the payment of the same by sale or otherwise, as hereafter prescribed, and to convey title to any real or personal estate sold by him, for the payment of State or County taxes in the manner as prescribed by the succeeding sections, and all taxes levied in said county after the first day of January, A. D., eighteen hundred and eighty-eight, for State and County purposes, shall be collected by the County Treasurer.

SEC. 3. And be it enacted, That the person so appointed, before he enters upon the duties of his said office, shall take an oath before the Clerk of the Circuit Court for said county, in form similar to that now taken by collectors of taxes, except as to the title of his office and to be similarly certified; he shall execute to the State of Maryland, such bond as is now or may hereafter be required by law, as the collector of State taxes, which bond shall be approved and filed in like manner as other bonds of collectors of State taxes, and he shall execute to the State of Maryland, a separate bond in the penal sum of thirty thousand dollars, with at least three sureties to be approved by the County Commissioners of Garrett county, with the condition that if the above bounden Treasurer shall well and faithfully execute his office of Treasurer, of Garrett county, and shall account for and pay to the County Commissioners of said county, or their order, the several sums which he shall receive for said county, or be answerable for by law, at such time and in such manner as the law shall direct, then the said obligation to be void, or otherwise to be and remain in full force and virtue in law; and the said bond, when approved, shall be recorded in the office of the Clerk of the Circuit Court for Garrett county. In case of the default of the person so appointed to qualify and execute the bonds hereinbefore required within thirty days after his appointment, or in the event of the Treasurer's removal from said county or his death or resignation during his term of office, the County Commissioners shall at once proceed to fill such vacancy by the appointment of a competent person for the remainder of the term, who shall within twenty days from the date of his appointment, qualify and bond as hereinbefore directed, and the County Commissioners shall continue after twenty days to make such appointment until a Treasurer shall qualify and bond as aforesaid; provided that such new Treasurer, so taking the place made vacant by removal, death or resignation, shall not collect nor take charge of any of the taxes that may be in the hands of such late Treasurer uncollected, and for which the bond of such late Treasurer is responsible, except as herein otherwise provided, but such taxes shall be collected under existing laws applicable to collector of State and County taxes when there is a death or resignation. The sureties on any Treasurer's bonds shall, when so required by said Commissioners, make oath in due form of law respectively, that they are the owners in their own right of real estate situated in said county, equal at least over and above their debts and liabilities in value to the amount of the bond. The said Commissioners may at any time demand of any Treasurer such other or further bond with such other or further security as in their judgment the interests of the State may require.

SEC. 4. And be it enacted, That the County Commissioners shall provide and furnish the Treasurer an office in the Court House building, or in some other building as near to the same as possible, in the town of Oakland, which office shall be plainly designated by external sign as the office of the County Treasurer, and it shall be the duty of the Treasurer to keep his said office open from nine o'clock in the forenoon, until three o'clock in the afternoon, and to attend there in for the transaction of business in person or by deputy, on every day in the week, except Sunday and legal holidays, and except he is absent from the town of Oakland, for the purpose of collecting taxes as hereinafter provided for. It shall be his duty to attend in person or by deputy in each election district of said county, two days between the first day of July and the first day of September, in each year, to collect and receive taxes, and he shall give at least ten days notice of the time and place of such visits to the respective districts.

SEC. 5. And be it enacted, That the County Commissioners of said county shall make their annual levy for State and County taxes on or before the third Tuesday in April in each and every year, and the same shall be due and payable on the first day of August next, succeeding the date of the levy thereof; from all tax bills for county purposes which shall be paid prior to the first day of September, in the year of the levy thereof, a discount of five per centum shall be deducted from the amount thereof, from all such bills paid during the month of September, succeeding the levy thereof, a discount of four per centum shall be allowed, and all taxes levied for county purposes, remaining unpaid on the third first day of December, in the year of the levy thereof, shall be in arrear and interest shall be charged and collected thereon, from the date when the same shall have been due and payable, to wit: on the first day of August next succeeding the levy thereof, and the Treasurer shall make deductions from and charge interest on the tax bills for county purposes, regularly in the manner aforesaid, and shall note the same upon his books and upon the receipt given for taxes so paid, but the deductions allowed on county taxes by this section, shall not be made to any person, persons or corporate institution, unless the whole amount of State and County taxes due by such person, persons or corporate institution for the current year be paid when the same is due.

SEC. 6. And be it enacted, That it shall be the duty of the Clerk of said County Commissioners, within ten days after the annual tax levy shall have been made, to deliver to the Treasurer a fair copy of the assessments lists of said county, showing the aggregate assessment of every person, corporate institution, or set of persons, as the same then appears on the assessment books of said county, with the names of said owners arranged according to election districts and alphabetically for each district; and also to deliver to said Treasurer a certified copy of the order or resolution of Commissioners making such tax levy.

SEC. 7. And be it enacted, That it shall be the duty of the Treasurer to keep certain books to be supplied by said Commissioners, in which shall be entered a full account of all receipts and disbursements of said Treasurer. He shall also keep a full and fair cash account showing all sums of money received by him so as to indicate the source whence the same were received respectively, and showing all sums of money disbursed by him, so as to indicate the purpose to which the same were applied respectively. The said Treasurer shall report and exhibit to the said Commissioners at each of their regular meetings, a full and particular statement and account of his receipts and disbursements from the time of his appointment, or from the time of his last report, as the case may be, and shall exhibit his vouchers for his disbursements, which vouchers after cancellation, shall be retained by said Treasurer; all books, documents and papers belonging to the Treasurer's office, shall be the property and records of Garrett county, and at all times shall be subject to the examination of County Commissioners thereof. All books, documents and papers, goods and chattels, accounts and credits, money and deposits belonging to the Treasurer's office, or in his custody as Treasurer, shall deliver up and transferred by him to his successor in office when such successor is duly appointed and qualified; provided that the tax levy or levies placed in his hands for his collection, or so much thereof as may be uncollected or unaccounted for by him, and for which his bond is responsible, shall not be delivered or assigned over to his successor in office by such Treasurer, except as hereinafter provided, but his rights, powers and duties, as to collecting and reporting the same shall continue, and he shall collect and pay over the same as collected, to his successor in the manner and within the period hereinafter prescribed.

SEC. 8. And be it enacted, That the said Treasurer shall at the close of each week deposit in a bank to be designated by the Comptroller of the Treasury, of Maryland, all State taxes and money due the State, which may have come into his hands during the week, to the credit of the Comptroller of the State Treasury, and shall receive there or from said bank a certificate of deposit, which he shall immediately forward to the Comptroller, showing the amount placed to his credit; and said Treasurer shall in like manner deposit all money in his hands at the end of each week received for county taxes and dues in such bank as he may see fit, to the credit of "The County Treasurer of Garrett County," which money shall be drawn only by the Treasurer making such deposit, and only for claims which may have been levied or ordered paid by the County Commissioners.

SEC. 9. And be it enacted, That it shall be the duty of the Treasurer as soon as the annual tax levy shall have been made to give notice thereof in one newspaper published in said county, and by hand bills posted in different districts of said county, and to prepare the tax bills of each tax payer, and on application he shall forward the bill by mail or otherwise, or deliver the same to the person, persons, or corporate institutions to whom the property included in such bill is assessed.

SEC. 10. And be it enacted, That the said Treasurer shall, the first week in December of each and every year, publish in one newspaper published in said county, and by hand bills posted in three of the most public places in each election district, in said county, a list of all delinquent tax payers for the current year, which list shall contain the names of said delinquents, the amount of assessment of each, and the taxes due by each, with a notice appended thereto that the payment of said taxes will be enforced by advertisement and sale, unless the same are paid by the first day of January then next following.

SEC. 11. And be it enacted, That it shall be the duty of the Treasurer to enforce the payment of all taxes remaining unpaid on the first day of January, in the year succeeding that in which the same shall have been levied provided the notice required by the preceeding sections shall have been given. If the taxes be due and owing upon real property, or upon real and personal property, the Treasurer shall be authorized to enforce payment in the manner hereinafter prescribed, by a sale of either realty or personalty, whenever real estate is susceptible of division so that a part thereof will sell for enough to pay the taxes due and all costs, the Treasurer may in his discretion employ a surveyor to divide the same, and tax, as a part of the costs in such proceeding such compensation for the services of such surveyor as he may consider just, not exceeding the sum of three dollars per day, or the Treasurer may sell the whole of any tract of land at his election,

SEC. 12. And be it enacted, That whenever it becomes necessary for said Treasurer to enforce the payment of taxes by a sale of realty, he shall advertise such real estate once a week for three successive weeks in one newspaper published in Garrett county, and by hand-bills set up near said property and at the Court House door, and any advertised notice of a sale under the provisions of this act shall be deemed sufficient if it contains the time, terms and place of such sale, the year or years for which the taxes are due, to whom the property is assessed, the district where located, and the description of such land which is contained in the assessment books of the County Commissioners. In no case shall a description by metes and bounds be necessary.

SEC. 13. And be it enacted, That whenever it shall be necessary to enforce the payment of taxes by a sale of personal property, the said Treasurer shall make out a bill of such taxes, in the usual form, with an order at the bottom of said bill, directing the Sheriff of said county to levy upon the personal property of the delinquent, and sell the same to satisfy and pay the taxes so due. And it shall the duty of said Sheriff upon receiving such tax bill and order to levy upon and sell the personal property of such delinquent in the same manner and upon the same notice, and he shall be entitled to the same fees as if he were proceeding under an execution from a Justice of the Peace, and he shall immediately after such sale pay over to said Treasurer the amount due on said tax bill, and any surplus which may remain after the payment of taxes, interests, and costs shall be paid by said Sheriff to such delinquent tax payer. And the said Sheriff's bond shall be liable for all such tax bills placed in his hands by such Treasurer to the same extent and in the same manner that it is liable for execution claims issued to him.

SEC. 14. And be it enacted, That when any real estate shall be sold under the provision of this act for taxes, the same shall be reported to the Circuit Court for said county by the Treasurer, upon which report if the Court shall find that the provisions of this act in relation thereto have been complied with, there shall be a brief order nisi passed and a copy thereof published, as in case of judicial sales by trustees, and if no objections to the ratification of such sale be filed within the time limited by said order nisi, or if objections be filed and the objector is unable to show that the Treasurer has failed to comply with the provisions of this act, the sale shall be ratified by said Court, and for the purpose of hearing objections or passing orders under this act, said Courts shall be deemed to be always open as in chancery proceedings. If the objector to such sale show to the satisfaction of the judge or judges that the Treasurer has failed to comply with the provisions of this act, said sale shall be set aside, in which case the Treasurer shall forthwith proceed to a new sale of the property; upon the ratification of such sale the Treasurer shall convey to the purchaser the property purchased by him, upon payment of the costs of such deed by the purchaser, and the bond of the Treasurer shall be liable for the money paid by the purchaser, in the event of the sale not being so ratified with interest, and for all costs and expenses accruing from such sale. The Treasurer shall retain out of the proceeds of the sale when ratified, the amount of taxes and interest thereon, and all costs incurred in advertising, making, reporting and ratifying such sale, and shall pay over any excess to the owner or owners of the property thus sold. No such sale shall be set aside if the provisions of this act shall appear to have been substantiality complied with and the burden of proof shall be on the exceptant thereto.

SEC. 15. And be it enacted, That it the said Treasurer shall for himself or any other person discount or buy or receive for less than its face and real value, any claim against said county, the person so offending shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon indictment and conviction, shall be fined not less than one hundred nor more than five hundred dollars for each and every offence.

SEC. 16. And be it enacted, That it shall be the duty of said Treasurer to inform himself by all lawful means of all property, stocks, or investments in said county liable to taxation, and not included in the last revised list of assessment, and of all buildings and improvements, and of all property created or acquired since said revised assessment; and he shall value the same at the full cash value thereof, and shall make return thereof to the said County Commissioners; and for the purpose of this section, the said Treasurer shall be clothed with the powers of general assessor, and his valuation of such property shall be subject to revision and correction by said Commissioners

SEC. 17. And be it enacted, That the Treasurer shall pay over according to law or to the order of the said County Commissioners, in the manner hereinbefore prescribed by this act, all County taxes and all monies due said County, and collected by him, and he shall also pay over to the Treasurer of the State of Maryland, according to law, all the State taxes levied in said county, and collected by him, and he shall be allowed two years from the date of each levy placed in his hands for collection, to complete the collection thereof, and to make his final settlement with said County Commissioners and with the Treasurer of Maryland, respectively; all claims for erroneous, insolvent or uncollectable tax bills for which he shall claim a credit, shall be presented before or at the time specified for said final settlement, and in no case shall said Commissioners allow credit for erroneous, insolvent or uncollectable taxes, unless satisfactory proof be produced under oath, that the the same cannot be collected. The said Commissioners, in their discretion, at any time after the expiration of the term of any such Treasurer, or at the final settlement aforesaid, may direct and require him to deliver over to his successor in office, all balances of collected taxes due upon the lexies with which he was charged, and also so to deliver over the notices, levies and other proceedings, had for the enforcement of the payment of said taxes, and in said case the said successor or newly appointed and qualified Treasurer upon the delivery to him of the bills for such taxes, shall be empowered and required to enforce the payment of said taxes in the same manner as his predecessor could have done, and he shall have all the powers and authority in law with which his predecessor was clothed for that purpose; in such case the bond or bonds of the newly elected or succeeding Treasurer shall become responsible for the proper collection and disbursement of such taxes, and the bond or bonds of the retiring or retired Treasurer, shall be released from responsibility therefor; provided that no Treasurer's bond shall be considered as released or be cancelled, until in one mode or the other he has fully settled his accounts secured thereby, and fulfilled the duties of his said office.

SEC. 18. And be it enacted, That the said Treasurer shall receive as compensation for all the services required of him under this act four per cent. on all the taxes actually collected by him, and should said Treasurer find it necessary for his convenience at any time to appoint a deputy, he shall pay said deputy out of his commissions, and he shall be answerable for the acts of such deputy. And the County Commissioners shall, at the time of making the annual levy, levy a sufficient sum, by estimate, to cover the discount to tax payers, and compensation to the Treasurer, provided for in the preceding sections.

SEC. 19. And be it enacted, That where land is in the hands of a trustee for sale or otherwise, whether by virtue of a decree of Court or under a deed of trust, and the taxes thereon are in arrears, under the provisions of this act, the said Treasurer may enforce the payment of such taxes in the same manner as if such land were not in the hands of a trustee.

SEC. 20. And be it enacted, That whenever land shall be sold by the Treasurer the owner thereof, prior to the sale, may redeem the same by paying into Court, to be paid to the purchaser thereof, within the period of six Calendar months, from the date of such sale the amount of the purchase money, with interest thereon, at the rate of twenty per cent. per annum from the date of sale.

SEC. 21. And be it enacted, That the provisions of the Code of Public General Laws of Maryland now in force, or hereafter enacted applicable to collectors of State and County taxes, except where the same are repealed by this act or are inconsistent with the provisions of this act, shall be held to apply to the Treasurer of said county, who as to his powers, rights, duties and liabilities, both Civil and Criminal, and those of his bond or bondsmen, shall be in all respects on a footing with State and County collectors, except as herein provided.

SEC. 22. And be it enacted, That all acts or parts of acts inconsistent with the provisions of this act are hereby repealed, so far as they apply to Garrett county.

SEC. 23. And be it enacted, That this act shall take effect from the date of its passage.

Approved, Elihue E. Jackson, Governor.

A HUSBAND'S WAIL.

Dear Genevieve, you were so sweet
When first you gave your hand to me,
So charming, love: from head to feet
You were a perfect symphony.

The pretty bang upon your brow,
The dainty ribbons that you wore—
I shut my eyes and see them now;
Thus memory doth the past restore.

To see a maiden half so fair
One weary miles would have to go;
You were so neat, and in your hair
You used to have a Jacqueminot.

I see you tripping down the lane
With pretty slippered feet again:
You used to come in shine or rain—
My wife, you were my sweetheart then.

The collar that you wore was clean—
Fresh from the iron, I should guess;
You came to me with smiling mien,
A vision rare of loveliness.

To-day around the house you go;
Your slippers down at heel appear;
Your hair has not a Jacqueminot—
I think it needs a comb, my dear.

Your collar's soiled; the ribbons gone
Which at your throat you used to wear;
You have no smile for me, my own—
Your wrapper sadly needs repair.

How different, darling, you appear!
Is mine the fault? Unhappy fate!
I think you've hooked your fish, my dear,
And have no further use for bait.

AN APRIL FOOL.

A Dramatic Story Good for All Seasons of the Year.

In Three Parts.

Mr. Napoleon Bonaparte Brown, an eccentric elderly millionaire, has taken his nephew Mr. Horace White (whom he knows to be hopelessly in love with a Miss Jane Gray, a bright young American girl, assistant teacher of Italian in a fashionable young ladies' seminary in his native city, New York), and his niece, Miss Winnie White, to Italy to study art. The three are housed in fine apartments in an old palace, the one room used as a studio containing easels, tables, chairs, a sofa, hassock, some unfinished pictures, studies, fragments of statuary—in short all the æsthetic furnishings usual to studios. When the story opens Miss Winnie and Mr. Horace White are discovered sitting before their respective easels in altogether different attitudes.

PART I.

Winnie (casting a troubled glance towards her brother)—"Horace!"

Horace—"Well?"

Winnie—"Do you use permanent blue or Prussian blue with crimson lake when you want to get the right purple for this drapery?"

Horace—"I don't use either. Hang it all, Winnie, I'm getting desperate!"

Winnie—"Horace White, what are you talking about! Let me see your picture!"

Horace—"O, it isn't the picture—but see it—see it—do!" (Shows plain white canvas).

Winnie—"Well, upon my——"

Horace—"Winnie White, if you were a sister worth having you'd not sit there 'penning' your word, but help your poor, unhappy brother out of his deep, his miserable affliction! I wish all the pigments, oil and turpentine were——"

Winnie—"There you go! Just because you don't like to paint——"

Horace—"I do like to paint; it's a jolly lot of fun when I'm inspired; but how can a fellow dead, dead, dead in love—hopeless love—sit up and paint purple drapery. Ugh!"

Winnie—"Horace!"

Horace—"What is it?"

Winnie—"Did you tell uncle all about it?"

Horace—"Did I! Well, you'd have thought so if you'd have seen him!"

Winnie—"What did he say?"

Horace—"He said: 'Young man, if you dare to think of such a thing you may say good-bye to your uncle, for I shall disinherit you. Do your hear me! Disinherit you! You're a fool—an out and out fool'—and, Winnie, what is to become of me?"

Winnie—"O, you'll live through it—boys always do!"

Horace—"But you don't know the half——"

Winnie—"Which half?"

Horace—"She's here—here at this very minute, in Rome!"

Winnie—"Well, what of that?"

Horace—"That's only one-half—the better half!"

Winnie—"Is there a worse half, Horace? Speak.

Horace—"There is—and it is that I bade her follow me; for, Winnie, we are—already—married!"

Winnie—"Horace White! O, Horace! My brother!"

Horace—"There, there, Winnie, don't take it so! It was a bit sudden, I know; but I was desperate—and also of age—and so we took a walk and—were married before we smiled. She followed as I bade her, and, oh, Winnie, we depend upon you to help us out of our great difficulty—say you will, Winnie, say you will!"

Winnie—"If I can, Horace. If I—but there comes uncle—he'll see we've been crying—let us fly for our lives!" (Both leave the room hurriedly.)

(Mr. N. B. Brown enters the room, walks up to the nearest easel and begins to examine the picture upon it critically.)

Brown—"Capital! Capital! I'll make artists of the young people yet! Beautifully done—tender shadows—exquisite reflect lights in that drapery—ah, my little Winnie's a talented girl—a talented girl! If her brother had only a quarter of her fondness for art—but, there! The boy's a genius without a doubt! A capital thing for them that I could fetch them to Italy to study art—Italy, the Cradle of the Beautiful! It is my delight to watch the unfolding of their different styles—one all tenderness, the other all boldness! Let's see what the dear boy has done this morning! (He picks up canvas from where it has fallen.) Great Scott! Not a tint on this Roman twill! It's that Jane Gray—Jane Gray—that's exactly who it is! Jane Gray—and she has come over to 'perfect her Italian'—may the imps take her! Now, I never saw the young woman, and I never will see the young woman—but I've had Jane Gray dinned into my ears until I'm sick of the sound of the name! O, she's a designing creature—a shrewd, crafty, diplomatic little wretch, angling after the only male heir to the great Brown estates. I'll settle her and she'll find that coming over here to 'perfect her Italian' won't go down with me! What's that?"

(Winnie enters and greets her uncle affectionately.)

Winnie—"Your own Winnifred—good morning, Uncle Nappy. And have you seen my work, and are you pleased?"

Brown (frowning)—"O, I'm delighted!"

Winnie—"What is it, Uncle Boney—you look angry?"

Brown—"Angry? Well, can't I look angry if I am angry? That brother of yours——

Winnie—"I knew it was Horace! Uncle Party listen to me—let's send him away to Naples—to Milan—to Monte Carlo——

Brown—"Winnifred White, are you insane?"

Winnie—"I thought only of offering a counter attraction."

Brown—"By Jove! Not a bad idea! I'll give him a pocket-full of gold and let him go—he won't be back very soon, ha! ha!"

Winnie—"So that's settled. By the way, Uncle Poley, I forgot to tell you of the beautiful model I engaged. You'll be in rapturs when you see her—such glorious big brown eyes with fringes an inch and a quarter long! And soft, dark hair, as lustrous as silk, and such a mouth! The old lavandaia—the washwoman—told me about her and she will fetch her to-morrow morning—but, 'sh! There comes Horace—I leave you to pronounce his doom!" (Passing out as Horace enters, she whispers to her brother:) "Accept all your uncle's propositions and trust in me!" (Exit.)

Brown (setting up the bare canvas before Horace)—"Well, sir; I am ready to congratulate you upon your astonishing progress—upon the astounding headway you have made! A little pale in tone, perhaps; but so is your Jane Gray. Jane Gray—pooh! If I could lock her up in a tower and then behead her whenever I felt in the mood, oh, wouldn't I! Don't scowl at me, young man! I shall tempt you with gold, and if that doesn't serve I'll disinherit you, mark that, sir! Horace (goes over to table and writes a check), there's enough to make Monte Carlo a paradise for an hour or two, at least; take it and clear out!"

Horace—"Monte Carlo!"

Brown—"Yes, Monte Carlo. Go and gamble——"

Horace—"Uncle N. B., I can not—stay—(aside) Winnie said I was to accept every proposition he made and trust in her! (Aloud) Uncle N. B., I will!"

Brown—"I supposed you would. Have Jenks pack up for you—and wait a moment here, Horace; I wish to see you again before you go."

Horace—"Very well, sir. (Exit Brown.) What can my Uncle N. B. mean? What can Winnie mean? What can it all mean!" (Enter Winnie.)

Winnie—"It means that you are going to Monte Carlo—yes! Well, sir, the Monte Carlo to which you are going lies less than one small quarter of a mile away!"

Horace—"Che volete dire?"

Winnie—"Just what I say. Listen! [Looks all about the room then whispers.] Do you know the road that leads across the Tiber—over the Bridge of St. Angelo close by St. Peters, where, only a stone's throw away, dwells one who is perfecting her Italian? Aha—I knew my brilliant scheme would please you—and—bless you, my children!"

Horace—"O, Winnie, you're a brick—a regular kiln! But though it's awful nice—at present—how will it avail——"

Winnie—"Why, by the time your money is gone your wife will have won the heart of Uncle Boney, see?"

Horace—"N—no, not exactly."

Winnie—"Well, it's all arranged between us; and I shall hire her as a model—she will come every day and pose for me—a real Italian type she is, you know, and Uncle Leon, will, of course——"

Horace—"O, Winnie, Winnie, if ever I smashed your doll's head in early youth, it was simply because I, your only fraternal relative, did not then appreciate what it was to have a sister!"

Winnie—"There, dear boy, don't take it so to heart! I broke your kites and lost your skate-straps fully as often as you murdered my sawdust idols—let's kiss and make up!"

PART II.

TWO WEEKS LATER.

(Mr. N. B. Brown is discovered looking out of the window. He suddenly starts and comes hastily forward.)

Brown (calling)—"Winnie! Winnie! She's coming—the model's coming! Where is that girl! She knows I can't speak Italian worth a fiddlestring, and yet she leaves me to meet her alone! That model is the loveliest being I ever saw in my life—such eyes! (Opens his own widely.) Such teeth! (Grins broadly.) Such lips! (Pouts.) If I wasn't such an old-settled-in-life sort o' person I'd—goodness knows what I wouldn't do! A sort o' sadness in the eyes touches me—has she a sorrow? What can it be! I'll get Winnie to find out, and if money can relieve her, she shall be relieved. Old fool! Yes, I know it; but I don't go crazy often! Some folks would say I was crazy to send the boy off to Monte Carlo—but there was method in my madness, yes, sir; method! Gone a whole fortnight and not a word from the scamp in all this time. Must be winning, or I'd heard, fast enough. Jane Gray's not troubling him much nowadays, I'll be bound. Why, this lovely Italian's worth forty Jane Grays! If he made her a niece of mine I'd give 'em my villa on the Hudson and a thousand shares in the X. Y. Z. Central for a wedding present! By Jove! Another idea! I'll telegraph him to come home at once and—I'll match her against the Gray every time!"

(Mr. Brown sits down to fill out a telegraph blank. As he writes, Jane Gray, dressed as an Italian peasant girl steals softly up behind him, peeps over his shoulder and nods a smiling approbation of what she reads. Suddenly she breathes softly in his ear.)

Jane—"Buon giorno, Signor!"

Brown (starting to his feet)—"O, Ow—good morning, dear, good morning!"

Jane—"Fa bellissimo tempo, signore!"

Brown—"Bless my soul, you don't say so! I wish Winnie would come—sit down, scenereener, sit down—(motioning and speaking very loudly) sit down!"

Jane—"Ah—si—non v' ho capito!"

Brown—"Don't mention it! Scenereener!

Jane—"Si Signore!"

Brown—"Do you not speak a little—just a very little English?"

Jane—"Ah, si, signore—a leedle-a!"

Brown (delighted)—"A leedle-a'—why, that's splendid, magnificent!"

Jane—"Ella me colmi, gentilezze."

(Winnie enters.)

Brown—"Well, my dear; I don't know anything about 'Ella' or 'gentle Lizzie.'"

Winnie (advancing)—She says you are too kind, Uncle Nappy. Buon giorno, Giovannina—come, Uncle Party, move away, please; I want my model to get into place quickly. Prenda una sedia, Giovannina!"

Brown—"Seems to me you're in an awful hurry to make the poor thing sit with her chin up in the air—can't you let her rest a bit before you begin?"

Winnie—"Not an instant. Stia quieto, signorina."

Jane—"Son pronto."

Brown—"What does she say?"

Winnie—"That she is ready, Uncle Polly; isn't she a darling? Did you ever see such beautiful eyes—like liquid seas of golden brown."

Brown—"Did you ever hear of solid seas. But they are lovely, and it's a gloriously good thing the child can't understand a word you say; I'd be afraid to say such things to her very face!"

Winnie—"O, she don't mind it. See how unconscious she looks!"

Brown—"And how sad!"

Winnie—"She does look sad. She told me a little about her sorrow when you went off to la galleria——"

Brown—"Speak English!"

Winnie—"Very well, sir; the picture gallery. And now, ardate via—I mean, go away, please, and I'll try to find out the rest of it. Possibly we may be able to help her—the poor girl!"

Brown—"The poor girl! All right, Winnie; I'm off to telegraph Horace to come home; and, do you know, small woman, I've a notion of turning match-maker—I, your uncle, Napoleon Bonaparte Brown!"

Winnie—"Uncle Boney, aren't you ashamed of yourself! And there's Jane Gray——"

Brown—"Confound Jane Gray! I beg your pardon, scenereener, did I frighten you? Hang it all; tell her I'm a brute—a blarsted idiot—any thing you choose—I'm off!"

Mr. Brown leaves the room hurriedly, whereupon the two young ladies arise from their places beside the easel and begin an animated conversation.

Winnie—"There, he's gone! Jane, he's your very own uncle, now, and you've captured him beautifully! Why, he raves over you; and all there's left to do is to make a clean breast of it—what do you say to a bona fide American April fool in Italy? What fun!"

Jane—"O, Winnie, dear, I'm so fearful!"

Winnie—"Of what? Hasn't Uncle Nappy gone to telegraph Horace to come home from Monte Carlo just on your account?"

Jane—"Yes, I know, dear; but Horace——

(Enter Horace, who overhears Jane.)

Winnie—"Giovannina, siste un' poco!"

Horace—"Of course she's a goose—but what about Horace, my charming peasant——"

Jane—"Horace!"

Winnie—"Horace!"

Horace—"Yes; it is Horace. Girls, this game must end. Where has Uncle N. B. betaken himself!—I saw him leave the house, and so, like the sneak I have lately been—I ventured in."

Jane—"Gone to telegraph you to come home—ha! ha!"

Winnie—"And fall a victim to Gwandolen—hee! hee!"

Horace—"O, I'm victim enough, I assure you!"

Winnie—"Now, Jane, darling, come into my room and let's have a good old-fashioned gossip—Uncle Party will not return very soon—come! Excuse us, Horace, and go away—that's a dear; Uncle Boney mustn't find you here—and in two days you may arrive from Monte Carlo—if you go!"

Horace—"Grazie, l'avverto, mio caro sarello! (Bows and kisses his hand to Winnie, embraces his wife, and, at their departure, takes up his hat and cane preparatory to leaving the house.) My lovely little wife—I'm a coward not to have acknowledged her before; but Uncle N. B. would have been Uncle N. G. if I'd have come out flat with the facts. Now, the dear old man is in love with her himself—and may all the lucky stars in my own particular heaven shine out in one blaze of dazzling glory!"

PART III

(Same, two days later. Mr. N. B. Brown is seated at table reading paper.)

Brown (tossing paper aside and consulting watch)—"The morning rain leaves at——" (Enter Horace briskly)

Horace—"How do you do, Uncle N. B? I'm glad to see you looking so well!"

Brown—"Bless my soul, Horace, back again? I sent you a telegram——"

Horace—"Which accounts for my sudden appearance, sir. Well, here I am, and here at the same time is All Fool's Day—quite appropriate, eh?"

Brown—"That depends. Sit down—sit down, youngster; been enjoying yourself?"

Horace—"That's what I should call it, sir!"

Brown—"Lose much, Horace?"

Horace—"No, sir. I have won!"

Brown—"Bless me! I hope you are lucky on the win, my boy, for I've a finer prize here for you than you could find at Monte Carlo!"

Horace—"Is it something you'd like to take home to America with you, sir?"

Brown—"Ha! ha! ha! ha! ha! ha! ha! You win, ha! ha! as you guess, ha! ha! you're pretty safe to capture the prize!"

Horace—"Well, I shall try my best, sir, and hope to be lucky for your sake!"

Brown—"And I hope for your own. But there—ask me no questions. I see you have a thousand ready; just come into the lunch room and have a bite and sup."

Horace—"Questa cosa mi da gran placere."

Brown—"I don't know what you mean, but you're all right; talks like a native; bless the boy!" (Brown pats Horace on the back, as both leave the room.)

(Jennie and Winnie enter and take seats near one of the easels.)

Winnie—"Now pose, Jennie, and look dreadfully melancholy. Don't venture to look toward Horace, or you will spoil it all."

Jane—"It's going to be almost the death of me—I feel it—I know it!"

Winnie—"Courage, sweet sister-in-law—I hear them coming! Hold up your chin and il solo difetta che gli trovo e che sembrano troppo piccolo——"

(Enter Brown and Horace.)

Brown (smiling and rubbing his hands)—"Ha! ha! Here we are, Winnie. Got my telegram and came right down. Obedient boy! Kiss your sister, Horace, and let me introduce you to the model—scenereener, this is my nephew, Mr. Horace White; Horace, the scenereener!"

(Horace and Jane bow solemnly to one another. Winnie laughs behind her palette.)

Brown (drawing Horace to one side)—"Horace, my boy, on the quiet, now, did you ever see such eyes!"

Horace—"Never!"

Brown—"Or such a mouth!"

Horace—"No, sir!"

Brown—"Or such a perfect chin, or throat, or sea shell of ears, or hands, or feet—or——"

Horace—"Never in all my life, uncle N. B., never!"

Brown—"I knew you'd say so—I knew it! none know her but to love her. Where's your miserable, wretched Jane Gray now?"

Horace—"Eh—ah—that is a question I should not care to answer just now."

Brown—I should think not, indeed! Let with the old love, eh, my boy?"

(Winnie advanced to her uncle's side.)

Winnie—"O, Uncle Boney, I asked her about her sorrow and she told me all. Horace, go and air your prettiest Italian to yonder poor girl, while I tell the sad story to Uncle Party."

(Winnie leads her uncle to a sofa and motions him to sit beside her. Horace sinks upon a footstool at the feet of his wife and begins to whisper earnestly to Jane, who leans lovingly towards him.)

Brown—"Told you all about it, did she, Winnie! Lovely creature! Somehow my heart yearns——"

Winnie—"All that I am hoping for is that it will never cease to yearn! Yes, she told me all all about it. It seems there was a little love affair between herself and a young fellow—a bright, handsome boy who is kept completely under the thumb of a very eccentric old millionaire——"

Brown—"The old curmudgeon!"

Horace—"And who threatens all sorts of dire vengeances if the boy shall marry this (waves her hand dramatically toward Jane) sweet, sweet creature!"

Brown—"Why, the old reprobate—look, Winnie, they are in love already; she has actually placed one pretty unconscious hand upon the young rascal's shoulder—bravo! bravo! Go on, child. By the way, what are the names of these people?"

Winnie—"The girl's name! La Signorina Giovannina Bigio. I thought you knew."

Brown—"To be sure! To be sure! And the boy's!

Winnie—"Il Signore Orazio Bianco."

Brown—"Ecl Seener Orrazy Blanker." Well, and the old miser's?"

Winnie—"Ah! Ah! Il Signor Bruno."

Brown—Humph! Bruno—Bruno—is he a dog that he must do this thing?"

Winnie—"I should say that he was a sort of a dog in the manger, shouldn't you, Uncle Poley? Well, in spite of this rich man's opposition these two kept faithful to their vows of love."

Brown—"Quite the proper thing. I honor 'em for it."

Winnie—"The old gentleman, hearing of this, tried to part them."

Brown—"The old scoundrel!"

Winnie—"He bribed the poor boy with gold—sent him away, and tried his best to break the heart of that (waving hand again towards Jane) entrancingly beautiful vision! Wasn't he a fiend incarnate, Uncle Leon, a terrible tyrant, a malicious monster!"

Brown—"That don't spell it, Winnie, that don't begin to spell it! But look at 'em now, girl—the young scapegrace actually has one arm around her—bless my soul!"

Winnie (sternly to Jane and Horace)—"Sedate, figli—non casi presto!" (Horace and Jane move a little apart.)

Horace—"Castagni!" (Winnie and Jane laugh.)

Brown—"What is that, Winnie?"

Winnie—"He said 'chestnuts,' Uncle Boney, but don't mind him—he's in the toils and——"

Brown—"Proceed with your interesting narrative, my niece, and let the young people alone."

Winnie—"There isn't much more to tell. The poor boy was to be dragged away from that (waves hand again) perfectly enchanting being's presence, and was told that years would elapse before he could return. On the impulse of the moment—and the horse cars—the young couple went to the office of a justice of the peace—and—were married!"

Brown (bouncing from his position on the sofa and beginning to pace the floor, at which all the others arise)—"So she's another's—another's—and there's no hope—no slightest grain of hope for us!"

Winnie—"Uncle Poley, what, under the existing, harrowing circumstances, would you advise them to do?"

Brown—"Do! Do! There's nothing left to do but go to the old demon and beg his forgiveness——"

(Horace and Jane, having advanced during Mr. Brown's last speech, now kneel beside the old gentleman, each seizing one of his hands and speaking together.)

Horace (—"Which we do, Uncle Napoleon

Jane (Bonaparte Brown!"

(Mr. Brown stares wildly from one to the other, turning his head from Jane to Horace and back again with each word he utters.)

Brown—"Uncle Napoleon—Bonaparte—Brown! What does this mean?"

Horace (in mock pathos)—"It means that I am the poor boy, Orazio Bianco—Anglicized, Horace White!"

Jane—"And that I am Giovannia Bigio—translated, Jane Gray!"

Winnie—"And you, dear Uncle Nappy, sweet Uncle Poley, darling Uncle Leon, charming Uncle Boney, blessed Uncle Party, are the cruel old tyrant Il Signore Bruno—Americanized, Brown! You would never consent to look upon the face of Jane Gray, and I knew one sight of her would cause your hard old heart to relent—for, as you yourself have said, 'None knew her but to love her!' So we compelled you to see her and admire her—and you are wildly in love with her, aren't you! Children, arise and greet your uncle!"

Brown—"I give in—it's all up with me, children! Kiss me, Jane; embrace me, Winnie; your hand, Horace—I see it all now; and I'm nothing, after all, but a simple old April Fool!"—Eva Best, in Detroit Free Press.

ONE CENTURY AGO.

The Average Price Paid for Land at That Time.

Life in the United States was in those days almost altogether rural. Towns of 8,000 or more inhabitants then contained but a fraction over three per cent. of the population of the country, where now they contain more than twenty-two per cent. Philadelphia, indeed, had nearly 44,000 inhabitants, New York 33,000, Boston 18,000, Charleston 16,000, Baltimore 14,000; but these were all. Coxe was of opinion that nine-tenths of the people of the United States were engaged in agricultural occupations.

Dr. Thomas Cooper, the famous English economist, during his residence in America, prepared an interesting little book entitled "Some Information Respecting America."

On the subject of price, Dr. Cooper says: "A hundred and fifty acres of land with a tolerable house and barn upon it, and sufficient land cleared for a person immediately to begin as a farmer, may be purchased in many parts at £4 currency an acre," that is, he says, not quite fifty shillings sterling. Rich but unimproved land, he thought, could be had for thirty shillings currency an acre. Of course, much more depended then than now on the nearness of a market, transportation being very costly. We may quote from Wansey's Journal an example of the cheapest, amusing from the classical names with which the Deputy Secretary of State had then been sprinkling Central New York.

"Monday I attended a sale of some military lands (by auction at the Tontine Coffee House) situated in the north part of New York State. Twenty-five acres in the Township of Cato were sold at two shillings and eight pence currency per acre, (1s. 6d. sterling;) 500 in Pompey, at five shillings and one penny, (2s. 10d. sterling;) 900 in Tully and Hannibal, at three shillings and eight pence, (2s. 1d.;) 1,400 in Hector and Dryden, at three shillings and eight pence, (2s. 1d)."

In these cases the average price was, it will be seen, a little over fifty cents an acre. On the other hand, the Duke de la Rochefoucauld-Liancourt gives one instance, at Marlborough, Mass., of farming lands worth $300 an acre. La Rochefoucauld very often gives prices of lands he sees. It appears that these averaged $25 or $30 an acre in thickly-settled New England, less in Pennsylvania, and from $5 to $12 in Virginia. In the latter State land seemed to be going down in value. But elsewhere its price was rising, and an extraordinary amount of land speculation went on, mainly occasioned by the great sales of lands effected by the States in order to pay their debts. Thus the Duke tells of land near Lancaster, Penn., bought for $25, for which $100 was refused five years later, and of 1,600 acres near Canandaigua, N. Y., bought three years before at a shilling, of which more than half had since been sold off at prices ranging from $1 to $3, while some had even brought $26 an acre.—N. Y. Tribune.

THE COWARDLY CYCLONE.

It Never Tackles Any Thing of Its Own Size and Strength.

"I see," said the old fellow who is much acquainted with the ways of the West, "that the cyclone has been taking a turn in the South. Do you know that there's nothing more cowardly than a cyclone?"

"Cowardly!"

"Yes, cowardly. Did you ever know a cyclone to tackle any thing of its size? Did you ever know a cyclone to make a dash at a great city? No, for that's not the nature of a cyclone. When is a cyclone happiest? When it can slip up on some little weather-boarded town that has just gone to sleep. Then it dances a jig of furious glee. It dashes at the court-house and scatters it about the public square; seizes the Methodist church and slams its life out against the town hall; wrenches the groaning windlass from the town well and kills the mayor with it, and then enters upon the frolic of general destruction. But how does it act when it strikes a great city? It is like the cowboy who, having shot out the lights of a frontier saloon and made himself master of the place, goes to a big town and piteously begs for a drink. It gathers up dust and throws it in the eyes of the people, but it does not demolish the chamber of commerce. It howls with cowardly rage, and then dozes in a vacant lot. 'Never mind,' it says to itself, 'I know what I am doing. Yonder is a countryman with a blanket about his shoulders. He lives in a little village out in Iowa. I'll follow him out home, and, after he has gone to sleep, I'll pick him up and beat his life out against the ground. Then I'll go into the village park and tangle the maple trees 'like ocean weeds heaped on a surf-beaten shore.' No, sir," the Westerner continued, "there is nothing more cowardly than the cyclone."—Arkansaw Traveler.

MYSTERIOUS FATALITIES.

What Is it That Is Killing so many Prominent Men?

The death of Kaiser Wilhelm, ex-Gov. Hoffman, Banker J. W. Drexel, Lieut.-Gov Dorsheimer, Dr. Carpenter, Chief-Justice Waite and Gen. B. H. Browster, in quick succession, and all from the sam cause, although having different names, is startling.

March and April are fatal months, not only for consumptives but also for many diseases more disguised but none the less fatal.

Gov. Hoffman had heart disease, Gov. Dorsheimer, apparently a strong, well, robust man, over six feet high, sickens and dies in four days of pneumonia.

Chief-Justice Waite meets the same fate and he was apparently the personification of vigor.

Drexel, the Philadelphia banker, and Brewster, Ex-Atty. Genl., were suddenly cut off in the midst of great usefulness, by Bright's disease, and Dr. Carpenter, the well-known New York physician, suddenly died of Kidney disease, never having suspected that he was at all troubled therewith!

This reminds us of the case of Dr. Frank Hawthorn, of New Orleans. He was lecturing before the Louisiana university on the peculiarly deceptive character of Kidney disease and the methods of microscopical and chemical tests.

After having shown specimen after specimen of diseased fluids, and made very clear the point that kidney disease may exist without the knowledge or suspicion of the patient or practitioner, with gracious self-confidence he remarked: "Now, gentlemen, let me show you the healthy water of a strong, well man."

He applies the test!

He staggers!

"Gentlemen, I have made a terrible discovery!" he gasps, "I myself have the fatal Bright's disease!"

In less than a year this specialist of the commonest and most fatal of diseases was dead. He was a victim of advanced Kidney disease the presence of which in himself he had never suspected!

L. B. PRICE, M. D., a gentleman and physician of the highest standing of Hanover, C. H., Va., four years ago, after trying every other remedy for Bright's disease, including famous mineral waters, cured himself by Warner's Safe Cure, and March 24, 1888, wrote: "I have never had the slightest symptoms of my old and fearful trouble."

MR. JOHN DOHERTY, of Concord, N. H., was given up with Bright's disease by the best physicians in 1875. He was in a dreadful state. After using and being cured in 1881 by Warner's Safe Cure, in 1887, he wrote: "I am better than ever."

JOHN COLEMAN, ESQ., 109 Gregory St., New Haven, Conn., was first taken sick in 1873, gradually ran down until he had pronounced Bright's disease, rheumatism and all the other deceptive signs of kidney disease. The best physicians in New Haven could do nothing for him. He then began using Warner's Safe Cure, 200 bottles of which he and his family have used and he is cured.

W. T. CRAWFORD, proprietor St. Charles Hotel, Richmond, Va., and well known all through the South, several years ago was in the death-agony from kidney disease, convulsions and Bright's disease. The best Philadelphia specialists in such diseases pronounced him practically dead and incurable. Every thing else failing he took Warner's Safe Cure abundantly and regularly, until fully restored to health, and now he says: "After a lapse of many years I am as sound as a dollar, with no symptoms of my old trouble. I owe my life to Warner's Safe Cure."

Kidney disease is the most deceptive, the most universal, the most fatal disease.

If the most learned men can not know without the use of microscopical and chemical tests that they have kidney disease, how much more liable is the layman to be, unknown to himself, in the very jaws of death, who does not feel as well as formerly, but who does not think anything specially ails him, and whose physician may assure him that he will soon be "all right."

In these days, people recognize that it is wiser to prevent disease than to await its arrival to cure it. When you know that you may be in the greatest peril and not have any idea of the fact from any defined set of ill-feelings, the wisest course to pursue is to follow the counsel and experience above outlined, and thoroughly renovate the system, cleanse the blood, tone the nerves and insure your own life against these common, mysterious fatalities.

WHEN you see a red-nosed politician, use your eyes and you will see a dark horse.—Omaha World.

THE railway officials now call it a "permit" instead of a "pass," and it's just about as hard to get.

Ache.

The full significance of this atrociously expressive word is fully realized by the unfortunate who has been afflicted with inflammatory rheumatism. That is ache with a vengeance. Ere the disease is aggravated to the inflammatory stage, the potent aid of Hostetter's Stomach Bitters should be sought. This, used at the outset, will prevent the further development of the disease and afford prompt relief.

A SCULPTOR mustn't lose cast—not before the work is done for which the cast was taken.—Texas Siftings.

"I want to thank you," writes a young man to B. F. Johnson & Co., Richmond, Va., "for placing me in a position by which I am enabled to make money faster than I ever did before." FARM AND FIRESIDE.

—If you want bloom, use small pots; if you desire luxuriant foliage, use large ones.

—All who aspire to gardening honors should at some time get in the way of raising many of their own seeds.

—The reason the hen that steals her nest always hatches well is that she is not too fat, and every egg has the same same vitality.

—In pruning roses cutting back closely produces, as a rule, flower blooms of finer quality, while from those not so closely pruned will be obtained a larger quantity of smaller flowers.—American Garden.

—The geranium is a healthy plant, and one that is invaluable for garden purposes. By a little care and caution one may have geraniums bloom the year through. The soil should be light and rich.

—By tying a small corn-cob to one leg, allowing it to dangle at a distance of about six inches, a Maine poultry fancier is said to succeed in keeping her chickens at home. "The fowl can scratch and get about with ease, but will not attempt to fly over palings or squeeze through a crack."

—A prosperous farmer remarks that when he raises a crop he has to ship it to market to obtain a sale for it; but when he raises a horse the buyer comes to him and buys his product. A little horse sense of this character will open the eyes of hundreds of farmers in this State, and not before it is needed either.

—A woman who has always used a broom-handle or straight stick of any kind, can have no notion of the convenience of one forked at the end; one prong catches a fold of cloth and holds it as the stick is turned, so there is slight danger of its slipping off, as so often happens with the plain stick. A hole should be bored in one end by which to hang it up.

—Telegram Padding: Boil a quart of milk in a saucepan, adding a pinch of salt and two tablespoonfuls of butter. Beat four eggs and mix to a smooth batter with four table spoonfuls of flour and a little cold milk; add this to the boiling milk and stir rapidly till it thickens up. Eat with powdered sugar and cream or a fine maple syrup.

—There is a big cider mill in Northwestern Pennsylvania, and the farmers around there cart away the pomace as fast as it is made to feed to their milch cows. One man began at once feeding a peck of pomace, night and morning, to each cow, and noticed an immediate increase in the flow of milk. The cows kept increasing in milk and flesh as the ration of pomace was increased, which finally reached a bushel and a half per day.

—In making any soup observe: 1st, A soup should never boil; let it only simmer. 2d, A soup should never be greasy. Make the stock a day in advance and remove the fat if necessary. 3d, A soup should be judiciously seasoned. Salt, cayenne, celery seed, sweet herbs—all are good. 4th, A soup should be covered while cooking, served hot and eaten with "a quiet mind"—that final grace which makes every dish palatable.—Good Cheer.

PLUMS IN PLENTY.

Varieties That Can Not Well Be Surpassed in Productiveness.

Plum culture has not been a success with every grower in recent years, principally on account of the terrible work of the curculio, a most clumsy fellow generally, yet only too active when bent on the perpetuation of its own race. This insect has effectually prevented over-production of plums, and also deprived the majority of home growers of their home supply. With our present knowledge, and a number of varieties of plums which are practically curculio-proof to select from, we see no reason why the amateur should give up in despair, or let the curculio have all its own way. Many of our native sorts will produce full crops in spite of all insects, and so will the newly-introduced Japan plums, of which Ogon, Botan and Kelsey's have been tested quite extensively and found of great merit. We have seen Ogon trees loaded down with ripe fruit, every specimen of which bore the scarcely visible traces of from three to five of the ominous crescent marks, proving to our satisfaction that the fruit is able to outgrow the curculio sting and to take care of itself. The same was our experience with the De Soto plum, one of the natives from Minnesota. These two varieties can not very well be surpassed in productiveness.

The Ogon is a round plum (the California growers, who describe it as oval or egg-shaped, must have a different variety), of good size, a bright golden yellow, fine, sweet, but rather dry flesh; excellent for canning; ripens here toward the end of July; tree a vigorous grower; and apparently hardy.

De Soto is an American plum, of medium size, bright red color and good quality. Its productiveness is simply wonderful. Tree entirely hardy. As a blossom and pollen producer it is not surpassed by any sort with which we are acquainted, and this feature we consider of greatest value. Trees of this sort should be planted scatteringly among other varieties in every plum orchard; and it will then "bear and make bear" in abundance. The home grower who wants to make sure of an annual and abundant supply, should plant several trees together, selecting almost any of the best standard sorts, with at least one Ogon and one De Soto in the middle of the cluster of trees; or he may graft clons of various sorts, always including Ogon and De Soto, into limbs of one or more larger, hardy plum trees—a native sort always preferred.—Orchard and Garden.

VICTIMS OF BEANS.

A Boston Story Concerning the Truth of Which There Can Be No Doubt.

Quite a number of years ago a young German emigrated to Boston, and settled down here among the Yankees. He prospered, set up in business for himself, prospered some more, and after a time went back to Germany and brought over, from his native village, a young wife. The young couple, living and trading among the natives, became pretty thoroughly Americanized, but did not lose their romantic affection for their native land. Children were born to them; they still prospered in business, and after fifteen years the husband retired from trade. His heart still turning to Germany, he determined to take his family there, and place the children in school, leaving it to the future to determine whether he should remain the rest of his life in Germany, or return to Boston after the education of his six children had been well advanced.

The first day after the family had arrived at the parents' old home was Sunday, and the children with their father and mother, were grouped around their grandparents for breakfast. Instead of being served with the usual plates of Boston baked beans, the elder of the children was asked by the grandfather what he would like to have for breakfast.

"Some beans, if you please," said the boy in his best German.

The grandfather showed some surprise and said a little crustily that he was sorry that there were no beans. Then he turned to the next eldest, a girl, and asked her what she would like to have for her breakfast.

"I'd like some beans, please, grosswater," said the girl as a matter of course.

The grandfather appeared somewhat vexed, but asked the third child what he would have.

"Beans, please," said he.

The old gentleman here grew very angry. But he asked all the rest of the children in turn, down to the youngest tot, and all declared that they wanted some beans. And when they found that they could have none, the smallest children, overcome all at once by homesickness, began to cry, and the older ones looked very distressed and unhappy. Their grandparents rebuked the father and mother for not rearing their children with better manners. The parents protested that it was perfectly natural, and began to feel decidedly homesick themselves.

"It is no use," said the father to the mother, after the meal was over and they had retired to their chamber. "We have made a mistake, and neither we nor the children can be contented here. It isn't that we can't do without baked beans on Sunday morning, but that we have become such Yankees that we shall be homesick here."

"I think you are right," said the wife, "and now that we have made up our minds to that, hadn't we better go back to Boston and educate our children there?"

"I think we had," said the husband.

After a short stay, which nobody enjoyed, the family packed up their baggage and returned to Boston. And all because there were no baked beans on Sunday morning.—Boston Transcript.

LEARNING TO TALK.

The Process of Language Development in a Baby.

Exceedingly interesting is the process of language development in a babe. No study in anthropology is more fertile. The babe's first cries are purely instinctive and therefore purely animal. Its complaints are in and by pure labials and liquids—used with the open vowels. It does not use the genial tubercle; nor for many weeks the frontal brain. Its second list of sounds move farther back, and are g, goo, gutturals of the simplest sort. This g sound, with its natural associate !, becomes the well-known basis of all primitive languages—the clicking or glicking of Ainos and Hottentots. Next observe the babe as it watches your mouth and laughs at your cooing and your baby-talk. It finally sets its own articulating organs in motion and imitates you. The consequence soon is simple use of the frontal brain and the genial tubercle. The goo-goo is followed by eh-eh and che-che, and soon after by modulation. These are not only the first use of the human organs, but the first cerebrated sounds, as distinct from instinctive and inherited utterances. The steps toward a highly complex cerebrated language are thereafter rapidly taken.

We have to bear in mind that the babe organically follows historic evolution, and is an epitome of past progress. So also in his speech he moves on and on over the pathway of the past, and reviews it all. An intelligent child expresses approbation and disapprobation by the same sounds that are used by adult monkeys. The savage hardly uses cerebrated sounds at all. The refinement of languages has ever consisted in eliminating the animal inheritance. The child's use of gestures is also inherited. He does not need to learn to use his hands; only to secure muscular strength to direct them. His play at first is surely animal frolic, rejoicing in shouts and shrieks that later he does not find necessary to his enjoyment. His laughing and crying can only be understood as a language, as they are surely also in adults. The evolution of laughter would be a delightful branch of our topic, but a theme too much by itself. It is enough to note in passing that not only do animals laugh, but they smile. Laughter is even not uncommon among fowls. I have owned a cock that had a most distinct cachinnation.—Open Court.

NATURAL GAS FREE WITH EVERY LOT!

It will PAY YOU to read every word of this ADVERTISEMENT.

POWEL CROSLEY'S ADDITION TO THE CITY OF FINDLAY, OHIO.

Terms Very Easy, and within the reach of Smallest Investors.

POWEL CROSLEY, Cincinnati, O., does not do things by halves. He proposes to make this subdivision one of the most successful about Findlay, and to spare no expense to accomplish that end.

Findlay is having wonderful success—a larger growth in the same time than any other city in Ohio. Factories are multiplying, other business interests increasing proportionately; population 6,000 a year ago, now 13,000, estimated 25,000 at the close of year; 2,500 new houses built last year—5,000 more needed this year; 30 miles of street lines constructed, and others projected; streets improved in every direction; water-works begun; 7 steam railroads; schools, churches, fine residences and business blocks equal to any city of its size in the State. It is favorably known the world over.

Natural Gas is the magic wand that has caused and is causing this change. Eleven hundred feet down the drill taps the noiseless, cleanly, invisible agency which blesses mankind by giving free fuel and light unsurpassed for thousands of glass factories, rolling-mills, furnaces and other factories. Findlay is the housekeepers' paradise. No smoke, no soot, no ashes, no dust, no wood, no coal, nothing, in that line, disagreeable.

In the vicinity of the above subdivision is now being constructed one of the largest industrial establishments in the United States, the Kellogg Seamless Tube and Manufacturing Company's factory, to manufacture seamless gas, water and other pipe, intending to invest $500,000 in cash and employ 1,000 men. Other factories are not far away; and Mr. Crosley is arranging for two factories on the above tract, which will employ at least 200 men. Other factories will be erected this year in the immediate vicinity; a street railroad is projected along an Street in front of this property. A station will be erected at Kellogg, on the T., C. & S. R. R., eight minutes' ride from Findlay, and trains will be run to accommodate all comers. If every lot on this tract had a house on it, they would all be occupied this year.

A gas well of large capacity has just been drilled upon this subdivision, also a water well through the rock.

This telegram speaks for itself:

"FINDLAY, O., March 21, 1888.

"POWEL CROSLEY, Cincinnati, O.:

"Well finished. You have a five-million gasser.

"D. T. DAVIS."

As soon as the weather will permit, work will be commenced upon grading the streets, planting shade trees, constructing sidewalks and laying gas pipe from the gas well, so as to give each lot the benefit of natural gas for fuel and light free, and these improvements will be pushed rapidly to completion. Contracts have been entered into for these improvements.

No such offer was ever before made in the history of real estate transactions!

This tract is in the gas belt, and each lot has an inexhaustible supply of gas beneath; it is on the main avenue leading out of the city, and of easy access to two railroads. It is a beautiful tract on the ridge dividing the north from the south flow of water. Not one bad lot in the whole addition. It is located between the north corporate limits of the city and the Nickel-Plate Railroad.

Notwithstanding all of these advantages, these lots are temporarily on the market, on the following easy terms, placing them within the reach of all:

Price—Main Street lots, $400 each; other lots, $250 each; each lot 40x140 to 14 feet.

Terms of payment—One-tenth cash at the time lots are taken, and two per cent. on Monday of each week following until all is paid, without interest. Liberal discount for cash.

Title bond will be given until one-half or more is paid, then warrantee deed will be delivered and mortgages taken to secure unpaid portions.

An unequaled opportunity for Manufacturers, large or small; Workmen, skilled or unskilled, who desire employment at remunerative wages the year round; every body, who want to invest on easy terms in property that will undoubtedly enable them to realize large profits within a very short time.

Inform undersigned, in person or by letter (inclosing draft or P. O. Order for $10 or $40), of the lot or lots by number you want. Should the lots you select be taken, you will be informed and given further opportunity to select. Plats of the property and full particulars sent to all who are interested.

These lots should all be taken quickly. FIRST COME FIRST SERVED. Call on or address

SATURDAY, APRIL 28, 1888.

An election was held in Lonaconing, Allegany county, Tuesday to determine whether or not the town shall be incorporated. Incorporation was defeated, the vote being for incorporation 126, against 289.

A. S. Abell, senior proprietor of the Baltimore Sun, died at 3 o'clock Thursday morning, in the 82nd year of his age. He had been confined to the house for two weeks, and the cause of his death was decay of vital powers. His funeral took place Saturday afternoon, Rev. Mr. Hodges, of St. Paul's Protestant Episcopal church officiating.

The New York Tribune in treating the Louisiana election as another triumph of fraud that has prevailed in that State for some years past very felicitously remarks that "it is never amiss, nor altogether a waste of words to tell the country in plain Anglo-Saxon that these returns are lies, and that these elections are but successive steps in a great crime against self-government. Many of the Democrats who most strongly deny it are perfectly aware that it is the truth. They know, beyond any question, that neither opposing Republican votes nor the strife of factions among Louisiana Democrats can make any difference with the returns, which are sent in as party leaders may direct. The Republicans await their opportunity. Sooner or later it will come, and then a single fair election and honest return in Louisiana will prove that the party of crime has counted that State by fraud for all these years."

"The size of both the Democratic vote and majority," says the Tribune, "is prima facie proof of gross fraud. With three parishes estimated, Nichols has 112,520 votes and 65,100 majority. His majority now is 2,620 larger than Cleveland's entire vote in 1884, which was only 62,540. It was even a few votes larger than Hancock's total vote in 1880—65,067. It cannot be claimed that this was the result of conversions from the Republicans, because the Republican vote, as stated, is even a hair's-breadth larger than Blaine's in 1884, and considerably larger than Garfield's in 1880. These are the figures: 1880, 38,016; 1884, 46,347; 1888, 47,460. The Democratic vote, which fell off 2,527 votes in 1884 as compared with 1880, has increased 50,000 votes in 1888 over 1884 in a total vote of 170,000, and that in an election which in spite of the interest attaching to the local quarrel in New Orleans, is less important than the Presidential election. No unprejudiced person can suppose for a moment that this is an honest increase. In fact, Democratic newspapers of the franker sort openly admit fraud."

Maryland Crop Report.

The Sun's Washington correspondent says of the crops throughout the State: "The April crop report of the department of agriculture gives the following as to wheat in Maryland: Winter wheat was put in in fine condition, owing to late rains between September 20 and October 10. Nearly all was more or less fertilized and germinated well. It has had an unusual covering of snow, and its condition is promising. The same may be said of rye.

"County Correspondents report the following details: Caroline: In splendid condition. St. Mary's: Came up well; healthy and looks well in every respect. Dorchester: Soil was dry; looks fine. Carroll: Some land was insufficiently cultivated before seeding. Montgomery: Fallow wheat full average; that on corn stubble not as good. Worcester: Too dry until late in fall; fair against very unfavorable winter and early spring. Garrett: Generally good. Calvert: Looks badly on low land, owing to the excessive wet; fair average on rolling land. Charles: Looks well. Harford: Very favorable up to March 10, but since the late blizzard wheat does not look so well. Anne Arundel: Came up healthy and promptly; condition 100 on good land. Kent: Better than at this time last year. Allegany: Soil very dry in fall; present growth is good. Prince George's: Backward, but looks healthy. Somerset: Early seeding on undrained land is fairly good; late seeding on poorly drained soil is badly winter-killed. Talbot: Wheat passed through winter apparently uninjured save on low or wet land; had fair average appearance, but during the past two weeks suffered from excess of wet on low land. Wicomico: Damaged by excess of water-washing, heaving, etc.; four weeeks ago looked fair. Washington: Very promising. Baltimore: Dry in October; very good growth.

"The State agent for Maryland sends the following as to the condition of stock: Maryland.—Stock of all kinds are looking well and are receiving better feed and shelter than formerly. A great change has taken place of late years in this respect. No complaint of any disease is reported. Sheep have been free from all disease and are looking well. Destruction by dogs has been much reduced the last year through the use of bells and vigilance on the part of flock masters. Hogs have slowly increased, and no diseases are reported. Cattle have been free from all complaints, with the exception of a few cases of pleuro-pneumonia, and are looking remarkably well."

OUR WASHINGTON LETTER.

(From our Regular Correspondent.)

WASHINGTON, April 23d, 1888.—Senator Sherman's boom has been making rapid headway for the past few days, and his friends are now predicting his nomination on the first ballot. They claim that he is already sure of 312 votes out of the 411 necessary to nominate. Representative McKinley, who has just returned from Ohio, is very enthusiastic over Mr. Sherman's prospect of receiving the nomination, which he considers as absolutely sure. He says the endorsement of Mr. Sherman by the Ohio Convention was not merely formal. It was earnest, and they meant it. They were enthusiastic in their support of Sherman, and no man opposing him would have dared to put up his head in the convention. He says further, that there was no foundation whatever for the talk of Sherman's endorsement being lukewarm and the result of great labor. Mr. McKinley thinks that Mr. Sherman will make the strongest possible candidate.

The tariff debate which was begun in the House of Representatives last Tuesday seems to have had the effect of putting the members of that body to work. They have since then passed the Indian and Pension appropriation bills and devoted one day to the consideration of the River and Harbor bill. Tomorrow the tariff debate is to be resumed, and it will probably be kept up with short intermissions for at least two months. If the Mills bill were to be voted on at once it would probably be defeated by a very small majority, but what will happen after two months of "chinning" I am not prepared to guess.

The Senate is away ahead of the House in the amount of work so far performed during the present session. The Senate has passed 831 bills while the House has passed only 425.

Quite a number of Republican Senators went to New York to attend the funeral of ex Senator Conkling.

Mr. Blaine's idea of a Congress of American Nations will be a fact next year. The bill providing for it and instructing the President to request the Government of the Republics of Mexico, of Central and South America and Hayti and the Empire of Brazil to send representatives to a conference to meet in this city in or near April, 1889 has been passed by both Houses of Congress.

It is stated here that the President has fully decided to appoint Mr. Phelps, of Vermont, our present Minister to England, Chief Justice of the United Seates, but that the Irish Americans having made such a vigorous protest against it, he has promised not to make the appointment for the present.

The Fisheries treaty will be rejected. The Senate will spend a portion of this week in discussing it behind closed doors, and its formal rejection will probably take place before the end of the week.

Hon. D. B. Henderson, of Iowa, during the debate in the House on the pension appropriation bill, took occasion to pay his respects to Commissioner of Pensions Black and his methods. Mr. Henderson, in speaking of the administration of the Mexican Pension law by the Pension Office, said: "So rapid is the Pension Bureau in recognizing claims under this law, that pensions are allowed before even a claim is put in, and certificates are issued when the beneficiary did not know he was a claimant." In proof of this assertion, he sent to the clerks' desk and had read an article in a Chicago paper to the effect that the Commissioner of Pensions had ordered a pension certificate sent to Col. W. B. Morrison, notwithstanding that he was informed that Col. Morrison's name was not on the list of applicants. The certificate was returned to the Chicago pension agent by Col. Morrison, accompanied by quite a terse letter, Mr. Henderson, continuing his remarks, said: "Commissioner Black stands convicted on Democratic authority of violating the terms of the law, and simply issuing a certificate to a Democratic chief, who was too high and too clean to become a party to the transaction. This man, who entered upon the discharge of his duties with heaven-erected face, like a saint, is caught in a Democratic trap. He has got lower down in struggling for political influence than any bureau officer I have ever known."

The House has passed bills establishing a department of labor; and providing for arbitration of disputes between common-carriers and their employes.

A bill has been introduced in the Senate to grant the widow of Chief Justice Waite a pension of $5,000 a year.

The Louisiana Election.

The news that comes from Louisiana any this morning is in exact accord with our predictions of yesterday. The tremendous party pressure brought to bear on McEnery and his friends made them weaken and their promise to insure a fair election and an honest count, in the outlaying parishes, at any rate, was not kept. We are told in the dispatches of today that all through north Louisiana the Republican candidates and independents had been "advised" to withdraw from the canvass and "the negroes voted the straight Democratic ticket to an extent that surprised the Democrats." We all know the kind of "advice" that is given in such cases. It is a sort that has been given before in Louisiana and Mississippi, and other Southern States. It simply meant, and the negroes knew that it meant, that if the Republicans in those prishes attempted to vote, they would do it at the peril of their lives, and that if they succeeded in getting their ballots in they would never be counted. It is rather discouraging to vote under such conditions, and the majority for Nicholls in the northern parishes, which are normally overwhelmingly Republican, was doubtless very large.

In the city of New Orleans, where "advice" of this kind cannot be so effectively followed up, the opposition seems to have made a determined fight, and the full returns may show that the Reformers have carried the city. The "Young Democracy" in New Orleans had just as many shotguns and revolvers as the "regulars," and were able to get in their votes and have them counted.

It is a queer form of government that Louisiana has at present. The "New South" feeling does not seem to have made much progress there, and the millennium is yet a long way off. But the plucky fight made by the Republicans, under the able leadership of ex-Gov. Warmoth, has not been altogether without result. It has, for one thing, proved conclusively that on a fair vote Louisiana is a Republican State, and, for another thing, has shown once more the methods by which the Democrats keep control of a "solid South."—N. Y. Mail and Express, April 18.

Gen. Howard Gets Left.

Washington Republican 24th.

It has been practically decided at the War Department to assign Maj. Gen. Crook to the command of the division of the Missouri, with headquarters at Chicago, and an order to that effect will probably be issued in a day or two. It is said that Maj. Gen. Howard, commanding the division of the Pacific, desired to be transferred to the Missouri, but that it was found that the interests of the service could be subserved better by retaining him at San Francisco, and assigning the new major general to the division of the Missouri, the duties of which command have been performed by Lieut. Gen. Sherican at Washington from the time that Maj. Gen. Terry was granted leave of absence. The contemplated assignment makes no change whatever necessary in the divisions of the Atlantic and Pacific.

In Memory of the Late A. S. Abell.

BALTIMORE, April 24.—The city council of this city has passed resolutions in memory of the late A. S. Abell, recognizing the loss of a citizen who modestly portrayed during a long and useful life the best characteristics of the highest type of American citizenship. The resolutions will be engrossed and presented to the family of Mr. Abell by the mayor and a committee of the council.

Robert Garrett's Foreign Tour.

BALTIMORE, MD., April 24.—Letters received here under date of Cairo, Egypt, March 31, report Robert Garrett much improved in health, travel having had a very beneficial effect on his mind. The party made an extended trip up the Nile. They were to sail from Alexandria April 11th for Athens. From there they will go to Constantinople, after which they visit Russia for a short time. They expect to return to America in September

Review of Trade.

NEW YORK, April 20.—R. G. Dun & Co., in their weekly trade review, say: There are higher prices in speculation but the business outlook is favorable. Stocks are stronger and breadstuffs rising with oil and provisions. But purchases for consumption are so restricted that almost every important branch of manufacture feels the check, and the volume of business recorded in bank clearings outside of New York is smaller by 6 per cent than at the same time last year, with a decline of over 2½ per cent at New York.

Prices of manufactured products and the chief materials tend downward, so that in spite of a material advance in speculative prices since January 1, and in vegetable, the average of all prices is a shade lower than at the opening of the year.

Reports of injury to wheat evidence that the backward spring has limited sowing, and the belief that the death of the German Emperor will lead to war; all influence the breadstuffs market to higher prices.

Reports from the interior points, with scarcely an exception, represent the money market fairly or fully supplied, though brisk demand is noted at Detroit, Milwaukee and Denver.

The business failures during the last seven days number for the United States 177, and for Canada 18, or a total of 195, as compared with 222 last week, and 199 for the corresponding week of 1887.

Contingent fund	3,571 72
Total	$43,302 94

To pay this amount it was ascertained that the taxable property of the county amounted to $3,936,631.00, which at $1.10 on each hundred dollars, the County taxation will make the above amount of $43,302.94; deducting $155,667.00 for corporations paying the State tax direct to the State Treasurer, leaves the basis for State tax $3,780,964, which is fixed at 173⅓c. on each $100.00, making the State tax $6,711.21, which, added to the County, makes for county and State purposes $50,014.15.

A New Green Grocery.

Messrs. Chas. F. White & Co. have rented the Brooks building, on Railroad street, near the depot, Oakland, Md., and will in a few days have on hand a full supply of vegetables, fruits, fish, canned goods, and everything usually kept in a first-class green grocery. Mr. White, the active member of the firm, will have charge of the store, and as he is a very clever and obliging gentleman, we feel sure the enterprise will prove profitable.

About Trespassing.

There are many persons who imagine they can cross a field or enter an orchard, fish in a stream which is the property of another, and do many things of this character which cannot be resisted by the owner of the land. There is a popular idea that mere walking over a field is not trespass. It possibly may not be damage to such property, but it is a misdemeanor to do it which is punished by law. The season is coming when the people will be sauntering into the country, seeking the suburbs for a walk, to such as will do so, as well as to all others, it will be safe for them to understand the law of trespass. Persons guilty of trespass are liable to fine or imprisonment.

The Latest Mode of Swindling Farmers.

The Bedford Inquirer says: "The Bohemian oats swindle having been pretty thoroughly exposed by the newspapers, the swindlers who make their living by getting up schemes to cheat farmers are using the hayfork game. This consists in storing a number of forks in the barn of some farmer, whom they tell that if he will take care of them and sell them he shall have a commission of from 30 to 75 per cent. On this representation the farmer is induced to sign a receipt, 'merely as a matter of form,' and in a few weeks the receipt turns up in the hands of some other party and proves an agreement to pay about four prices for the forks.

Every Night.

F. G. Hyde will have have auction every night during court. Don't fail to attend. Goods to be auctioned are good quality and good styles. All kinds of Jewelry, Musical Merchandise, Watches, Clocks, etc., will be sold. Nothing bidden in. Everything put up will go whether it bring much or little. Also two organs, with book and stool, at wholesale price, $55.00 each. Both of them are excellent instruments, guaranteed for 5 years. For tone, fine finish and style they cannot be excelled, and are equal in every respect to any organ in the country costing twice the money. The organs will not be sold at auction.

Hoping to be favored with your orders for anything you may wish in my line, (during court,) I remain,

Very truly yours,

F. G. HYDE,
Jeweler, Oakland, Md.

N. B.—Please bear in mind that my prices defy competition, not only during court but all the time.

Death of Mary C. Friend.

A heavy gloom has been cast over the hearts of the people in this community by the death of Mary C. Friend, who has been afflicted for several months, but at last she was released from her afflictions on Sunday, April the 15th, to rest with her Redeemer. She was a member of the M. E. Church for nine years, where she was a faithful worker. She said death was sweet to her; she feared it not, for her peace was made with God. We know she is safe from sin and sorrow. She was a blooming youth, loved and respected by all who knew her. We know her parents, brothers and sisters mourn her loss, but she is not lost; she has gone before, to rest for evermore. We ask them to be wise and choose the good part that Mary has chosen.

The funeral was conducted by Rev. A. S. Arnett, at the house. Her remains were laid in the cemetery at Sand Spring, where her body will sleep the last sleep.

Loving friends be wise and dry straightway every weeping eye, what ye lift upon the bier is not worth a wistful tear; 'tis an empty sea shell, one out of which the pearl has gone.

Asleep in Jesus! blessed sleep,
From which none ever waked to weep;
A calm and undisturbed repose,
Unbroken by the dread of foes.

Accident.

Weather is cool and we have had snow nearly every day this week.

Farmers are very busy plowing and sowing oats.

Miss Martha Harden has returned from Salisbury, Pa., and expects to open a school here on the 1st of May.

Mr. George Durst has moved into his new house.

Mr. Fred Burkhart has moved up street to the Christ Snyder house.

Mr. Christ Snyder moved into the house formerly known as the S. E. Boyer house.

Miss Sophia Ault has just received a full line of millinery goods.

Miss Rebecca Harden has left for Salisbury.

Miss Lizzie Kahl is having a new fence erected around her lot.

Miss Katie George has returned from Baltimore to attend her sister's funeral.

Measles are still around here.

Our Sunday school is progressing nicely and we were glad to have Mr. Wm. Hinebaugh, our old superintendent, with us last Sunday.

A child of Mr. Hayman's is very ill at present.

Mr. Fred Ault had been very ill but has somewhat recovered.

A certain man here made his garden and planted his vegetables. The other day he planted his peas. They were few, but were of extra quality. One of his hens had been accustomed to go into his garden, and he well marked which one it was. On his return to the garden he found that his peas were scratched out. He at once began to search for the hen, found her, cut off her head and began to search for his peas. He at length found them, washed them, and again, for the second time planted his peas—fact. J.

Swanton.

Mr. James Baldwin is at work for James Beard at Frankville, putting a foundation under his storeroom.

Mr. Daniel A. Beckman, of Swanton, and Miss Nethkin, of Elk Garden, were married last week. We wish them success and happiness through life.

There will be the largest delivery of fruit trees here this spring ever made in a single season.

Our agent, Mr. Alex. Fairall, has had the platform extended at the station, which is quite an improvement.

Mr. C. T. West is clearing between the railroad and county road, and intends to plant it in grapes and small fruits.

Mr. Hugh Mahlia, formerly of this District but now a resident of the oil regions of Ohio, and Miss Maggie Healy were married at the Catholic church at Oakland Wednesday. The parents of the bride gave a supper to a host of friends. The bride was the recipient of many presents. We extend our congratulations.

HOOSIER.

A Big Demonstration at Parkersburg.

The Merchants and Manufacturers Association of Parkersburg have made arrangements for an imposing street pageant on Thursday Evening, May 3rd, consisting of moving tableaux and scenic display, illuminated by electric and calcium lights, illustrating the progress and manufactures of the city. Some forty floats have already been secured, and over one thousand men are expected to be in line.

To accommodate those desiring to witness the Demonstration, the B. & O. R. R. Co. will sell excursion tickets to Parkersburg and return at one fare for the round trip, from all Ticket stations west of and including Keyser, and intermediate stations between Benwood, Morgantown and Grafton.

The tickets will be sold for all trains on Wednesday and Thursday, May 2d and 3d, and good for return trip until Friday, May 4th, inclusive.

Excursion to California.

Free Sleeping Car Excursion to California, Oregon and Colorado points will leave May 7th, from Delaware Ave. Depot, Wilmington, Del., via B. & O. R. R. at 5:40 P. M., Baltimore 8:30 P. M., Washington 9:45 P. M., with only one change of cars at Kansas City.

For further information and reservation of berths apply to H. A. Miller, Passenger and Ticket agent, B. & O. R. R., Wilmington, Del., to D. Bride, Pass. Agent, Central Building Baltimore, Md., or to nearest Ticket Agent B. & O. R. R.

A Good Washing Machine.

Mr. E. D. Kepner, of Oakland, has taken the agency for the "Lovell Family Washer," pronounced the best washer in use. Can be attached to any tub. It will wash clean anything that can be washed by hand, with half the labor and in half the time. The springs are of Bessemer steel, and will never wear out. Price only $5.00. Mr. Kepner will have the washer on exhibition during court. 4 21 3t

Artesian Wells.

Good pure water is a necessity in every household. Drilled wells furnish the best, purest and cheapest. Kemphfer, Jamison & Co. will drill you a well and guarantee it, at the lowest possible figure. Address or call on them at Oakland, Md.

Elkins.

There was another wreck on the West Va. Central Monday evening. Four or five freight cars were thrown down in the river, below Blaine. The company proposes to shorten the sections and put more men on them. A wise step, but should have been taken much sooner.

Mr. Williams, a miner living at Fairfax, was killed last Wednesday while opening a new coal mine close here, by the earth falling in upon him. He leaves a wife and several children.

Mr. W. R. Neville lost his only child, a bright little girl of nearly three and a half years, last week.

Mrs. Jerry Browning was taken seriously ill Monday evening with hemorrhage of the lungs.

There are a few cases of whooping cough and measles in town.

Mr. G. W. Moon went to Philadelphia last week. We understand he intends going into the book business. Good books and plenty of them should be found in every family, but bad books, like bad company, should be strictly avoided, especially by the young.

Mr. J. E. Shillingourg has embarked again in the fruit-tree agency.

AN ACT

To provide for the appointment of two superintendents to supervise and control the repairs and improvements of a public county road in Garrett county, known as the Legislative road leading from the West end of the covered bridge over Youghlogheny river, at Friendsville, in Garrett county, along the West side of said Youghlogheny river to Selbysport, as now traveled, and thence with said county road by Guard's store to the Pennsylvania line, and to authorize the County Commissioners of Garrett county to make a levy for the repairs and improvements of said road.

SECTION 1. Be it enacted by the General Assembly of Maryland, That the repairs and improvement and supervision of the public county road known as the Legislative road leading from the West end of the covered bridge over Youghlogheny river at Friendsville, in Garrett county, along the West side of said Youghlogheny river to Selbysport, as now traveled, and thence with said county road by Guard's store to the Pennsylvania line, be and the same is hereby placed under the charge and care of Joshua M. Friend and George Dunham.

SEC. 2 And be it enacted, That the County Commissioners of Garrett county be, and the same are hereby authorized and required at the time of making the annual levy in the year eighteen hundred and eighty eight, to levy the sum of eight hundred dollars in the hands of said superintendents, provided for by this act for the repair of said road heretofore designated and to be expended equally by said superintendent upon said road.

SEC. 3 And be it enacted, That said superintendents shall before entering upon their duties, execute a bond in the same manner that road supervisors in Garrett county are required to bond.

SEC. 4. And be it enacted, That George Dunham shall have charge of that part of said road which passes through lands supposed to be owned by George H. Williams, that Joshua M. Friend shall have charge of the remainder of said road, and that each shall on or before the first day of September, A. D. eighteen hundred and eighty-nine, render a specific account to the County Commissioners of their expenditures upon said road, and shall return their vouchers for such expenditures, and said superintendents shall each be allowed as an item of said expense, the sum of two dollars per day for their services whilst engaged upon said road.

SEC. 5. And be it enacted, That should either of said superintendents fail to qualify as required or should either resign or die, his duties shall devolve upon the other, and should both fail to qualify, resign, or die, the County Commissioners shall appoint two superintendents to take their places with powers obligatory.

SEC. 6. And be it enacted, That all labor employed upon said road by said superintendents shall be paid at the rate allowed by road supervisors on other county roads in said county.

SEC. 7. And be it enacted, That this Act shall take effect from the date of its passage.

MISSING.

Have you seen my sailor boy, as you came across the sea?
Have you seen my sailor boy, with the laughing eyes of blue,
With the sunlight on his hair, and his face so young and fair,
And the smile he used to wear, brave and true?

O, he kissed me on the cheek as he sailed away to sea,
Sailed away from Gloster Town, and I never saw him more.
But the ships they come and 'go, and the tides they ebb and flow,
And the waves are moaning low on the shore.

Ah! they told me he was dead, but I know it is not true;
For he comes to me at night, when the world is all asleep,
And he speaks to me by day, when the tempests sweep the bay,
And the billows are at play on the deep.

For he said he would come back, and he never broke his word—
Have you seen my sailor boy? He is coming soon, I know,
I would go to him to-day, if I only knew the way,
Though the grave before me lay, I would go.

HARASSED BY AGENTS.

Woes of a Weary Woman on Her Busy Day.

The Female Agent With Corsets and Hose Supporters—The Masculine Dealer Who Tried to Dispose of "Social Etiquette."

It was just after Christmas that I got round so that I had a day to run my candles. That was a great day for agents, too. Agents! I should think so. Seems to me as if all the agents in New England took a bee line for Potsville.

I'd hurried 'round and got the washin' an' ironin' an' a lot o' bakin' done up the fust o' the week an' Wednesday I got up early, ready to make sassage and run candles.

I'd got my fat on, an' my meat ready to chop, when there came a rap at the settin'-room door. Before I could get there, however, it opened, an' in walked a fattish kind of a woman, carryin' a sort of leather case in one hand.

"How d' ye do ma'am?" she asked, talkin' as if her life depended on it, an' never waitin' for an answer. 'Ain't it a nice day? How's your health? Are your folks well? Did I understand from a lady up the road here that you had seven children? How are they all? Oh! you aren't the one? Never mind, I have here, ma'am"—she'd been unrollin' her leather case all the time, and here took out a roll of something—"I have here a new style of corset that gives a most stylish air to the stoutest figger. This is the most remarkable corset ever produced in this age or any other. Why, it makes a stout person look slim as a girl, or a slim one look nice an' plump! I should advise you as a friend, ma'am, to buy this corset. It has an electric spring in the back that will keep you warm in the coldest day and so equalizes the temperature as to prevent your becoming overheated in the warmest weather. It has galvanized iron springs in front that are so comfortable you'll hate to take them off at night, while they impart a grace and beauty to the female figger that is unequalled in the history of corsets in the past. Just let me put one on you. You've no idea how it will improve your figger. Why——"

Just here I smelt my fat burnin' and rushed out there in hot haste; but she followed.

"It will impart a truly marvelous charm to your manner, and you will be admired by everybody. You know men just love an elegant figger."

She said this last in such a lackadaisacal way it maddened me, and I broke in:

"Men!" says I. "Men! an' I a married woman! What business have I goin' round incitin' the admiration of men? Hain't I a pardner? Don't he admire me just as much in a loose calico sack as he would in a set of electric spring, galvanized sheet-iron corsets? I don't want to hear no more such talk, an' I won't, neither."

She see she was on the wrong tack, so she begun over again.

"Well, you wear corsets? All ladies do, of course. We sell——"

"No, ma'am," says I. "I don't wear corsets, nor never did. I put on some once, an' felt as if I'd been run into a plaster-o'-paris mold, such as they put on folks with spinal an' kindred diseases."

"O, but these you could wear, I'm sure!" she went on, determined to get round me some way. "You wouldn't be without them a single day if you realized how they would improve your figger."

"My figger," I went on calmly pickin' up my choppin' tray, "is just as the Lord made it. If He'd wanted a galvanized trap around me, He'd a built one there to begin with. So long as He and my Johnson are satisfied with it, I be."

She see it wasn't any use to talk corset to me any longer, so she got out some tape stuff and begun again:

"Let me sell you some hose supporters, then."

"Hoes-supporters," says I. "Good land! what won't they get up next? Why, John allers keeps his hoes hung up in the shed chamber through the winter, till plantin'-time; and then he supports them himself—except when the neighbors come up an' lean over the fence to talk politics. I don't think he'd think necessary to buy any hoes-supporters."

The woman laughed and said in a good-natured way that she guessed we couldn't trade much, an' she'd better go. I didn't dispute her, an' soon was alone once more with my sassages an' candles. I kind o' wish afterwards I'd asked her how they hitched them hoes-supporters to the hoes, an' how they worked.

The fire had got down, an' I hadn't more'n got it fixed up an' another dozen candles run when there was another knock on the side door. This time it was a little lean fellow carryin' a mop-stick. He began without any preliminaries, so to speak:

"Here, madam, you see an entirely new style of mop. It has several advantages over the mop of long ago, one of which is that it screws the rags, or whatever material your mop is to be composed of, into the frame itself. Then, by turning this small crank, you can wring out your mop without putting your hands in the water. Isn't that a triumph of mechanical skill in the line of mops, madam?" An' he flourished his mop-stick in the air as a singin'-master does his baton.

"When you will bring me a mop," says I, "that will git the water on the stove, heat it, take it off again, an' mop up the floor nice and clean, I'll buy one. Until then, I shall stick to my old mop. You might as well travel right on, as I shan't be likely to trade any to-day."

"But, this mop, madam! You will always regret it if you neglect this opportunity to purchase what I may style the great ultimatum of mop. Why, just look at this mop-stick, madam!"

"I'll look at this broom-stick, an' to some purpose, too," says I, "if you don't take yourself off. I'll defend myself from corset-peddlers an' walkin' mop-sticks, or I'll know the reason why. I declare, here it is most noon, an' my sassages hardly begun."

He looked sca't an' sayin' he'd better go, he took himself off. He hadn't got out o' the yard tho', before I saw a tall old gentleman with a large square case in his hand, comin' in at the gate. He walked round to the back-door, and right into the kitchen.

"Don't let me disturb you, ma'am, at all," he began. "I merely wish to call your attention to this paper, for which I am getting subscribers. It is doubtless the most entertaining and instructive paper published in the United States to-day; and besides that, see these magnificent chromos! Six of them when you subscribe, and four steel plates like this every month afterward. Isn't that a magnificent offer? Why, this picture alone is worth more than the price of the paper—which is only fifty cents a year. There, isn't that a magnificent likeness, madam?"

"Who of?" I inquired in cool tones, as he held up a very high-colored picture of a man.

"Who!" he fairly yelled. "Is it possible that I behold a woman who does not know the face of our lamented Garfield? Why, lots of folks have this same picture richly framed and hung in their elegant parlors, and it is mistaken for an oil portrait. And you do not know that face?"

"Not that one," I answered. "I've seen good pictures of Mr. Garfield, and I have one I set consid'able by myself. But, good land!" says I, warmin' up to the subject, "didn't this country suffer enough in all his long sickness an' death, in the mighty strain of agony an' suspense, afterward, in the sickenin' trial of Guiteau, an' since them times, without havin' them horrid caricatures scattered broadcast through the land sence? I ain't never seen but a few oil paintings; but I pity anybody that ain't got brains enough to tell that daub from one. Why, I could paint a better one with house paints an' lard oil. I've been in the art gallery down to St. Johnsbury, an' I've seen enough there, an' I don't hanker after newspaper chromos very much. An' when I see a fifty-cent newspaper g'vin' away three or four dollars' worth of paintin's every week, I think there's a fraud somewhere, either among the publishers or the agents that canvass for 'em."

But just as I said the last words the door slammed. I'd been standing at my work with my back to him; an' when I looked out of the window he was goin' down the road as if he was after the doctor.

But this wasn't all. After dinner, just as I'd got my dishes washed an' put away, an' was gettin' my candle-moulds around again, I heard another knock.

"My fat was gettin' too hot again, so I took it off the stove an' set it on a chair to cool. Then I wiped my hands an' opened the door for as spruce a yonng feller as ever was in the town of Pottsville, Vt. He wore the tightest pants I ever see on a man yet, and he was perfumed up with musk awful strong. He skipped into the kitchen in a genteel way, saying:

"My good woman, don't let me interrupt you a single moment in your customary vocations. I have here a book on Social Etiquette, which shows one how to behave under all circumstances, from the most ordinary every-day life up to the most trying, exacting and wearying social position you may ever be called on to fill. You may think this of little consequence at the present moment, but suppose your husband should be suddenly elected to Congress and you be required to consort with the first lady of the land! But I will not talk; I will read you a few extracts, if you'll excuse me."

An' before I could say a word, or knew what he was doing, down he sat square into that pan of tallow.

I jumped towards him, but before I could get there, he'd give one long scream and rushed out of the house, drippin' tallow all over the floor and across my new settin'room rag-carpet.

It was an awful cold day, and the minute he got out of doors the tallow hardened, so that, as he ran down the road, he looked for all the world as as though somebody had drawn a map of Europe on his reverse, or mebbe it was an oil painting.

He didn't seem to remember that it wasn't etiquette to rush from a person's house without saying good by; but I presume, if he had stopped to consult his book, he would have done different.

Any way I couldn't blame him; and I haven't been pestered so much with agents since.—Helen M. Winslow, in American Magazine.

A MANIAC ENGINEER.

Thrilling Adventure of a Northern Pacific Railroad Conductor.

"People may well shiver when they read of a railroad accident," said a well-known official on the Northern Pacific, to a reporter as he drew his chair nearer the office stove. 'I will never forget the narrow escape I had along with fifty others. It was in the spring of '85. I at the time occupied a position as conductor of a passenger train, with George Robinson, engineer. We had both been courting Sue Coleman, one of the prettiest girls on the line, and I had summoned spunk enough to propose, being accepted. The day after our engagement was announced George, who always was a strange fellow, acted rather queer. Several times he complained of severe pains in his head, but I laughed it off, and he took his run as usual. When nearly two-thirds of the journey was completed we stopped at X——. Here a dispatch was handed me which read:

"'Side track train for extra is due in thirty minutes.'

"The message had been received five minutes previous, which let me twenty-five minutes in which to switch off. The fireman, thinking its good opportunity, had stepped upon the platform to obtain a plug of tobacco. Suddenly the train gave a leap forward (which nearly threw me off my feet and upset several passengers), and began to move rapidly down the track. I sprang to the bell rope and pulled it violently, but all in vain; faster and faster we went. I could hear the wheels click over the rails, every inch carrying half a hundred souls to almost certain death. Hastening to the engine, thinking some accident had happened, I mounted the tender, and a strange sight met my gaze. There, in the door of the cab, stood George, an iron bar used to break coal in his hand.

"'I knew you would come,' he said; 'you have robbed me of Sue, and are now waiting to take my life. Come on, I am waiting for you;' and he raised the bar in a threatening attitude. Here, indeed, was a dilemma. We were dashing down grade at the rate of forty miles an hour at the same time the extra was approaching at an equal rate of speed on the same track, while my engine cab was guarded by a maniac with a dangerous weapon. All these thoughts passed like lightning through my mind, and I instantly decided upon a course of action. Throwing up my hands and exclaiming with a look of horror I could well assume: 'Look! Look there, George!' He turned his head, and as he did so I sprang forward, my feet striking him full in the breast. He fell against the seats in the cab and grappled me. We went up against the boiler, over on the seats, and finally to the floor. As good luck would have it I fell on top. Seizing him by the throat in spite of his struggles I choked him nearly insensible; then, springing to my feet, I opened the whistle valve and reversed the engine.

"I was none too soon, however, for rounding a curve, I saw the train rapidly approaching. Luckily they had observed my signals, and the trains came together with a slight jar, doing no damage. The extra contained several railroad officials, and Robinson was placed in their car, while I backed down to X——. Poor George never recovered; physicians pronounced it softening of the brain, and last year he died in the asylum. As for me, well, you see where I am to-day, and this, exhibiting an elegant gold watch, 'was given me by the passengers of that train, but, whenever I read of a terrible collision, it calls to mind that fearful ride with the maniac engineer."—G. H. Richardson, in Yankee Blade.

A Most Unkind Cut.

There is a slight misunderstanding between McGinnis and his wife's mother. It came about in this way: Hostetter McGinnis is thinking about taking a trip to El Paso for his health, but his mother-in-law has been telling him that there is danger of his being scalped by Indians, and that he had better stay right in Austin.

"Nonsense," replied Hostetter McGinnis, "there used to be Indians on the El Paso road, but they have all been driven off. I don't believe there is an Indian in the whole country."

"Well, well," replied his wife's mother, "when you get out on the plains, and one of those wild beasts come at you yelling and whooping, then you will think of me."

"I don't doubt it; any thing of that kind is calculated to make me think of you," replied Hostetter McGinnis, and now the entente cordiale has been spilled and there is a coolness between them.—Texas Siftings.

No Cause for Alarm.

"Have I done any thing to offend you, darling?" he asked, brokenly. "To-day you passed me without bowing, and now you sit there with such an air of hauteur and pride that——"

"George," interrupted the girl with the unbending air, but in her voice there was a cadence sweeter than music in the night, "I have a stiff neck."—N. Y. Sun.

CHILDREN'S CLOTHES.

Charming Nainsook and Pique Dresses for Boys and Girls.

The first short dresses worn by children from six months to one year old (by boys and girls alike) are yoke slips of nainsook made just short enough to escape being trod on as the child walks. These little slips have a round or pointed yoke of fine tucks, with feather stitching or embroidery between, with sleeves slightly full at the wristband, and full skirt hemmed and tucked below, then gathered to the yoke. For the second year "baby-waist" dresses are made with belt, yoke and full skirt; these have very deep yoke, with short space (yet full) between the yoke and belt. A sash of the nainsook with trimmed ends may be added at the sides of the belt, and tied behind in a large bow. Girls continue to wear such dresses until they put on guimpe waists, and indeed until they are ten or twelve years old, but to show that baby boys are boys, more boyish-looking dresses are put on them when they are two and a half years old. Thus for boys are one-piece dresses of pique made with round plaited waist and skirt, with much larger plaits sewed to the waist under a belt. The front of the waist has a box plait down the middle, with six small side plaits on each side of it. A turned-down collar, open in front and back, is trimmed with linen braid put on in curves. Rows of curled linen braid are across the front plaits of the waist and the very large box plait of the skirt; the remainder of the skirt may be either in large kilt plaits or in box plaits. The belt and the sleeves are also braided.

The new Louis Quinze suits of pique for boys three to five years old dispense with a separate blouse of nainsook, and have instead a full puffed front (like a Fedora vest) of all-over embroidered muslin sewed on the front of the pique underwaist to which the kilt skirt of pique is sewed. The little jacket of this suit has a broad short back, with short fronts curving away from the neck to show the embroidered blouse-like front, and is also curved open up the under-arm seams, with curled linen braid for the trimming. The collar is square behind, in sailor shape, and quite short in front. The sailor suit also reappears for boys of three to five years or more, made of pique, either plain white, or with tiny dots of blue or red, or with colored stripes or cross rows on either white or buff ground. The kilt skirt is sewed to a twilled cotton under-waist which is covered in front with pique to look like a sailor's shirt, the stripes being laid across, and the neck bound without a collar. Over this is the sailor blouse cut in a point low at the throat, with a deep collar, square behind, pointed in front, and finished at the point with a bow or a sailor knot of blue or red ribbon. This dress is also worn by girls, and may be made of blue gingham, flannel or serge, or of white wools or plaid or striped cotton or wool goods.

White muslins are made up with open embroidery in all-over design for wearing with guimpes for girls of three to ten years. The full round skirt is gathered to the waist and scalloped at the foot; the embroidery in wheels or lattice pattern nearly covers it. The round low-necked waist is cut out of the embroidery, and has a striped effect given it by the lengthwise box plaits of nainsook sewed upon it at intervals all around. The sleeves are half-long, with a corded edge below, and a pointed cap of embroidery at the top. The neck is simply corded. Watered ribbon, two inches wide, passes as a belt around the waist under the plaits, ending in a bow on the left side. Small bows on the shoulders.—Harper's Bazar.

NOVELTIES IN JEWELRY.

Odd Designs in Scarf-Pins, Brooches, Charms and Pendants.

An oxidized silver blossom, having a golden heart, is a pleasing pattern in scarf pins.

A seasonable pin is a snow-shoe of oxidized silver, with meshes and fastenings in the bright metal.

Dainty little brooches of silver filigree recently seen represented filmy lace parasols, mandolins and violins.

A pleasing pattern in garter buckles is a flat scroll of Roman gold, having a border of enameled flowers sunk into the metal.

A pin admired by turfmen is a curled horseshoe, nail in nugget finished Roman gold, in the head of which is set a small ruby.

Coffee beans of gold or silver, tinted in contrasting shades, make peculiar sleeve links. The regular bean shape is also used.

A pretty pendant for a lady's chain is a pitcher of handsomely chased gold with designs in enamel. The lip and bottom are of silver.

A soft shell clam of silver, is a peculiar match box, and the same design, but on a larger scale, makes a tobacco box both artistic and unique.

A scallop shell of silver, the ribs represented by rows of diamonds and holding a diamond in its center, is an attractive but expensive brooch.

An odd design in a brooch is a ram's head in relief with proudly curving horns. Medallions, on which are mediæval heads, fill the space encircled by the horns.

An artistic locket charm, suitable for small pictures, is of highly chased gold and represents an open fan. The surface is studded with minute forget-me-nots in natural colors.

A flat match safe, intended to be worn as a watch charm, is of a size suitable for wax matches and has a small ring for suspension from the chain. It is made of either silver or gold, but without ornamentation of any kind.—Jeweler's Weekly.

TEMPERANCE READING.

TEMPERANCE EDUCATION.

How the Nature and Effects of Alcohol May Be Taught to Children in the Public Schools—Why the Educational Law Is a Dead Letter in Some Portions of New York.

First of all we must educate. And my experience drives me to the conclusion that the mightier agency for Temperance as well as other education is the public school. It is to me a matter of surprise that it is not better known that in our own and more than twenty other States, besides Canada, there is a law requiring all schools supported by public money, or under State control, to teach physiology, with special reference to alcoholic drinks, stimulants and narcotics. But in some city, many village and most country schools I am acquainted with, the law is practically a dead letter. I was in a village school lately having about two hundred and forty pupils, of all ages from five to seventeen. Some were just beginning to read, while others had nearly finished algebra. After the close of the morning exercises, for which all had assembled, I asked the teachers if they were teaching the nature and effects of alcohol. They said no. When asked why not, one said she did not know the law required it, and all agreed they didn't have time. I answered that their plea "no time" was, like the cry of "hard times," something I had heard ever since I had heard any thing, and always expected to hear, and reminded them of Greeley's saying: "The way to resume is to resume," adding that the way to teach this subject is to take time and go straight at it. To show how senseless the plea of "no time" was, I gave the pupils an exercise. I explained briefly and then formulated a statement, all the pupils repeating it after me three times in concert. Then we did the same with another statement, afterward repeating the two together, and so on until we had finished the exercise, which was as follows:

THE NATURE AND EFFECTS OF ALCOHOL.

1. Alcohol is a liquid poison.
2. It looks like water, smells bad and tastes very bad.
3. It will burn without smoke, and will burn even when mixed with water; when much water is with it, it will not burn.
4. It will keep animal and vegetable matter from decaying.
5. It will "cook" the white of an egg.
6. It is found in all intoxicating drinks.
7. Alcoholic drinks are made by letting the juice of fruit or grain stand and decay; they are made by fermenting, malting and distilling.
8. Cider and wine are fermented liquors.
9. Beer, ale and porter are malt liquors.
10. Whisky, gin and brandy are distilled liquors.
11. Alcoholic drinks are never needed by healthy people.
12. They disease, disarrange and destroy every part of the human body.
13. They are seldom useful and always dangerous as medicines.

After finishing I called on two pupils to recite and one to write out the lesson. Each gave unaided from ninety to one hundred per cent. of it. Yet the whole time spent in learning it was a trifle less than fifteen minutes. Of course I do not think this is the best way to teach the subject, but it beats nothing all to pieces. So if there is a teacher who has not taught the subject at all, I hope she will give such an exercise the first thing the very next time she enters the class-room. Then she will be sure of something. In my opinion a lesson on the subject should be given every pupil at least twice a week.

My pupils enjoy seeing me make experiments with alcohol, showing how it will burn, "cook" the white of an egg (it effects the brain and nerves in much the same way), and after these and other experiments they write out what way they have learned. Those who do well—which includes all, for they always try hard—I give an illuminated card with a Temperance sentiment on. They are always ready to listen to short stories told or read to illustrate the lesson, and often they repeat the stories or write them out. Besides I generally have a handsome Temperance calendar in the room, and often have them write short Temperance sentiments in their copy-books, and learn and sing some Temperance songs. In these and a host of other ways the subject may be kept in their minds constantly.

I have been asked how this law can be enforced. Nothing can be simpler. Let me read you from a letter I have from the State Superintendent of Public Instruction:

"If the trustees of a common district school refuses or neglects to make provision for carrying out the compulsory Temperance Education law he will be removed by the superintendent. If a teacher refuses or neglects to teach the subject the county commissioner should revoke her license."

Every public school should be visited several times each term to see that such instruction is given, for if enforced the good effects of this law are incalculable.

I repeat my belief that the only solution of the Temperance problem is education. The people perish for the lack of knowledge.—Prof. Burt Jay Tice, in National Temperance Advocate.

SUCCESS ASSURED.

What Has Already Been Accomplished in the Temperance Reform Movement—The Agencies at Work.

The friends of Temperance have reason to be encouraged by the progress which this cause is making. The time was, and that within the memory of men now living, when liquor selling was regarded as an honorable business. Men of high standing in the churches and of acknowledged piety were not ashamed to be known as liquor dealers. It is not so to-day. The traffic is slowly but surely being driven into the hands of a very disreputable class of citizens. If public sentiment will continue to advance along this line, no man who lays any claim to self-respect will be found in this business.

The progress of the Temperance cause is seen also in the public discussion of the question. Column after column in our newspapers is devoted to this subject. The daily press dares to be silent no longer. The evils of intemperance are discussed but little; they are acknowledged on all hands. The only question is: What is the best method of preventing these evils? The leaders of the political parties are aware that this is the impending issue, and they are trying to shape their platforms accordingly. The more this question is agitated, the nearer will it be to a correct answer.

Much of the progress which has been made can be traced to the efforts of the women. The crusade movement wrought good in this direction. It revealed the fact that the women of the country were almost unanimously on the side of Temperance. It lead many to think deeply on a question whose importance had for many years been overlooked. The organized efforts of the Women's Christian Temperance Union have accomplished wonders. The old workers in the Temperance reform were growing discouraged when these allies came to their assistance. In fact, these new recruits well nigh took the work out of the hands of the former workers, and pushed it on with a rapidity which was astonishing to those who knew from experience the difficulties in the way.

"There is no way of judging the future but by the past." If this is true, the history of the Temperance reform for the past fifty years gives promise of certain success at no very distant day.—United Presbyterian.

LIKE HIS PAPA.

How Robby Set His Father to Thinking, and the Good Resolution That Followed.

He was a bright-eyed, rosy-cheeked little fellow, and just as brimful of fun as a boy of five summers could well be, and when I tell you that his mamma, that morning, for the first time, had dressed him in a pair of pantaloons and a little coat, you can imagine what his feelings were. But his little sister Mamie did not like the change at all. She had tried to get him to play with her several times, but had been treated so coldly that she had at last retired to one corner of the room with her doll; many a wistful glance did she cast at him, but to no effect. He would have liked to have a big play, but thought it would never do, so he marched out of the room with great dignity, followed by his dog Rover. In the hall he espied a hat of his father's and also a cigar-stump that had been left on the table. Putting the cigar in his mouth, and the hat on his head, he went out into the yard, lighting the cigar as he went, still followed by his faithful dog.

"What are you about, Robby?" said a young man as he passed by.

"Oh, I'm pretending I'm papa," said he.

"You'd better let that stuff alone," was the laughing rejoiner, "or you'll rue it soon." And he did, for he got so sick he was compelled to lie down on the grass for awhile, and threw the cigar away in disgust, concluding that it was not so nice to do like papa, after all.

"Hoop, but ain't you fine!"

"Yes, ain't I though," said the little fellow, as he jumped up and displayed himself before a neighbor boy about two years older than himself.

"I say, Jim, let's play."

"Well, what will we play?"

"Why, you keep a bar and I'll be papa, and come in and get a glass of brandy, like he does down at the hotel."

Bob and Jimmy soon fixed up a bar by laying planks across the corner of the fence, and furnished it in a few minutes with some old bottles and two broken glasses, and then getting the cook to give them an old jug that had once been used for molasses, and filling it with water, they were ready to begin business.

"Good-morning, Mr. Glidden!" said Rob, as he marched up to the bar.

"Good-morning! good-morning! glad to see you out such a fine morning. What will you have to-day?"

"A glass of your fine brandy to cheer me up a little," was the reply; and, being helped to a half-glass of molasses-water, Robby soon disposed of it, and called for more; and, after drinking several times, he staggered away in such perfect imitation of his father that the little bar-keeper roared with laughter.

There was one, though, who witnessed the scene that did not laugh, and would you believe it, it was Robby's own father. He had been in the very same fix the night before, that his little son had imitated so well, and of course was not in a condition to attend to business, and so he had been in the summer-house for several hours trying to entertain himself with the morning paper, and had heard every word that had passed between the little playmates. It set him to thinking, and the result was that he signed the pledge that very day. "I could not bear to have my son grow up in that way," he said to his wife that night, "and with the help of God, I'm going to set him a better example," and he did.—Herald and Presbyter.

NOTHING impresses me so much about this Temperance reform as the eternity of it. It goes on, and goes on, in our individual experience, like the golden ring of love itself, wherein there seems no beginning and no end to our joy.—Elizabeth Stuart Phelps.

IT is reported that all the American missions in Burmah have incorporated total abstinence in their work.

READING FOR THE YOUNG.

THE STATE OF TULAIT.

In spite of mamma's reproachful eyes
She was always, always late to rise;
And late at breakfast and dinner and tea,
And late at school and at church was she:
Till at last after going too late to bed
A wonderful dream came into her head,
With stories weird
And with warnings great,
Of a place to be feared;
'Twas the State of Tulait.
O dear!
How crazy and queer
Was the careless State of Tulait!

She thought she had strangely and suddenly come
To King Bizzibee in the land of Hum,
Who eyed her gravely, and said: "Alas!
She rose too late to look in the glass.
Her buttons are wrong, and her collar is gone,
And, worst of all, there's her night-cap on!
By this I know
Of her horrible fate;
She is bound to go
To the State of Tulait.
Ah me!
'Tis sad to see
Fair maids in the State of Tulait.

"Would you like to know what the farmers do
In the State of Tulait? I'll tell you true:
They daily and dream in the spring-time sweet,
They plant their crops in the harvest heat,
They hoe their corn in the frosty fall,
And winter finds them with nothing at all.
You'll hunger and thirst,
And want and wait,
And that isn't the worst
In the State of Tulait.
Oh, no!
And yet you'll go
To the desolate State of Tulait.

"Would you like to know what will happen to you
In the State of Tulait? I'll tell you true:
You'll go to the show at the end of the fun;
To the concert hall when the music is done;
You'll come to the table too late for the pie;
And you'll see the parade when it's just gone by.
You'll never be wise
Nor rich nor great;
No fortune lies
In the State of Tulait.
Oh, why
Did you choose to try
The sorrowful State of Tulait?

"Would you like to know what your fate will be
In the State of Tulait? Ah, listen to me:
You will long in vain for your native land;
Your speedy return will oft be planned;
You'll hurry and strive with might and main,
But you'll never be able to catch the train!
So you'll sob and cry,
And worry and wait,
And you'll live and die
In the State of Tulait.
For nevermore
Can you leave the shore
Of the terrible State of Tulait."

At this she woke, so great was her fright,
And she saw the gleam of the morning light:
'Twas the first pale gleam, but she bravely rose,
And quickly and carefully donned her clothes:
"For oh," she said, "I could never endure
To live in that horrible place, I'm sure!
No longer I'm bound
For the State of Tulait;
And I'll never be found
In the State of Tulait.
No! No!
I never will go
One step to the State of Tulait."

A FACE TO ORDER.

Noel's Queer Experience, and the Lesson It Taught Him.

"Noel, take that face out of the room and do not come back with it."

The teacher spoke sternly, and the boy, with a scowl between his eyes, and pouting lips, shuffled across the floor.

"Raise your feet from the floor," said the teacher.

Then he took short, mincing steps, and felt as if he would like to do something desperate.

The boy went out, slamming the door behind him. He did not know what he was going to do about it. He felt cross; his bicycle was broken; the boys were going nutting; he had a horrid lesson to learn. It seemed to him that he was an ill-used boy, and he never once thought of putting the blame where it belonged, at the door of his own carelessness.

Where should he go to get a face to order? In the warm sunshine he sat and thought about it. Fido and Selim were on the piazza. Fido wagged his tail, and was rewarded with a cuff. Selim purred, and got a push. The frown seemed to be not only on Noel's face, but in his hands, to make them so unkind.

Down at the foot of the garden he saw what looked like the opening of an underground tunnel. He thought he would go in and walk along. He met no one, but heard strange sounds. Farther on, a kind of door swung into a large, shoplike kind of place, full of all sorts of people, talking busily. Noel went in, and stood on one side. A little fellow, with very tight fitting clothes, stepped up and asked what he could be served with.

"A face to order," said Noel.

The little man kept bowing his head. "Yes; oh! yes, certainly. That's what they all come here for. Come this way, and I will show you what we have, and you may select what you like. Here are complexions, now—pale, florid, livid, yellow, dark, light"—. He opened a showcase gay with color. Then he took the covers from several boxes, saying: "Then here are eyes—black, blue, brown, gray, violet, nondescript; round, oval, oblong; narrow slit eyes; wide-open, staring eyes, all sorts, see," and he put his hand in and tumbled them over. Noel, with all the eyes winking and blinking at him, never felt so funny in his life.

"And here are the noses," his companion continued, turning to another box; "straight, crooked, broken, bent, long, short, stub, hooked, Grecian, Roman, classic, retrousse, or turned up on the end; and the lips, oh, yes, right over here, along side of the smiles and frowns, here we have them, thick and thin, long and short. With these you can have a make-up fair as a June morning, or black as a thunder-cloud. What do you say? Ah, you want a pleasant expression? All right. Step on this platform, and lie back in the big easy-chair. Here, Nimble and Expert, attend to this young gentleman; a pleasant face, now, remember."

Noel was seized gently by each arm, assisted up some steps, and into a capacious chair tilted well backwards. Now came a curious sensation. A sharp line was drawn round each eye, the nose and mouth; and then he had such strange feelings; nothing but great holes in his face, and nose after nose was fitted; eyes clapped in, and taken out, and tried again; lips pinched into place; and at last every thing seemed to suit the little attendants, and they said they had nothing more to do but attend to the complexion.

While this operation was in progress Noel had time to observe what was going on around him. A big, burly fellow came noisily in, picked out a pair of black, blood-shot eyes, a red, swollen nose and thick, tobacco-stained lips. Noel felt afraid of him, and asked Nimble where he was going.

"Oh, only home to his wife and children. He comes in here almost every night to get fitted out in that way. They have to run for their lives sometimes."

Then some little boys came in. Some asked for whiskers, and others for wrinkles, and one for a big nose. They looked so funny that Noel wanted to laugh, but did not dare to, for fear his own nose and eyes would fall out of his face, as they had just been put in place, and he did not feel very certain about them yet. By and by he got a peep at the mirror, and started in surprise at such a good-looking reflection. Was it himself? He would go and find the teacher and see.

"I have got a face made to order," he said; "how do you like it?"

"Very well, indeed, my dear boy. Keep that, and I will not find fault with it."

And then Noel sleepily opened his eyes to find it was all a dream.—Woman's Journal.

Flowers That Love the Sun.

There are some flowers that love the sunlight as much as you do. See the sunflower, with its great honest face, always looking towards the west until it has gone out of sight. The next morning you will find that same flower gazing towards the east, all ready and waiting for it to rise. This is why this flower has often been called the "Sun Worshipper."

The little white daisy is a great lover of the open light of day. This is why it used to be called "day's eye." And the marigold mourns its going so much that it solemnly closes just at nightfall.

So does the oxalis, and you will not only find its flowers closed, but the leaves, too, folded all up into three pretty divisions, like a heart. And our sweet pond-lily always hides away under the water when the sun is gone, only to appear when it comes up in the morning.—Mrs. G. Hall, in Our Little Ones.

MAKING GOLD LEAF.

An Old Art Which Has But Few Exponents in This Country.

There are not many gold-beating establishments or gold-beaters in the country. The art is old, having been known to the Romans. When gold is to be beaten into thin foil it is heated first in a crucible with borax. In the liquid state it is poured into a mold and then reheated and made into a long bar. By means of fine rollers it is further flattened into a broad sheet almost as thin as paper. It is then cut up into square pieces, and a number of them are piled one upon the other, generally one hundred and fifty are taken. The beaters place between the leaves pieces of calfskin to prevent them from sticking together. Over the pile is put four layers of sheepskin to preserve the thin foil from being injured by the hammer. The whole is then placed on a slab of marble. After the mechanic has pounded the leaves until they have become as wide as the parchment between them, they are taken out, and with a sharp steel knife each one is cut into four square pieces. The six hundred thin leaves are again taken and mangled in the same manner. The leaves have become so delicate now that a piece of sharp cane is used to cut them. The moisture from the breath, or even the small amount of water found on a metalic knife, would cause them to stick together. After the leaves have been beaten for the third time they are taken out and cut with a square frame of cane. The leaves are now carefully packed and ready to be shipped, unless they are to be made thinner.

It is surprising to what extent gold can be divided. A cubic inch is sufficient to gild wire enough to reach around the world.—Pittsburgh Dispatch.

OUNCES OF PREVENTION.

Valuable Suggestions for Fond Young Mothers and Fathers.

If you have any regard for the future health of baby do not fall into the habit of giving him "little tastes" of every thing. It not only disarranges his stomach, but makes him easily dissatisfied with his own food. A child who has never been allowed to eat of this and that just to see whether he likes it or not, when weaned will sit up to the table and eat his piece of bread contentedly while the puddings and pies are passed around him. He does not associate these articles of food with himself but with the larger people and remains satisfied with his own limited bill of fare. We know this is so from experience, and also that the first piece of cake or doughnut given the child will surely be remembered. The little one who visits much can never be regulated in regard to diet, sleep or in fact any of his habits. We are strongly in favor of keeping babies at home; even visits to grandparents are not always satisfactory. It is much better for grandma to take the little outing which she needs and will enjoy, and visit the baby in its own home. A glance through a railway car will usually furnish a type of a mother's enjoyment in visiting and traveling. The memory of several such undertakings is yet fresh in our own mind and we can not refrain from advising young mothers to keep the babies quietly at home. Then if sickness comes there will be no vain regrets that the home and its comforts had been left. But visiting with excitements, unfamiliar surroundings and changes of diet are one thing, and healthful out-door life is another. Every baby should get a breath of fresh air each day unless the weather is severe. In that case it should be wrapped up and the air in the living room entirely changed. Bear this in mind unless your child has grave disease, the longer you can postpone giving drugs and medicines, the better it will be for the child.—Babyhood.

A LAUGHABLE RUSE.

How the Bonanza Kings Made Over Five Million Dollars.

"One of the shrewdest tricks ever played upon investors in mining securities," said Alfred B. Sawyer, of Sacramento, Cal., "was that engineered by the owners of the Consolidated Virginia in 1873. There had been a great deal of speculation in Comstock stocks, but the bottom had rather fallen out of the market and prices were low. Desiring to turn an honest penny, Flood, O'Brien and Mackay determined to make an effort to boom the stock. Accordingly Mackay one day left for Virginia City, and on arriving at that place ordered that the shafts of the Consolidated Virginia be strictly guarded, and neither ingress or egress permitted. More than five hundred workmen were employed in the different drifts, not one of whom was allowed to ascend to the surface, while no outsider was allowed to go anywhere near the shafts. The news was of course at once telegraphed all over the country and caused tremendous excitement. It was at once assumed that a great strike had been made which the principal stockholders desired to conceal from the public, and the stock accordingly began to mount skyward. Flood and O'Brien both stated in the most positive terms that no strike had been made, and advised every one not to invest, saying that the price of the stock was far above its value, and declaring that if it continued to rise they would dispose of their holdings. This only added fuel to the flames, and the stock rose from $35 to $500. Flood, Mackay and O'Brien unloaded all they had, and when this was accomplished withdrew the guards from the shafts and allowed the miners to ascend. Of course each one of them was eagerly questioned as to the cause of his long detention underground, and asked to give a description of the ore body recently discovered, which was assumed to be the cause of this unusual proceeding. One and all answered that there had been no strike, and that they could see no reason for their detention. They had been paid triple wages for the time they had been kept from going to the top of the shaft, but could assign no reason for this course of action. The speculators saw at once that they had been victimized, and the stock dropped in a day below twenty. The bonanza kings advised their friends not to sell, saying that the stock was worth more than the price asked, but this was regarded as an effort to bolster it up, and caused it to sink even lower. The bonanza insiders bought it up, and in less than three months from the time when the shafts were closed held more stock than ever before, and had a clear profit of more than $5,000,000 in their pockets, gained without once telling a lie, and, in fact, by means of speaking the truth in an unusually open and unreserved manner. Their previous reputation had been such that the truth from them was the only thing that would have surprised those who had formerly dealt with them, and they traded on their bad name with immense advantage to themselves, victimizing the entire population of the Pacific coast, as they had so often done, both before and since."—St. Louis Post-Dispatch.

OFFICIAL RED TAPE.

The Work Caused by the Return of a Two-Cent Stamp.

A letter signed with initials and mailed at the Washington post-office was received the other day at the Post-Office Department. The writer enclosed a two-cent stamp, with the following explanatory remark for the benefit of the Postmaster General:

"I received a letter through your office yesterday; the canceling stamp failed to cancel the stamp. I tore the stamp off and used it. Now my conscience has got the best of me. You will please find enclosed a two-cent stamp to go to the 'Conscience Fund.'"

As it was not money the stamp was not sent to the Treasury Department, where there is a special fund for the benefit of those who are overcome by the pangs of conscience. The letter was sent on the official round and as much ink and good paper was consumed in recording its reception in the department and its final disposition as if it had been $10,000, instead of a sickly two-cent stamp. It was first of all recorded in the book of letters received in the Postmaster-General's office, and was then sent, as indorsed by the chief clerk, to the Third Assistant Postmaster-General. When it reached the latter office it was referred by the Third Assistant Postmaster-General to the Finance Division. Another record was made in the book of the office of letters received and jacketed. Then it found its way to the Finance Division. The chief of that division pasted the stamp on the letter, drew two cross-marks through the stamp with his pen and marked under it the word "canceled" and signed his name. This operation was witnessed by a clerk, who affixed his name as witness, and then the letter having reached the end of its red tape journey, was duly and properly deposited in the files, where it will remain as an evidence to future generations that this petit larceny upon the Government was regularly and officially atoned for. In case the citizen whose conscience was disturbed wishes to establish the fact that he has made restitution, he can refer to the documents in the case, which the Post-Office Department will kindly preserve for him without charge.—Washington Star.

THE OLD CONSTITUTION.

An Interesting Historical Sketch of the Famous American Frigate.

The frigate Constitution was built at the Boston Navy Yard in 1797, at a cost of $302,718. Her tonnage was 1,576, and she carried forty-four guns. For several years this vessel was engaged in the foreign service, but during 1811 was recalled, and when war was declared she was at Annapolis, engaged in shipping a new crew. She put out of harbor there July 12, 1812. On the 17th she met a British fleet of four vessels, and, being unable to cope with so many, she ran away from them. They gave chase, and pursued the frigate for sixty-four hours, but were not able in that time to get near enough to fire on her, so she escaped and ran into port at Boston July 26. After a brief time spent in filling her stores, the frigate, with Captain Hull as her commander, left Boston August 2, went to the Bay of Fundy, and there captured several British vessels on their way to the St. Lawrence. August 19 she fell in with a British ship, the Guerriere, at latitude 41 degrees, 40 minutes, longitude 55 degrees, 48 minutes. The British commander began firing at long range, but Captain Hull held back his fire till the vessels were only a few yards apart. Then pouring in his shots, their execution was terrible, and in fifteen minutes the mizzenmast of the Guerriere was shot away, her main yards in slings and her sails cut to pieces. The ships were now so near that the bowsprit of the Guerriere passed diagonally over the Constitution's quarter deck, but such a heavy sea was running that neither crew could attempt to board the other vessel. At last the ships gradually worked around till they had separated, when a broadside from the Constitution carried away the foremast and mainmast of the other vessel, and the Guerriere rolled, a defenseless hulk, at the mercy of the waves. Captain Dacre then surrendered. The British soldiers were taken on the American vessel and the wreck of the Guerriere was set on fire. The Constitution brought the first tidings of this victory to Boston. A handsome medal was given to Hull for the victory, and he retired from command of the vessel in favor of Captain Bainbridge. October 26, the Constitution and Hornet left the port of Boston together, sailing southwest. Leaving the Hornet to blockade an English vessel found in port at San Salvador, the Constitution went further south, and off the coast of Brazil, at latitude 13 degrees 6 minutes south, longitude 31 degrees west, met the English frigate Java. The battle was at short range, and the wheel of the Constitution was shot away; but the American commander managed his crippled vessel well, avoided the raking fire of his antagonist and directed the shots so skillfully that in a little over two hours from the beginning of the fight all the rigging and masts of the Java had been shot away, leaving her a sheer hulk. She then surrendered, and after the crew had been removed the wreck was blown up. Captain Bainbridge, on his arrival at home, was, of course, loaded with honors. The Constitution now had the credit of being a lucky ship, and Bainbridge, having won his share of glory through connection with her, gave way and allowed Captain Charles Stewart to take command. The vessel at this time received the nickname of "Old Ironsides." Having been well repaired, the Constitution left Boston harbor December 30, 1813. She ran down toward the Barbadoes, and on February 14 captured and destroyed the British schooner Picton. After making a few other prizes, and reaching the coast of Guiana, she turned homeward, on the way giving chase to a British ship, which, however, escaped, and when near home, being pursued by two frigrates, from whom she got away, and anchored safe in the harbor of Marblehead, April 6. The Constitution did not cruise any more until December, 1814. Then she set sail for the Bermudas, thence to Madeira and to the Bay of Biscay. Off Cape St. Vincent, February 20, 1813, she met two British vessels, the Cyane and the Levant, and after a short, sharp fight, succeeded in capturing them both. This was the last engagement of "Old Ironsides," as peace had already been concluded. The vessel was used for various naval purposes until 1850, when the Naval Department proposed breaking her up and selling her timbers. This purpose was changed, however, by the public feeling aroused by Dr. Holmes' stirring poem on the subject, beginning:

"Aye, tear her battered ensign down!"

The vessel was therefore repaired and made a school ship for naval pupils.—Chicago Inter Ocean.

Selling Eggs by Weight.

Breeders of fancy fowls, especially the breeders of the class which lay large eggs, should insist with more pertinacity that weight should enter into all of the commercial operations of eggs. Some contend "an egg is an egg." And so is a potato. But there is more than a half difference in the weight and true value of the largest class of eggs and those from the dwarfed common dung-hill fowl. Well bred and well fed Brahma eggs will weigh one pound eight ounces per dozen without selecting, while common small eggs weigh less than one pound. Besides the quality of the eggs is equally as much better in flavor. Slightly colored eggs are superior in quality in many respects to the pure white. Dealers, in justice to those who breed large chickens and furnish eggs for the market, should do something to encourage such enterprise. And those who are buying for their own use should, as a matter of economy and to sustain a spirit of enterprise, demand and pay an advanced price for better eggs.—Des Moines Register.

—Several of the French railway companies and other public bodies have resolved to have their printing done on green instead of white paper. The reason for the change is that they believe the combination of white paper with black characters endangers the eyesight of their work people. Black on green has always been recognized as a good combination, and many railway tickets are so printed.

—A composition has been produced which may prove valuable to bookbinders, having for its purpose the rendering water-proof of leather, cloth, paper, etc. It is a mixture of water, silicate of soda, rosin, alum, potash, fish glue, sulphate of zinc and sulphate of copper in various proportions. The application is said to render the material impervious to the influence of oil or water, and if a variety of ingredients increases practical utility, should be very valuable.

—At a recent meeting of the Archæological Institute, in London, a paper was read on the results of diggings made in prehistoric graves in Southern India. The relics found deposited in them showed a remarkable identity, even in matters of detail, with those which have been discovered in prehistoric graves in Great Britain and Greece, and on the sight of ancient Troy, and in Egypt. This is another indication that the dominant races of the world have all come from one parent tribe, or at least from a common stock.

—A noted German chemist, having noticed some incomprehensible differences in the weights of equivalent quantities, undertook investigations, which showed that balances of precision are often influenced by the electric state of the glass case which surrounds them, and this electricity influences the "riders" which slide on the beam of the balance. The error resulting from this influence may amount to 600 milligrams when the case is strongly charged, and two hours afterward there may still be an error of ten milligrams.

—The vanilla bean is the costliest bean on earth. It flourishes in Mexico, chiefly in Papantala and Misantly. It grows wild, and is gathered and marketed by the natives. Just as they come from the forest the beans sell at $10 or $12 per 1,000. After the beans are dried and cured they are worth from $7 to $12 per pound, according to quality. Last year the vicinity of Papantla alone exported 60,000,000 beans. They are used by druggists and confectioners and are an important article of commerce.

—There is an establishment in New York that employs a large number of girls to crack and pick nuts, the kernels of which are sold to confectioners. The nutshells are sold to manufacturers in various eastern towns, more especially in Boston. The shells of pecan nuts, English walnuts and hickory nuts are used in the manufacture of spices. The shells are ground up into a powder and mixed with other spices. This shell dust has considerable flavor, although, of course, it is not what it is alleged to be when sold as spice. It is not known that it has any injurious qualities.

HOLDING THE BREATH.

Anæsthesia Produced by Suspended Respiration Temporarily.

A discussion has been going on for some time over the assertion that one may handle a wasp with impunity provided he hold his breath during the operation. An English correspondent is thereby reminded of a curious discovery of his boyhood. "I was a very ticklish youngster, and my comrades sometimes used that weakness for their own amusement. One boy used to show me how little effect tickling had upon him; but one hot summer day, as he was lying reading, I tickled him on the ribs, and he almost went into convulsions. I found that he was far more sensitive than any boy in the company, and he revealed his secret to me under condition of my never telling any one else. By holding his breath he became pachydermatous, and would let anybody tickle him as much as they pleased; but of course they always gave it up at once when they saw his stolid look. I tried the plan and it worked admirably; and it is my only protection even unto this day, for my cuticle is as sensitive as ever. The deduction is simple: A man holds his breath and a wasp—and the stinger is 'bluffed.' Verb. sap." Mr. McMillan's scientific logic halts somewhat, but the fact which he cities is of interest. The writer is cognizant of similar cases, and it may be worth further investigation to determine to what extent anæsthesia of the skin may be produced by suspending respiration temporarily.—Science.

First Woman in Camp.

Every miner in the camp was excited and talking about it. Now it took some very important event to thoroughly arouse all the boys along the gulch. A row in which only one man was killed was considered a very commonplace social event, and an ordinary lynching did not attract much attention.

Why was it?

Why, there was a woman in camp and all was commotion. It was the first great social event in White Horse Gulch.

The young lady had finished her dinner and was strolling about the camp with her uncle, a large, fleshy, jolly old man, who was a large stockholder in one of the principal mines in the gulch. He had brought his niece, a young lady of 20, on a trip with him for company and also to show her something of the wild and rugged West. It had been many a month since the boys had seen a woman, and hence everybody wanted to meet her and invite her to partake of the hospitalities of White Horse Gulch, for all the latch strings were out and she would have been welcomed to the best the rude mountain cabins afforded.

Now, any woman would have appeared handsome. A dried-up old maid from New England, dieted and preserved on non-sugared tea for a quarter of a century, would have been considered handsome and very lovely, for the mountain boys are very gallant to women, and old maids are given a fair show every time.

The boys were all charmed by the polite manners and handsome face of the young lady, but there was a look of deep sympathy in the eyes of all when they saw her. "It is too bad," was the prevailing sentiment of all.

"What a handsome face, pard," exclaimed a miner to his friend, "but how unfortunate!"

Some admired her handsome face, others her beautiful black hair and others her comely shaped foot, but all pitied her deformity.

That evening, after the young lady had retired, the uncle was chatting with a number of the miners, and his niece, of whom the fond uncle was very proud, became the topic of conversation. Finally, one bolder than the rest, said it was a pity she was deformed. In tones of sympathy he told the Uncle how the hearts of all the miners in White Horse Gulch had gone out towards him for her affliction.

"Affliction!" shouted the enraged uncle. "Afflicted! Why, she is only wearing one of those blankety blank bustles!" And everybody replied in chorus:

"Bustle! Bustle! What's a bustle?"

Gems For Thought.

The remedy for wrongs is to forget them.

He makes no friend who never made a foe,

Good manners are made up of petty sacrifices.

It becomes a wise man to try negotiation before arms,

The only thing certain about litigation is its uncertainty.

No time is too short for the wicked to injure their neighbors.

He only is a well made man who has a good determination.

To love and to be loved is the greatest happiness of existence.

He has carried every point, who has mingled the useful with the agreeable.

Most of our misfortunes are more supportable than the comments of of our friends upon them.

More helpful than all wisdom is one draught of simple human pity that will not forsake us.

Censure and criticism never hurt anybody. If false they cannot harm you, unless you are wanting in character; and, if true they show a man his weak points, and forewarn him against failure and trouble,

He who is sympathetic has his entrance into all hearts, and is the solver of all human problems. To him is given dominion where he thinks to serve; and the love he gives without stint, as without calculation, he receives back without measure, as without conditions.

Never kiss a young girl if she doesn't want you to. The main ingredient that makes kissing endurable is the willingness on the part of the female. If it depends on the anxiety so much the better. When a girl claws a man's hair and scratches his face like a little fool, drop her at once. She is destitute of good sense and natural affection, and the sooner you make love to her sister the better. As long as a girl doesn't claw and yell and struggle like a panther, it is perfectly safe to continue prospecting. Get a little behind her, pass the right arm around her waist in front, take her left hand in your left, and if you don't know what to do next, go and associate with the boys in Pinville. If you are just beginning to teach a shy girl who has only been kissed heretofore by her brothers and father, touch your lips gently to her forehead. She will take this for an exhibition of profound respect. That position gained, working the way down to the lips is as natural and easy as the course of a log sliding down the wood flume of the Kentucky Lumber Company. Never sit down to kiss. It appears awkward in case anybody is looking, and seems awkward anyhow. Stand up, and the closer you press the girl the higher estimate she will place on your good taste, common sense and experience.

Hints to Housekeepers.

Use a pallet knife to scrape pots and kettles.

Pastry should never enter into the bill of fare of a dyspeptic.

Bottles may be easily cleaned with hot water and fine cinders.

Sweep and dust once a week the rooms which do not daily receive this attention.

For intense itching, baths in salt water, dry with a coarse towel and rub with sweet oil.

It is claimed that zinc is best cleansed with hot soapy water, then polished with kerosene.

Salt plentifully sprinkled on the icy doorstep will have a better and cleaner effect than ashes.

Oilcloth may be kept bright for years if properly varnished each season with good varnish.

A mass of cobweb pinched up in a wad and pressed to a fresh cut will stop the flow of blood instantly.

Remove fruit stains from white goods by pouring boiling water directly from the kettle over the stains.

Keep your bread pans and pie dishes free from ill flavor by always washing them in hot water after using.

Fish is made more digestible and has its flavor brought out by a few drops of lemon juice squeezed over it.

To have poached eggs look very nice, cook each egg in a muffin ring placed in the bottom of a saucepan of boiling water.

Dissolve a box Pearline in two quarts of hot water. Let it remain over night undisturbed, and you will have a splendid soft soap.

To make a corset feel comfortably, lace up to fit the form neatly, then sew five or six straps of gum ribbon across and remove the strings.

When a felon first begins to make its appearance, take a lemon, cut off one end; put the finger in and the longer it is kept there the better.

Those who are troubled with sleeplessness should, if strong enough to do so, take a long walk in the evening. Riding in the open air also promotes sleep.

The man who minds his own business and constantly attends to it has all his time employed.

Poverty often deprives a man of all spirit and virtue. It is hard for an empty bag to stand upright.

HOMOEOPATHY.—32,655 cases in European hospitals receiving Homoeopathic treatment showed a death rate of 4.4 per cent., while 119,630 cases under old treatment had a death rate of 10.5. (See Sharps' Tracts.)

Official figures in Bavaria give Homoepathy a death rate in Cholera of 6.75 against 48.50 of old treatments. (Dr. Rath)

These figures, whose accuracy has never been refuted, should make every one give the matter a more than passing thought, and it would be well to write for a copy of our Book Catalogue, and "Medical Index." also, if interested in live stock, of our "Veterinary Index." We mail them free. Many druggists keep our medicines or they may be ordered direct.

NEW ADVERTISEMENTS.

CONSTIPATION

IS called the "Father of Diseases," because there is no medium through which disease so often attacks the system as by the absorption of poisonous gases in the retention of decayed and effete matter in the stomach and bowels. It is caused by a Torpid Liver, not enough bile being excreted from the blood to produce Nature's own cathartic, and is generally accompanied with such results as

Loss of Appetite,

Sick Headache,

Bad Breath, etc.

The treatment of Constipation does not consist merely in unloading the bowels. The medicine must not only act as a purgative, but be a tonic as well, and not produce after its use greater costiveness. To secure a regular habit of body without changing the diet or disorganizing the system

"My attention, after suffering with Constipation for two or three years, was called to Simmons Liver Regulator, and, having tried almost everything else, concluded to try it. I first took a wineglassful and afterwards reduced the dose to a teaspoonful, as per directions, after each meal. I found that it had done me so much good that I continued it until I took two bottles. Since then I have not experienced any difficulty. I keep it in my house and would not be without it, but have no use for it, it having cured me."—GEO. W. SIMS, Ass't Clerk Superior Court, Bibb Co., Ga.

SHE CONCEALED HER SEX.

Dan Yonkers drifted in from the North country yesterday. Dan's stamping ground for the past ten years has been among the foot-hills of the Turtle Mountains in North Dakota, where he has earned many a dollar in the honest but precarious vocation of protecting the property of tenderfoot settlers against the lawless claim jumper. He is known as "Big Dan" in his bailiwick, and he is looked upon by the settlers of that wild region in about the same light that the citizens of the United States look upon the standing army. The title of "Big Dan" is not a misnomer, for he stands three inches more than six feet in his moccasins, and girts five feet around the chest. His legs are like the limbs of an elephant and his neck is as thick as that of a Texas steer. His face was never touched by a razor, nor his locks shorn by shears, and around his face and over his head hangs a shaggy mass of curly hair that has been kept within bounds by Dan himself, who has periodically sawed off the straying hair with the keen edge of his hunting knife that he carries belted around his ample waist, sleeping or waking. This peculiar individual was born in the northeast corner of Oregon thirty years ago, according to his own testimony, and gradually worked his way across the Rockies into the Territory of Dakota, never once having ridden on a railroad or approached civilization until a week ago, when he slid over the frozen prairie on snow-shoes to Devil's Lake City, and, clad in his quaint garb of poorly tanned deerskin, boarded the train that eventually landed him in St. Paul. It was no ordinary circumstance that led this queer man to undertake such a trip, and the story he told the Globe correspondent was interesting as well as pathetic. In his poor English he told why he was here and why he intended to continue his journey to West Virginia. As he finished his story, he brought his heavy fist down on the bar by which he stood with a force that made the glasses rattle and the bartender look nervous, and said, with a look of dogged determination in his eyes, "I'm er goin' ter find whut I'm arter, if it takes me till h—l freezes over."

Three years ago, according to Dan's story, information was brought to him that claim jumpers were making it hot for a young fellow in the northern part of Tower county, and he started for the scene of the trouble, as he put it, "Sp'ilin' fur a chance ter do up the squaw-faced land hoppers." The claim in question was in an uninhabited part of the country, and when he arrived he found it in possession of two well-known and desperate characters, who had driven the rightful owner off, and were holding the fort with rifles and revolvers, against the protests and threats of a weak-looking young fellow, who had filed upon the land, and, at considerable expense, built a comfortable shack upon it, and was preparing to improve it by cultivating the soil. When Dan arrived the young fellow was wandering around the claim, sleeping on the prairie, and endeavoring to make terms with the usurpers, who only laughed at him.

Dan said he took "sort ov er shine to ther young feller on the start," and when he saw how the land lay he laid himself out to do up the jumpers at short order. They had heard of him and knew he was not to be trifled with, so when Dan walked over to the shack he was met at the door by Tom Wolfland, the most desperate of the two men, who shoved a revolver under Dan's nose and told him if he didn't "vamoose" instanter he would shoot a hole through him. Dan wasn't built that way, and yanking out his revolver he fired at the jumper, who dropped with a hole through his right side. Wolfland's companion, seeing his partner go down, opened fire on Dan, who got a bullet through his left arm and had a furrow torn through his scalp; but the jumper got a bullet from Dan's revolver through the jaw, and signified his willingness to quit the claim if Dan would stop shooting. The wounded jumpers were loaded into a buckboard that was their property, and, behind a pair of mules that they had brought to the claim with them, were set adrift and were never heard of by Dan or the man he had befriended thereafter.

The young fellow whose claim Dan had saved was exceedingly grateful, and dressed the wounds of his benefactor with unusual skill. He told Dan that he hadn't money to pay him for his service then, but when he could raise the funds he would settle. He said his name was Daniel Furness, and he came from Randolph county, near the head of Cheat River, West Virginia, where his father lived. His father and two brothers had been killed while serving in the Confederate Army, and the support of his mother having fallen upon his shoulders, he came up into North Dakota with the intention of settling a home for his mother and himself. There were a few hundred dollars left to the wife and son when his father went down under fire of the Federal forces, and this money he left in a Wheeling bank to be used by his mother while he was establishing a home in the North.

This story told by Furness enlisted the sympathy of Dan at once, and their chance acquaintance grew into a sort of brotherly attachment that lasted through the three years that Furness was busily engaged in cultivating his claim. With Dan's assistance he got along famously. He had proved up on his tree claim and a homestead, and besides had managed to purchase 320 acres, so that last spring found him in posession of 640 acres of splendid land. Big Dan had come to look upon Furness as a sort of protege of his, and the people who had settled around the Furness claim dubbed them Big and Little Dan. They were almost inseperable companions, and a year ago, when Big Dan was stricken with fever, Furness nursed him so tenderly that he pulled through and come out all right.

"He wus es smart er young duck es ever got rained on," said Dan, with a moisture in his eye, "I'll never forget him es long es I'm on top ov earth. I thought er darned sight more ov him than I did of my own carcass."

Furness was making preparations to go East and return with his mother next spring to his Dakota possessions. He had bargained with Big Dan to look after the farm while he was absent, and he was to have started East Feb, 1st. A week ago last Tuesday Furness went to Church's Ferry to make a purchase of provisions to carry Big Dan through the winter. He remained in Church's Ferry on Tuesday night and started for home Wednesday noon. That afternoon a terrible blizzard came up and Furness must have become bewildered, for he did not reach home; but Big Dan, thinking he had concluded to remain at the ferry until the blizzard was ended, gave himself no uneasiness about his young friend. All day Thursday the gale blew, and still Dan was confident that Furness had remained in town; but when Friday and Saturday passed and he did not return, Dan began to fear that there was something wrong, and buckling on his snowshoes he started across the prairie for the ferry. He had gone barely more than two miles from the house when a dark object lying on the pririe caught his eye, and going over to it he found the sleeve of buffalo coat. He dug down into the snow and found the body of a man lying on his face, as though he had fallen while struggling against the storm. Dan lifted the corpse out of the drift, and turning it over looked into the rigid features of Furness.

The strange part of the story has not yet been told. His great heart stricken with grief, Dan lifted the form of Furness in his arms and carried it back to the shack, laying it on the bed. He was so unnerved by the terrible fate of his friend that for a day he could do nothing. When he at last pulled himself together he went about preparing the remains of his friend for burial. In attempting to remove the clothing from the upper part of the body, much to his consternation, Dan laid bare the white bosom of a woman. He immediately drove to the house of a neighbor and notified the woman of his suspicions, which were afterward verified. The remains were given a careful burial in the little cemetery at Church's Ferry.

Among the girl's effects, in her trunk, were found letters from her mother addressed to Cora, which was probably the right name of the masquerader. The only theory advanced for the woman concealing her sex is that she concluded she could thus protect herself against insult and indignity in the wild country to which she was going.

Big Dan, after the funeral, started for West Virginia, for the purpose of finding his friend's mother and bringing her back to the home her daughter had prepared for her, if she chooses to come, and he swears he will stand by her as long as he is able to lift a hand, if he finds her.—St. Paul Globe.

What We Get When We Give.

The results which would come to the contributor from the faithful use of a plan of constant giving are very numerous. 1. He would enjoy all the temporal blessings which God has promised to such as are faithful stewards of his material wealth. 2. It would abate the force of avarice. 3. It would convert giving into a source of pleasure. As Mr. Peabody said to a rich man: "It is sometimes hard for one who has devoted the best part of his life to the accumulation of money to spend it for others; but practice it and keep on practicing it, and I assure you it comes to be a pleasure." 4. It would increase the giver's means of usefulness. 5. Systematic giving tends to cultivate exactness and system in the transaction of business, and thus to secure success. 6 It will quicken a more earnest desire for the conversion of all men, 7. It will aid in counteracting every influence which would lead to dishonesty in business. 8. It will, if used in the right spirit, prepare the contributor for God's blessing in time and eternal happiness in heaven.

But the custom of universal worship in giving accomplishes another grand result in addition to increasing the facilities of the church and enlarging her usefulness Each contribution increases the interest of the contributor in the Church and her charities. England could pay her national debt if she desired, but her policy is not to pay it. By having a national debt, a safe investment is afforded for the people, and on account of this money invested in the government, each and every bondholder is made to feel an abiding, personal interest in the stability and prospsrity of the government. When a subject of the crown purchases a portion of the national loan, it is as though he paid his money to purchase for himself an enlarged patriotism The same principle holds true in the Church. The men who care very little or nothing whether the particular church with which they are associated is built up or torn down, are they not almost without exception of those who contribute little or nothing toward the support of the church? They have no treasure there, neither have they any heart there. Those who contribute most, in proportion to their ability, purchase most interest in the success and usefulness of the Church. Augustine says: "We give earth, and receive heaven. We give the temporal, and receive the eternal. We give things corruptible, and receive the immortal. Lastly, we give what God has bestowed, and receive God Himself. Let us not be slothful in such a commerce as this. Let us not continue poor.—Rev. Sylvanus Stall.

The Democrats of Georgia seem to appreciate the strength of the new third party movement. Their organ, the Atlanta Constitution, says: "The Rev. Sam Small leads the movement for a third party, and has already begun what he says will be an everlasting campaign. The question now is, what is the Democracy of the State to do? It cannot be denied that there are many thousands of earnest and active prohibitionists in the ranks of the Democratic party in this State. The earnestness with which Mr. Small has begun the fight promises that it will become more interestin gas it progresses. The people of every county will be asked to forsake party alliances and join the new party, as being the only one by which prohibition can be reached."

"The typos," observes an Illinois paper, apologetically, "made us allude last week to our esteemed townsman, Mr. Polkemas, as a 'villainous lounger.' We wrote 'versatile lawyer.' The error was overlooked by our proof-reader, a gentleman recently from Texas, who assures, in exhonoration of the oversight, that the two terms mean pretty much the same thing where he came from."

A young man has a scrap book containing the marriage notice of all the women that he has loved, and he sits out in the moonlight and reads it and cries.

Statistics show that not one woman in a hundred marries the man she loves.

SIXTY-FOUR.

Years so many! Sixty-four,
All come knocking at my door.
First, the tiny baby years,
Ripe with smiles and ripe with tears.

Then the buoyant, childish ones,
Rejoicing in the summer suns,
Heeding not the winter's cold
While wrapt in love's protecting fold.

And now the youthful maiden years,
Timid joys and trembling fears,
Hoping for a future bright,
Without the gloom of sorrow's night.

Then come the years of woman's life,
Sometimes peace and sometimes strife,
Fond caressing, trials borne,
Sad nights following brightest morn.

Mother's cares and wifely love,
Blessed by God in Heaven above,
Lisping prayers and baby smiles,
Shielding one from Satan's wiles.

And last, the years of ripe old age,
Gazing down on memory's page
At deeds and thoughts of other years,
With joys all passed and dried up tears.

Thus, thus they gather all around,
Years so many to me bound;
They are now but sixty-four—
Will any more knock at my door?

DAVE SUMMERS.

His Own Story of a Romance and Its Ending.

[Written for This Paper.]

CHAPTER I.

DAR ain't no frolic in whut I'm gwine ter tell. I know dat some folks thinks dat er nigger's life is made up o' laziniss an' skylarkin,' but dat belief,' 'specially in my case, ain't de truf. O, I had my fun w'en I wuz er youngster. Bless you, dar want er pusson in de neighborhood dat hankered after mis. chief mo' den Dave Summers did, but 'stead o' ole age bringin' dat peace an' rest which, eben in de libely time o' youth, sensible pussons looks forward ter, dar come trouble o' de blackest sort.

W'en I wuz erbout fifty years ole, de notion got inter my head dat I aughter preach. I doan know how it got dar—sholy not because I had been thinkin' erbout it—fur de fust thing I know'd er bout it wuz wakin' up one mawnin' wid de idee. I talked wid some o' my frien's an' da said, "Dave, dat is er call, an' you better not be progickin' wid it. De speret wants yer ter fling yer voice inter de gospul work an' you better not make er Jonah o' yerse'f by tryin' ter run erway."

"But how's I gwine ter preach?" I axed. "It's bout ez much ez I ken do ter read."

"De Lawd ain't axed yer ter read," one o' my frien's says, "He axes yer ter preach; ef you ken read er little, you ken l'arn how ter read mo'."

I went erway, mighty troubled in my mine. My wife had been dead fur sebrel years, an' not habin' any chillun I libed by myse'f in a cabin on er big plan'ation. I shet myself up an' prayed. De naixt mawnin' my load 'peared ter be heavier. Dar want nothin' left fur me, so I says: "I will preach. I will get somebody ter l'arn me how ter read mo' an' I will preach de gospul de bes' I knows how." Den I thought o' my load but it wuz gone. It want long till I stood up in de pulpit. Dar wuz sebrel smart men in de church, an' it 'peared ter muze 'em might'ly ter yere er ignunt er man ez I wuz talk erbout heaben an' de souls o' men. Ah, Lawd! ignunce ken fling ez much light on some subjecs ez de greates' arthly wisdom ken. I went at my work in earnes', not tryin' ter git up er great 'citement, but 'deavorin' ter show de folks de right way ter live in dis worl so da would be better prepared fur de life ter come; an' ef dar eber wuz er man dat wuz hones' an' true ter his callin' I blebes dat I wuz de pusson.

'Mong de members o' my flock wuz er mighty likely 'oman named Frances. I wuz fust drawed toward her by her singin', an' one time when de sweetness o' her music died away, I looked at her an' 'knowledged ter myse'f dat I loved her. At fust she sung fur my soul, an' I worshiped wid her, but atter w'ile she sung ter my heart an' I worshiped her. I tried ter think o' my ole wife lyin' in de shade o' de sycamo' trees, an' in my mine I could see de rail pen round her grave, but de naixt minit de grave an' de trees would be gone an' in dar place would stan' a likely 'oman, smilin' at me. I went ter my ole wife's grave an' drapped down on my knees an' prayed. De broad sycamo' leaves waved and specks o' moonlight come siftin' down like de flyin' chaff o' new oats dat ketches de light o' de fresh bo'n day. Er mawkin' bird sung in er tree close by, but way ober on er hill, er night hawk cried. I thought how me an' my old wife had wucked in the fiel', side by side, an' de bird seemed ter sing sweeter, but den, twixt me an' de grave dar hung er bright smile. I tried ter rub it out wid my han', but dar it hung, an' through its brightness I seed de worm-eat head board o' de grave. "O, Lawd," I prayed, "let dis tem'tation pass erway. Let dy sarvent in his old age hab de stren'th ter turn fum de high-strung follies o' de young man." I riz up, wid de damp, dead grass clingin' ter my knees. De lights gunter shine fum de church close by, an' de sad an' swellin' song o' de congergation peared ter lay er trimblin' han' on my heart. Why did I on er sudden lean ergin er tree? Becaze I heard her voice. I went inter de church an' ez I walked wid bowed head toward de pulpit I heard somebody whisper: "He's been in de woods ter pray." I did not look up but I knowed who it wuz dat whispered, for my heart felt de tech o' de tremblin' han'. I preached dat night de best I could, an' it seemed dat I made my hearers feel some o' my own sadness, fur w'en I called fur de stricken in heart ter come up ter de mou'ners' bench mo' come forward den had eber come be fo' under de' fluence o' my callin'. We stayed late in de church dat night. Nearly all de mou'ners, habin' wuck ter do de naixt day, had dun left' de house w'en I noticed one po' feller whose heart, it 'peared like, wuz almos' broke. He lay flat on de flo' an' groaned like he suffered great pain. I went ter him, raised him up an' hil' his head on my knee. De congergation thinned out, one by one. I leaned over an' talked ter de po' man. Lookin' up I seed dat Frances wuz kneelin' wid us.

"LET DIS TEM'TATION PASS ERWAY."

"Lady—sister Frances," I said, "it's time dat you wuz goin' home. De can'les is all burned away an' de lamps is goin' out."

"I will stay an' he'p you pour de ba'm on dis po' sinner," she replied.

"I didn' say no mo'; but w'en, mo' den er hour atterwards de sinner got up ter go I says ter her:

"Sister Frances, if you ain't got no 'jections, I'll walk home wid you."

She smiled—de same smile dat I had seed twixt me an' de worm eat head boa'd o' de grave—an' said dat she would be pleased fur me ter 'company her. I doan know whut I said ter her ez we walked erlong, but I know dat w'en we got ter de little gate in front o' de cabin' w'ar her folks libed, she wuz leanin' on my arm. De moon had gone down, an' de flutterin' in de trees in de yard told me dat de mawnin' birds wuz fixin' ter begin dar twitterin'.

"Brudder Summers," said de lady ez I wuz erbout ter bid her good-bye, "dar 'pears ter be suthin' on yo' mine."

"Not only on my mine, Sister Frances, but dar is suthin' on my heart."

I wuz goin' ter turn erway atter dis, but she put her han' on my arm—de same tremblin' han' dat had teched my heart—an' said:

"Tell me 'bout yo' troubles. Tell me whut is lyin' on yo' heart."

"Er tremblin han', lady."

"Does you know dat it is er han?"

"Yas, fur I ken see it in de light o' er bright smile."

"Is de han' cold?"

"No, lady."

"Is it ez wa'm ez mine?" she said, ez she put her han' in my own fever-like grasp. De naixt minit my arms wuz around her. De mawnin' birds twittered in de trees, light gunter wink ercross de bottoms, an' dar, ez de gold o' de day wuz chasin' de fleetin' silver o' de dawn, I axed her ter be my wife.

CHAPTER II.

We wuz married. I tuck her ter my cabin an' er bright light fell on my hearthstone. She wanted ter he'p me in my wuck o' 'swadin' folks ter do right. "I know," she said, "dat folks all er round us will be makin' mo' money den we is, but money doan water de flowers o' de heart, nur broaden de 'joyment dat comes ter de soul." I lubed her deeper atter she said dat, fur I seed dat her natur want vain nur her heart set upon de flesh pots o' de world.

I doan know wuder I preached better ur not, but I know dat wut I said gunter hab mo' 'fluence, an' dat folks gunter come fum fur erway plan'ations ter yere me. My wife's folks moved away, and w'en I axed her ef she didn't feel like she aughter go wid 'em, she smiled at wut she called my foolish joke, put her arms erround my naik an' said:

"Dave, w'en I goes erway fum you I'll be toted twixt men dat will walk slow."

Two years passed erway—two o' de happies' years o' my life. One day dar wuz some bills stuck up 'nouncin' dat Andrew Hennifen, er colored politician dat libed in town, would on de naixt Friday make er speech ter de folks. Er campaign wuz on han' an' gre't intrus' wuz felt in de outcome. W'en de day come de weather wuz so showery dat da couldn' hol' de meetin' out do's, so some o' de men come ter me an' axed me ef da mout meet in de church. I didn' much think dat it wuz de right sorter meetin' ter be hel' in de house o' de Lawd, but seein' dat da wuz all so anxious, I tole 'em dat da mout. Den da axed me ter go ober an' lissen ter de gre't speech wut de generman wuz gwine ter make. I didn' like de idee o' settin' in my own church and lissenin' ter de skussion o' de erfairs o' de worl'. Den Frances spoke up:

"W'y Dave," she said, "If we air gwine ter lib in de worl' we mus' take some intrus' in de erfairs o' de worl'. Ef de man hab got any thing wuth yearin, I doan see w'y we aughtenter go an' lissen ter him. Ef we finds dat wut he says ain't fit fur us, w'y den we ken come erway."

"Wut you says is true, Francis," I replied, "an' you mus' scuse me ef I is holdin' you back in any way. Er ole man loves wid jest ez much wa'mth ez er young man does, an' it is er pity dat he doan lub wid ez much jedgment.

"You musn't talk dat way, Dave," she said wid er laugh, "fur in lovin' me yo' jedgment ain't made no mistake."

Hennifen wuz er tall, yaller man, an' wuz much younger den I 'spected ter fine him. In his speech he used er good deal o' strong talk, an' called er lot o' folks dat wa'n't present, liars an' thieves. I didn't like dis, but er man dat set naixt ter me tole me dat it wuz all right, an' dat ef de speaker didn't do dater way de folks would think dat he wuz erfeerd ter 'nounce his principles. Atter de speakin' wuz over, de speaker come up ter me, hil out his han' an' said:

"Mr. Summers, I has often hearn o' you, sah, an' I takes dis 'tunity o' shakin' han's wid you."

W'en I had shuck han's wid him, he said: "Is dis yo' daughter wid you?"

"My wife, soh," said I.

"Ah, I'se pleased ter meet de lady."

We walked on outen de house, an' Hennifen wuz so busy talkin' 'bout de gre't principles o' his party dat he didn't seem ter notice dat he wuz walkin' erway fum de croud wid us. Atter w'ile he stopped an' said dat he reckoned he better go back.

"Won't you walk on home wid us?" my wife said.

"I thanks you kindly: I bl'ebe I will," he answered. "I would like ter see de inside o' my 'stinguished 'quaintance's house," makin' er sideways motion wid his head at me, "an' 'sides dat I'se got er little bizness ter talk ober wid him."

"You will see er lowly household," said I, "fur I ain't been 'gaged in gederin' de shinin' goods o' de yeth, but at de do' you will see er vine dat is watered wid truth an' dat blooms in contentment."

"Dar ain't no reason why dar shouldn' be some o' de shinin' goods o' de yeth in yo' house," said he. "De fack dat da is o' de yeth doan meck 'em none de less de Lawds, an' bein' shiny doan' meck 'em de property o' Satan."

I seed my wife look at him wi'd er quick glance, an' I knowed dat she 'proved o' wut he said. I seed mo' den dat—I seed wut until dat time had 'scaped me—I seed dat de man wuz good lookin'. I felt er pang o' oneasiness, an' I cleared my froat deep ez ef I would rasp de pang outen my bosom. W'en we got ter de house, he set down in er rockin' cheer an' made hisse'f look freer an' easier den I had eber felt in any house 'cep' my own. Frances went inter de little shed kitchin' dat j'ined de house an' cooked dinner. It struck me dat she tuck er heep o' pains, specially w'en she fotch out er table clof dat I didn't know she had. Atter dinner Mr. Hennifen, said dat he would git down ter bizness.

"Mr. Summers, you is too smart er man ter be wastin' yo, substance" wuz de way he started out. I didn't say nothin'. He went on; "You hab got de 'bility ter make yo'se'f mighty useful ter yo' country. De 'fluence dat you has 'stablished ober yo' feller man ken be turned ter rich ercount. De bes' people in dis county wants ter 'leck Hillson fur sheriff. Dis ken only be done by good men puttin' dar shoulders ter de wheel. I is Hillson's right han' man, an' I'se got de 'thority for sayin' dat if you'll turn in an' make speeches fur him dat he will pay you well."

My wife looked at me. "Mr. Hennifen," said I, "wut you say may be de truf, but I is makin' speeches fur de Lawd."

"Yes, but makin' speeches fur de Lawd, Mr. Summers, needen't keep you from speakin' in faber o' Hillson."

"Dave," said my wife, "Mr. Hennifen is sholy right, an' mo'n dat, ef dar's er man in dis neighborhood dat needs money, you is de man. De folks dat lissuns ter you preach neber seems ter know dat we needs things in dis house."

"Frances," I replied, Mr. Hillson ain't er man o' my choice. He has been mixed up in ugly erfairs, an' I kain't make no speeches fur him; so, let de subjeck drap right whar it is."

HE MADE HIMSELF PRE AND EASY.

Hennifen 'sisted on sayn' mo,' but I tole him it want no use. He didn't stay long atter dis, but sayin' dat he wond see me ergin, went erway.

"Does you alluz 'spect ter lib in poverty?" my wife axed.

"I doan 'spect ter meck speeches in faber o' er dishones' man," I answered.

Hennifen come back inter de neighborhood de naixt week an' called at my house but I want at home. W'en I axed Frances wut he had ter say, she said dat he didn't stay but er few miuits an' didn't say much o' anythin'. Er few days atterwards I hearn dat he wuz in de neighborhood ergin', workin' wid de voters, but he didn't come ter my house an' I didn't hunt him.

Nearly er munt must ha passed w'en one day I wuz called on ter preach de funu'o' er man ober in ernuder 'munity. I didn't git back till late in de night. De house wuz dark, an' ez I went up ter de do' I tangled my foot in de vine, stumbled an tore it up by de roots. I went in an' lit de candle. Frances want dar. I called er—stepped to de do' an' called her 'till de cho o' my voice brought back wid it de cry' er night bird. I went ober ter er neighbors house. De women folks gunter cry ez soon ez da seed me. I axed ef da had seen Frances.

"O, Bruder Summers, she's dun gone wid dat yaller rasxel. He fotch er buggy an' tuck her erway."

I went down ter de sycamor' trees w'a'r my old wife wuz buried, an' got down on my knees. Dar want no bright smile twixt me an' de grave.

CHAPTER III.

De women folks fotch flowers nearly ever' day an' put 'em in my house, an' de men folks tuck off dar hats wen da come w'ar I wuz. I kep' on makin' speeches fur de Lawd, an' men dat wuz once noisy in church wuz now quiet.

De 'leckshun time come on, and I kotch up my old gray hoss an' rid up ter town. I went ter all de votin' places but didn't see nobody dat I knowed. I heard one man say: "Wonder wut dat cuis lookin' ole man is er pokin' roun' yere fur." Den somebody answered: "Dars er yaller man dodgin' round yere some whar dat mout fling some light on dat question." Ever' time I hearn o' any p'litical 'ter-do any whar, I rid dar, but didn't see nobody dat I knowed.

Winter time come, de col'est winter dat I eber felt. One Sunday dar come er heavy snow, an' dat night it turned so col' dat I could hardly keep wa'm by de fire. De win' blowed hard. Suthin' flapped ergin de winder. I hil de candle an' dar seed de great starin' eyes o' er night bird. I turned erway an' had jes sot down by de fire w'en I hearn er noise at de do'; I lissened, an' den I hearn er groan. My heart felt de tech o' er cold han' an' I knowed dat Frances had come back. I opened de do'; she lay on de groun' wid her face turned up. I tuck her in my arms an' laid her on de bed.

"Dave—Dave, won't you forgib me?"

I stood lookin' at her. "O won't you forgib me? De Lawd has pardoned me an' I has come back ter ax you—you—"

"Yas," I said, "yas, po' child. Go ter sleep in peace."

She looked at me an' tried ter smile, but de light wuz gone an' dar want no smile twixt me an' de grave.

We laid her under de sycamo' trees, but not w'ar my ole wife was buried.

I kep' on goin' ter p'litical meetins', as some folks wondered why er ole man dat neber voted tuck such intrust in sich erfairs.

"STOP, ER I'LL KILL YOU."

One day I wuz ridin' 'long er road near w'ar er number o' convicts wuz at work. I seed er man dat I knowed cross de road in front o' me. I turned toward him. He flung up er gun an' cried out:

"Stop er I'll kill you. Been er huntin' me long ernuff."

I didn't stop, an' he fired at me, an' den, flingin' down de gun, he clim de fence an' gunter run ercross er fiel'. Er mighty yelpin' noise made de a'r ring, an' lookin' erway ter de right, I seed er lot o' blood houn's dat da kep' fur chasin' de convicts. Da wuz atter de man. Somebody yelled ter 'em ter stop, but da didn'. I got offen my hoss, an' wid seb'ral men followed de dogs. We heard de man holler—we seed him tryin' ter fight off de dogs. "Mussyful God!" I hearn him cry, an' den his voice wuz swallowed up by de howlin' o' de dogs. Wen we come up ter w'ar de dogs wuz, I seed er man tore all ter pieces, an' I seed er dog, atter lookin' at me, bury his teeth in er yaller face.

Dat night ez I riz up fum my ole wife's grave, de dead, damp grass clung ter my knees.

THE GOLDEN ROSE.

An Interesting Papal Custom of Considerable Antiquity.

One of the features of the ceremonies at the Vatican is the blessing by the Pope of the "Golden Rose." This rose is an ornament, blessed every year on the fourth Sunday in Lent, "Lære Sunday," and afterwards sent by the Pope by some Catholic ruler, male or female, to noted churches or sanctuaries, to great Generals, to illustrious Catholic cities or republics, or to great benefactors to the Church. It is not known under what Pope the present practice began, but the idea seems to have originated in the thirteenth century.

Originally it took the form of a single flower of wrought gold, which was colored red; then the petals were ornamented with rubies and gems; finally the form took the shape of a thorny branch, with several flowers and buds on it, the principal one being of pure gold, richly chased and displaying all possible ornamentation of the goldsmith art. The practice of sending this present seems to have been an evolution of the old custom of the Popes from the earliest times to send presents to friendly potentates. Gregory the Great, used to send golden keys filled with filings from St. Peter's chains; Boniface V. sent a shirt with golden ornaments to Edwin, King of Northumbia in 626, and a gilded silver comb and an ivory mirror to Ethelberga, his Queen; Urban V. sent a Golden Rose to Joana, of Naples, in 1366.

Among other historical records of the presentation of the Golden Rose are the following: Henry VIII. received it from three Popes as "a defender of the faith," the last time from Clement VII. in 1524. Julius III. sent it to Queen Mary in 1555. Pius IV. sent it in 1564 to the Republic of Lucca, and Pius V. to the Lateran Basilica in 1567, and it was sent to the Sanctuary of Loretto, by Gregory XIII., in 1584. Clement IX. in 1668 bestowed it on Maria Theresa, Queen of France, and Innocent XI. on Mary Casimir, Queen of Poland, her husband, John Sobieska, having recently defeated the Turks in the battle of Lepanto. In 1762 Benedict XIII. sent the Golden Rose to the Cathedral at Capau, and in 1833 Gregory XVI. sent it to the Basilica of St. Mark's, Venice. Pius IX. gave it to Napoleon III. and to Isabella of Spain. The present Pope sent it to the late Queen Mercedes and to Mrs. Ellen E. Sherman, wife of General W. T. Sherman, the only American who ever received the honor.—Des Moines Register.

BEARDED BEAUTIES.

Women With Hirsute Appendages Who Were Known the World Over.

Bearded women have always attracted considerable public attention in France, and some interest therefore attaches to the fact that the doyenne, or eldest member of what may be called the "galaxy of Galic femmes a barbe," has just departed this life in a little village in the Pyrenean department of the Ariege. She had exhibited herself at fairs for the space of sixty years, and was supposed to be the woman who inspired the celebrated cafe-concert refrain of Theresa, "C'est moi qui suis la femme a barbe!" Her early successes caused a legion of imitators to spring up, and women with beards and whiskers were sought for everywhere by speculative Barnums with as much energy as was displayed by the agents of Frederick the Great in their hunts for giants who were to be enrolled in the Royal Guards. The lady from the department of the Ariege, however, long held her own, because she was a genuine article, while many of her rivals were unmitigated frauds, who were popularly supposed to have either false whiskers or to have cultivated diligently their originally slender hirsute appendage with artful unguents. Therefore she amassed a little fortune, on which she lived in comfort in her native village for the past few years. Nowadays Parisians, and even provincials, have become rather tired of bearded "beauties"—there have been too many of them. One of the most remarkable femmes a barbe of recent years was an Alsatian called "La Belle Catherine," who used to make capital not only out of her beard, but out of the conquest of Alsace. She was wont to say to her visitors in a Franco-German jargon: "Meissieurs et mesdames, chai suis femme a barbe et chai obte (not opte) pour la France." Catherine was also a considerable giantess, and was in the habit of calling the attention of spectators to the smallness of her ankle as contrasted with the girth and vastness of her body. There is a curious story told of another bearded woman named Jacquelin Doublin, who fell in love with an actor. She had seen him in the Chatelet theater one night, and from that moment she only exhibited herself during the day. When night came she put on male attire and repaired to the theater, where she contented herself with looking on and applauding the man of her choice. One night she was recognized, and the people laughed at her, so she rushed off to the barber's and had her beard shaved and her face well powdered. Nevertheless, she was again recognized in the theater and was heartily hooted by a cruel crowd. In despair Jacquelin went home and died of a broken heart.—London Telegraph.

REVENGE IS SWEET.

How a Counter Gentleman and Saleslady Rebuked Their Employer.

The cold, haughty, purse-proud merchant prince who treats his ribbon counter gentleman and gentlemen's underwear saleslades with mere civility or chilling indifference had better beware. The time may come when their positions may be reversed.

"See here, Jinks," said one of these arrogant millionaires one day to a ninety-pound ribbon counter clerk, "you want to attend to your business better, young man, and not waste so much of your time flirting with that red-headed underwear girl across the aisle, mind that."

Enraged and humiliated, the downtrodden ribbon counter serf vows and seeks revenge. His time comes soon, aye, that very night!

The purse-proud, cold-blooded merchant prince goes to the theater. He buys an admission ticket and stands up, being of an economical turn of mind.

"Let us pass, sir," says a calm, cold voice at his side. He looks down and beholds the ribbon-counter clerk in the magnificence of full dress, with the underwear girl in flowing robes and sixteen-button kids hanging to his arm. The eyes of the men meet, but there is no sign of recognition on the part of the ribbon-counter clerk, only a cold, haughty, fixed stare as he passes proudly on to the three-dollar seats reserved for him and the underwear girl, while the snubbed and humiliated merchant prince stands on in the midst of his own bitter reflections.—Detroit Free Press.

SIBERIA.

Its Secrets Revealed—George Kennan's Wonderful Journey.

MOST interesting contribution to secret history will be the illustrated papers on "Siberia and the Exile System," by George Kennan, which are to begin in the May Century magazine. They will embody the results of what is believed to be the first successful attempt by a competent investigator to make a thorough study of the Russian exile system. Before undertaking his arduous journey of 15,000 miles, in the interest of The Century, Mr. Kennan, author of Tent Life in Siberia, etc., had spent four years in Russia and Siberia, was thoroughly conversant with the people and the language, and had reached the conclusion that the Russian Government had been misrepresented, and that the exile system of Siberia was not so terrible as was supposed. Knowing that Mr. Kennan held these views, the Russian Government gave him every facility for a thorough of Siberia—the most thorough that had ever been made by a traveler. Armed with letters from the Russian Minister of the Interior and other high officials, Mr. Kennan went everywhere, inspecting mines and prisons, convict barges and hospitals, and traveling with chained exiles along the great Siberian road. He made the intimate personal acquaintance of more than three hundred exiled "liberals" and Nihilists, many of whom wrote out their histories for his use. The actual facts, as revealed by this searching investigation, were far removed from Mr. Kennan's preconceived ideas, as this thrilling narrative of fifteen months' privation and adventure will show.

INSPECTION OF MINES AND PRISONS

As is already known, the publication of Mr. Kennan's preliminary papers has resulted in his being placed by the Russian Government, and copies of The Century containing them have the objectionable article torn out by the custom officials before being allowed to enter the Czar's dominions.

ON THE BLACK LIST

"I expected, of course," says Mr. Kennan, in a recent interview, "to be put on the Russian black list. The stable-door is locked, but the horse has been stolen—and I've got him."

BOARDING A CONVICT BARGE.

Mr. G. A. Frost, artist and photographer, accompanied Mr. Kennan, and the results of his work will form a wonderfully interesting series of pictures of Russian and Siberian life and scenery.

The articles begin in the May Century, which is a great issue in many other respects, containing also an interesting illustrated article on ranch life; first chapters of "The Liar," a novelette by Henry James; the exciting narrative, "A Locomotive Chase in Georgia;" a suggestive paper on "The Chances of Being Hit in Battle;" an essay on Milton by Matthew Arnold; "A Love Story Reversed," by Edward Bellamy, etc., etc. Our local bookseller will have the number after the first of May.

PROFI ABLE TREES.

Cedar and Pine Plantation for Poor and Sandy Soil.

As red cedar and yellow pine are very valuable, the first for stakes, posts and beams, and the latter for boards, greater attention should be paid to their growth, particularly on poor, sandy soil, where they succeed better than any other trees. Coming into possession in 1866, of some acres of poor white sandy land, I found nothing growing on it but a few scattered red cedars, showing reasonable thrift. Judging from these that others could be grown there to more profit than any thing else except pine, I went to the edge of a forest where young trees were abundant, and took up cedars and pines from twelve to eighteen inches high and set them in this sandy soil. These trees have too long a taproot to insure their being safely transplanted much larger than this, and so the planting was confined to such small ones. They were lifted from their place of growth with half a spadeful or so of soil beneath their roots and put carefully on the floor of a cart; and in setting them out, they were lifted in the same careful manner and set in the holes dug for them. These holes were roomy enough to hold their roots at full extent, and thus prevent all cramping. After setting, the ground was tramped solid around each tree. As there was not sufficient time to transplant all required in the spring, the work was continued during the whole summer. All my neighbors advised against this late transplanting; declared that not a tree would live; but I believed that taken up so carefully, with all the soil that was attached to them, and set down in the same careful manner, they would grow on as rapidly as if left in the soil where they came up. The result proved I was almost entirely right, for not ten per cent. of the trees were lost. I continued this transplanting for several years, till all the vacant ground desired was covered, and the summer months were oftener used than the spring, for my men had more time then for the work. One can not expect a rapid growth of any thing in a poor white sandy soil, destitute of all but a slight trace of vegetable matter, but these trees now stand from eleven to eighteen feet high, and the trunks of some will soon be sufficiently large for ordinary posts. Where proving too close together in growing up, numbers have been cut for grapevine stakes and bean-poles, for which purpose they last longer than any other timber except locust. We have millions of acres of sandy soil. Much of this land is quite unproductive. It could be cheaply planted with red cedar and pine, which would attain growth enough for large lumber in forty to fifty years, which would then render the land highly valuable. Some hesitate to make such plantations, saying they might not live long enough to reap any benefit from them. Well, suppose they do not, their heirs will, and there is a high gratification in knowing that the land could not otherwise probably have been put to so profitable a use.—A. B. Allen, in N. Y. Tribune.

FARM AND FIRESIDE.

—A plan recommended to induce a sheep to own her lamb is to sprinkle salt upon its back.

—Cream Cake: One cup sweet cream, one cup sugar, two eggs, two cups flour, two teaspoons baking powder, and flavor to taste.

—Teaspoons vary in size, and the new ones hold about twice as much as an old-fashioned spoon of thirty years ago. A medium-sized teaspoon contains about a dram. Four teaspoons are equal to one tablespoon.

—When dusting the fowls with insect powder put a newspaper under them. One can in this way gather up some of the powder for use again, and will be able to see also its destructive effect upon the insects.

—It is a wasteful practice to haul out manure in winter and leave it in small heaps till spring. The manure often heats and throws off the ammonia, which is lost. If spread at once it will not heat.

—A very pretty ornament for a room is made by covering a piece of board with plush, then fasten a pair of gilt slippers on the center for matches and on each side put some hooks for keys, etc. Hang by a cord.

—It has been found that one part of paris green or London purple suffices for 150 parts of plaster, when well mixed together, to kill the potato beetle. One-half pound of either poison suffices for five gallons of water.

—Potato Custard: Grate six large potatoes, add to them one quart of boiling milk; stir in three beaten eggs and one-quarter of a pound of sugar, boil seven minutes, taking care not to let it burn, then add one-half cup of butter. This will make three good sized custards.

—If the land requires drainage it means an outlay of $25 to $50 per acre before the farm can be made tillable and productive. To test this matter the soil should be dug into with a spade three feet deep, and if water rises in the hole at any time of the year the land needs thorough draining.

—In putting out onion sets have the ground very fine and simply place them on the row, slightly pressing them down, leaving the greater portion of the tops above the surface. Where onions are cultivated in large quantities the sets are thinly scattered in the rows without regard to regularity and thinly covered.

GROWING SEED CORN.

How to Insure Improvement in the Yield and Quality of the Crops.

Would it not be a good plan for each farmer to select from the seed corn to be grown the coming season the very best and prepare in the best manner a sufficient portion of the best ground to grow seed for the succeeding season's crop? Plow this portion extra deep, making narrow furrows so as to break up the soil and make it fine; harrow sufficiently to put it in the best possible condition, then plant in rows of the usual distance apart, making the hills three to three and a half feet apart, and allow but one stalk to grow in a place. This will give sufficient room to each stalk to make the best growth; the ears on such stalks will attain the greatest amount of vitality for seed purposes. In this way the corn plant may be greatly improved from year to year, and the seed will produce an increased yield of crop each season.

These wide spaces between the stalks will admit the sun's heat and light and will afford best facilities for the deposit of plant food by the air—the "great reservoir of fertility." If the ground has been plowed deep and well prepared before planting, and the cultivation is begun as soon as the plant can be seen, and continued at least once each week until the grains of the ears begin to harden, the greatest possible amount of plant food will be secured for the use of the crop both from the surrounding atmosphere and from great depths in the earth, while the needed moisture will in this way be kept up so that in either a wet season or during protracted droughts, the most favorable conditions are supplied for the most perfect growth and development of the plants and the seeds borne by them.

For large growing varieties four feet apart both ways would most likely give the best results for seed purposes. Varieties that grow a small stalk may be grown three or four feet apart. The main thing is to give ample room to each stalk to make the best growth and yet be close enough to each other to favor fertilization. The greatest distance between stalks, and not interfere with perfect fertilization, is desirable. Certainly no objection can be offered against growing seed in such a way as to afford the best facilities for making the best growth. By giving wide spaces the tendency to make a heavy low stalk will be much favored, and such stalks are much to be preferred to those that grow tall and spindling.

Farmers would do well to give greater care to the production of good seed for all crops. The influence of seed over the general yield and quality of crops has very much to do in deciding whether the crop shall be a failure in part or whether it shall be such as to compensate for all the labor and expense in its production and leave a margin for profit. The ordinary manner of saving seed for small grain crops is not such as to secure the best, the practice being to take seed from the bin where a large amount is stored, and which is liable to become overheated, or musty, thus impairing its vitality for seed purposes. Extra care and attention in growing seeds of small grain crops would insure better yields and would result in a continued improvement each season both in yield and quality.—E. S. Teegarden, in Ohio Farmer.

THE ZUNI INDIANS.

A Curious People That is Neither Ancient Nor Ingenious.

Cosmos Mendeleff has returned from Arizona to Washington. Mendeleff, as his name indicates, is a Russian, and he is an intelligent and expert explorer on the staff of Major John W. Powell, Chief of the Bureau of Ethnology. For six years he and his older brother, Victor, have been engaged in the survey of the antique ruins of Chaco and the inhabited pueblos of Zuni and the seven villages of Tusayan, and together they mapped the queer habitations of those mysterious people, and have made for the National Museum models of the largest and most interesting pueblos. Mendeleff has made some three hundred photographs and a large number of free-hand sketches of the strange residences of this remnant of a race.

"I don't know that there is much that is really new," said Mendeleff. "It was formerly, indeed recently, thought that the pueblos were very ancient—the same in which this half-civilized race lived at the time of the Spanish conquest—but we now know better. The inhabited villages which exist to-day are all modern. It was formerly supposed that the Tusayan Indians never changed their place of abode, but held to the same site from generation to generation. It is now known that they have been in the habit of abandoning their old houses and building new. In early days the villages were mostly in the lowlands, and they were gradually crowded up or climbed up to the practically inaccessible mesas—sharp cliffs, easily defensible. The reasons for an abandonment of villages and the building of others are many, sometimes military, but often rooted in some superstition.

"The builders of these pueblos had very meager architectural attainments. Their houses are poor piles of stone and mud. Their ingenuity was puerile. The element of skill is almost wholly lacking. These curious ruins are simply an evidence of the existence of a race with unlimited time at their disposal and unlimited material at hand. Everywhere is shown a lamentable lack of constructive ability. They did not know how to make a square room, or how to rear one wall at right angles, or how to make a circle or even a straight line."

Mr. Mendeleff has comprehensive photographs of the seven Tusayan villages. Each village consists of fifteen or twenty houses and each house of several residences. The house is a series of terraces, receding as they rise. The first story is about seven feet high, and is approached from without only by a ladder, which leads to a hole in the roof. In war times the ladder is always pulled up. From the rear of this story rises the second story, seven feet higher, mounted also by a ladder, and other ladders lead to a third and perhaps fourth story. Of course the first story under this arrangement is of much the largest and the upper story of much the smallest area, and as the latter is the lightest, the best ventilated and the safest, being defensible from all the roofs below, it is the favorite habitation, and usually occupied by the officers and the aristocracy. It is estimated that in all the seven Tusayan villages there are 2,000 people. They live mainly on Indian corn, squashes and beans. They are under Mormon influence and will not permit a census or hold much intercourse with Americans. Colonel and Mrs. Stevenson had trouble with them, and were compelled to depart. Mr. Mendeleff and his party were treated remarkably well and are puzzled in trying to account for it.

"Perhaps the oddest thing," added Mr. Mendeleff, after a moment's pause, "is the status of woman in these queer communities. She owns all the houses and most of the property. The man owns the crop in the field, but as soon as it is harvested it belongs to his wife. She controls the house and all that is in it. She works steadily and constantly in the duties of the household, but she does no field work, and, taking it all together, her condition compares favorably with that of the American farmer's wife. The descent of all property is in the female line and through the mother; it is she who makes the will and provides for the offspring."

"What does the man own then,?" I asked.

"The donkeys, perhaps," he said; "but I am not sure about that."

"And the land?"

"No, the land is not owned individually. Ever since before historic time land has been owned by the whole nation. If an Indian goes out and takes up some land not in use and cultivates it, nobody can take it from him. But if he stops using it anybody else can jump it. It belongs to the fellow that can use it."

"How does that work?"

"There are no millionaires. There is about the same degree of comfort that there is among very poor people anywhere. As to land, the shrewdest and smartest Indian manages to get the best, the same as under any system."—Washington Letter.

Question From the Jury.

"Gentlemen of the jury," said the judge, as he concluded his charge, "if the evidence shows in your minds that pneumonia, even indirectly, was the cause of the man's death, the prisoner can not be convicted."

An hour later a messenger came from the jury room.

"The gentlemen of the jury, your Honor," he said, "desire information."

"On what point of evidence?"

"None, your Honor; they want to know how to spell pneumonia."—N. Y. Sun.

A RACY BOOK.

Scintillating with Sarcasm and Brilliant Truth.

New York Letter.

Chap. I. "Has Malaria;" goes to Florida.
Chap. II. "Overworked;" goes to Europe.
Chap. III. "Has Rheumatism;" goes to Ems.
Chap. IV. Has a row with his Doctor.

I have read a deal of sarcasm in my day but I never read anything equal to the sarcasm contained in the above four chaptered book, written by some anonymous. I suspect the experience portrayed is a personal one; the author intimates as much on page 31. Let me give you a synopsis:

"Malaria" as it states, "is the cloak with which superficial physicians cover up a multitude of ill feelings which they do not understand, and do not much care to investigate. It is also a cover for such diseases as they can not cure. When they advise their patient to travel or that he has overworked and needs rest and is probably suffering from malaria, it is a confession of ignorance or of inability."

"The patient goes abroad. The change is a tonic and for a time he feels better. Comes home. Fickle appetite, frequent headaches, severe colds, cramps, sleeplessness, irritability, tired feelings, and general unfitness for business are succeeded in due time by alarming attacks of rheumatism which flits about his body regardless of all human feelings.

"It is muscular—in his back. Articular—in his joints. Inflammatory, my! how he fears it will fly to his heart!

"Now off he goes to the springs. The doctor sends him there, of course, to get well; at the same time he does not really want him to die on his hands!

That would hurt his business!

"Better for a few days. Returns. A while neuralgia transfixes him. He bloats; can not breathe; has pneumonia; can not walk; can not sleep on his left side; is fretful; very nervous and irritable; is pale and flabby; has frequent chills and fevers; everything about him seems to go wrong; becomes suspicious; musters up courage and demands to know what is killing him!

"Great heaven!" he cries, "why have you kept me so long in ignorance!"

"Because," said the doctor, "I read your fate five years ago. I thought best to keep you ignorant of the facts."

He dismisses his doctor, but too late! His fortune has all gone in fees.

But him, what becomes of him?

The other day a well known Wall Street banker said to me "it is really astonishing how prevalent bright's disease is becoming. Two of my personal friends are now dying of it. But it is not incurable I am certain, for my nephew was recently cured when his physicians said recovery was impossible. The case seems to me to be a wonderful one." This gentleman formerly represented his government in a foreign country. He knows, appreciates and declares the value of that preparation, because his nephew, who is a son of Danish Vice-Consul Schmidt, was pronounced incurable when the remedy, Warner's safe cure, was begun. "Yes," said his father, "I was very skeptical, but since taking that remedy the boy is well."

I happen to know what it was that cured the boy, for Genl. Christiansen, of Drexel, Morgan & Co's., told me that it was that 'wonderful remedy Warner's safe cure.'

Well, I suspect the hero of the book cured himself by the same means.

I can not close my notice better than by quoting the author's advice:

"If, my friend, you have such an experience as I have portrayed, do not put your trust in physicians to the exclusion of other remedial agencies. They have no monopoly over disease and I personally know that many of them would far prefer that their patients should go to Heaven direct from their powerless hands than that they should be saved to earth by the use of any "unauthorized means."

OF INTEREST

TO EVERYBODY.

Thalia Theatre, New York.
I have been a sufferer from nervousness and nervous prostration for years, and have tried many things, but without the least good. Hearing so much about Dr. Greene's Nervura Nerve Tonic from my neighbors and others whom it cured, I at last decided to try it. Its effects are really almost magical. It immediately takes away that nervous, all-gone weak feeling or sense of exhaustion, and in one word perfects one in health. It has been and a wonderful blessing to nervous
Lucie Werner.

The wonderful remedy, whose praise is upon every one's lips, must be the most marvelous in its curative powers of any remedy ever discovered. We hear every day of remarkable cures of nervousness, nervous weakness, exhaustion, paralysis or other nervous diseases effected by this great nerve tonic and restorative. Here a person rescued from the grave, he was Mrs. Annie Donovan, of Attawangan, Conn.; there a case saved from that terrible disease, insanity, as was Mrs. W. C. Miles, of 46 Blue Hill Avenue, Boston, Mass.; again, cures of paralysis of long standing, like that of Mr. Alexander Horn, of the Maine Asylum, Philadelphia, Pa., who had not been able to walk before for years; or restoration from the severest neuralgia and rheumatism, like the case of Mr. James Bown, of 27 Market Street, New York City, and sleeplessness, with nervous and physical exhaustion, are very frequent, to wonderful cure of Mrs. W. F. Abbe, of 19 Affek Street, Hanford, Conn., being only one among thousands. Altogether, the remarkable power of Dr. Greene's Nervura Nerve Tonic in curing all forms of nervous diseases like the above and restoring to health sufferers from nervous affections have demonstrated it to be a remedy of wonderful powers and at times of almost miraculous effects in curing disease.

If you are weak tired, nervous and exhausted, with no ambition to work or do any thing, do not fail to use this marvelous remedy, for it will restore your strength, vigor and energies. It will remove all nervousness and nervous weakness. If you are sleepless, restless and wakeful nights its use will soothe, calm and quiet the nerves and give you sound, natural and refreshing sleep. If you wake tired mornings, with dull head, bad taste in the mouth, no appetite and general dispirited feeling, it will clear your head, give you an appetite, banish that tired feeling and afford you renewed life. It is the best remedy in the world and cures perfectly and completely spring debility, malaria, nervous debility, nervous and physical exhaustion from overwork, strain upon the nerves, or other cause, depression of the mind, neuralgia, paralysis, nervousness, trembling, nervous and sick headaches, pain in back and side, hot flashes, palpitation and heart disease, hysteria, dyspepsia, indigestion, opium or chloral habit, etc. It is purely vegetable, and therefore harmless.

Use this remedy and you will be amazed at its wonderful toning, strengthening and invigorating effects upon both nerves and body. It is for sale by all druggists at $1 per bottle. If your druggist does not have it, he will get it for you. The discoverer of his great nerve cure is Dr. Greene, of 35 W 14th Street, New York, and he may be consulted free of charge, personally or by letter.

WHAT AILS YOU?

Do you feel dull, languid, low-spirited, lifeless, and indescribably miserable, both physically and mentally; experience a sense of fullness or bloating after eating, or of "goneness," or emptiness of stomach in the morning, tongue coated, bitter or bad taste in mouth, irregular appetite, dizziness, frequent headaches, blurred eyesight, "floating specks" before the eyes, nervous prostration or exhaustion, irritability of temper, hot flushes, alternating with chilly sensations, sharp, biting, transient pains here and there, cold feet, drowsiness after meals, wakefulness, or disturbed and unrefreshing sleep, constant, indescribable feeling of dread, or of impending calamity?

If you have all, or any considerable number of these symptoms, you are suffering from that most common of American maladies—Bilious Dyspepsia, or Torpid Liver, associated with Dyspepsia, or Indigestion. The more complicated your disease has become, the greater the number and diversity of symptoms. No matter what stage it has reached, Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery will subdue it, if taken according to directions for a reasonable length of time. If not cured, complications multiply and Consumption of the Lungs, Skin Diseases, Heart Disease, Rheumatism, Kidney Disease, or other grave maladies are quite liable to set in and, sooner or later, induce a fatal termination.

Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery acts powerfully upon the Liver, and through that great blood-purifying organ, cleanses the system of all blood-taints and impurities, from whatever cause arising. It is equally efficacious in acting upon the Kidneys, and other excretory organs, cleansing, strengthening, and healing their diseases. As an appetizing, restorative tonic, it promotes digestion and nutrition, thereby building up both flesh and strength. In malarial districts, this wonderful medicine has gained great celebrity in curing Fever and Ague, Chills and Fever, Dumb Ague, and kindred diseases.

Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery

CURES ALL HUMORS,

from a common Blotch, or Eruption, to the worst Scrofula. Salt-rheum, "Fever-sores," Scaly or Rough Skin, in short, all diseases caused by bad blood are conquered by this powerful, purifying, and invigorating medicine. Great Eating Ulcers rapidly heal under its benign influence. Especially has it manifested its potency in curing Tetter, Eczema, Erysipelas, Boils, Carbuncles, Sore Eyes, Scrofulous Sores and Swellings, Hip-Joint Disease, "White Swellings," Goitre, or Thick Neck, and Enlarged Glands. Send ten cents in stamps for a large Treatise, with colored plates, on Skin Diseases, or the same amount for a Treatise on Scrofulous Affections.

"FOR THE BLOOD IS THE LIFE."

Thoroughly cleanse it by using Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery, and good digestion, a fair skin, buoyant spirits, vital strength and bodily health will be established.

CONSUMPTION,

which is Scrofula of the Lungs, is arrested and cured by this remedy, if taken in the earlier stages of the disease. From its marvelous power over this terribly fatal disease, when first offering this now world-famed remedy to the public, Dr. Pierce thought seriously of calling it his "Consumption Cure," but abandoned that name as too restrictive for a medicine which, from its wonderful combination of tonic, or strengthening, alterative, or blood-cleansing, anti-bilious, pectoral, and nutritive properties, is unequaled, not only as a remedy for Consumption, but for all Chronic Diseases of the Liver, Blood, and Lungs.

For Weak Lungs, Spitting of Blood, Shortness of Breath, Chronic Nasal Catarrh, Bronchitis, Asthma, Severe Coughs, and kindred affections, it is an efficient remedy.

Sold by Druggists, at $1.00, or Six Bottles for $5.00.

A Hit That Hurts.

No one has hit the Mills tariff bill a harder blow from the standpoint of the wage earners of this country than W. L. Strong, of New York, a man of few words but expert in figures.

Mr. Mills stated in his speech introducing his bill that the entire production of all kinds of manufacturing in this country amounted to $7,000,000,000, (a vast sum certainly.) The statistics show that 20 per cent of this immense output is the average cost of labor, or, in other words, 20 cents on every dollar of the seven billions is paid out as wages.

Now contrast this with the amount that would be paid out as wages in Germany and England on a similar amount of production. In the United States we would pay out exactly one billion and four hundred million of dollars. In Germany they would pay out $616,000,000 and in England $784,000,000.

These stubborn facts, says Mr. Strong, show the following result:

We pay in this country $784,000,000 more to our wage earners than would be paid out in Germany to produce the same amount of goods, and $616,000,000 more than would be paid out in free trade England for the same amount of product.

The entire revenue collected by us on all importations during the year ending June 30, 1887, amounted to $217,286,893. If the wage earners paid all of this amount (which of course they do not) they would have a balance of $398,713,893 to their credit on the English pay roll and $566,713,167 to their credit on the German pay roll.

The State of Trade.

NEW YORK, April 27.—R. G. Dun & Co., in their weekly review of trade, say: The situation is unusually confused. Advancing markets for stocks and for grain contradict each other. The Western reports as to the probable crops are more definitely unfavoraable. The reports of business transacted are by no means uniformly favorable.

There is prospect that the output of iron will now improve, though prices do not. The accounts of the boot and shoe trade are a little better, though the demand of buyers for lower prices appear to cause hesitation. There have been considerable sales of leather at some concessions, and hides are weak.

Wheat has advanced one cent, and corn a half cent, with hog and pork products weaker. The general average of prices is now a little lower than it has been at any other time since January 1, notwithstanding an advance of four per cent on breadstuffs.

It becomes more clear that the prevailing tendency of prices and of wages is towards a lower level, though actual or apprehended scarcity of farm products affects prices in some speculative markets.

OUR WASHINGTON LETTER.

(From our Regular Correspondent.)

WASHINGTON, April 30, 1888.—"Blaine and Depew will be the ticket nominated by the Chicago convention, and they will carry New York by over 25,000 majority." The speaker was a New York Republican who has for many years been closely connected with the late Roscoe Conkling in political affairs, and who refused to vote for Blaine in 1884. In reply to my questions he said: "Mr. Conkling and his friends—myself included—made a mistake in refusing to support Mr. Blaine. We saw it when too late to change the result, but we propose to make amends this year by insisting upon the nomination of Mr. Blaine. Mr. Conkling was thoroughly in sympathy with this movement and had he lived would have stumped the State for Blaine. Mr. Blaine was defeated by our defection in the State of New York. He stood the punishment like a man and now we intend to see that he is rewarded for his long service and fidelity to the principles of the Republican party, and in order to make assurance doubly sure we propose to put Chauncey Depew, New York's brainiest and most popular son, on the ticket with him. Blaine and Depew make a combination that will be invincible in New York."

"Will Mr. Dapew accept the second place on the ticket?" I asked, "Yes, with Mr. Blaine first. He thinks Blaine the greatest living American, and would make almost any personal sacrifice to help to make him President,"

If this program is to be carried out what is to become of the booms of all the other "favorite sons" of the various States? "When they are informed, as they will be at the proper time, that this ticket is the unanimous choice of the united Republican party of the State of New York, and that its nomination will take that State out of the doubtful column and restore it to its oldtime position at the head of the Republican column, they wil all acquiese and the nomination will be made by acclamation. Then will follow the most enthusiastic campaign of the age."

Gray of Indiana seems to be in the lead for the Democratic nomination for the vice-Presidency. His name, it is thought will console the ex-rebels for not getting one of their number nominated.

Representative Brown, of Indiana, who is an authority on politics in his State thinks the Republicans will carry it this fall. His reasons are the lack of harmony among the Democrats; the disaffection, through disappointment at not getting offices; of the immense array of ward and precinct workers and the bitter feeling between the McDonald and Gray factions of the Democratic party.

The tariff debate in the House still goes on, and much campaign material is being gathered by both sides. Mr. Brewer, of Michigan, made a good point on the Democrats in his speech on Thursday. He said; "In time past the Democratic party had sought to evade the tariff issue. In its platform of 1884 it declared for protection, for free trade, for incidental protection, for tariff for revenue only, and for tariff only for revenue; so that the voter could construe the platform to suit his own convictions. In Kentucky the platform meant free trade; in Pennsylvania, New York, Connecticut and New Jersey the party was able to make the voters believe it meant protection. By reason of the frand and intimidation practiced in one section of the country, and by means of deception practiced by Democratic leaders in another section, the Democratic candidate for the Presidency had been elected. For the three years of the Democratic administration, that party in the House had played fast and loose on the great tariff question, until the necessities of the Government had compeled the administration to take some decided position, and I honor the President for having compelled his party to stop its double dealing and define its attitude."

Senator Paddock's bill, providing for the erection of a public building in every town at which the gross postal revenues have been $3,000 a year for the last three years, has been favorably reported by the Senate Committee on postoffices and is very likely to be passed by the Senate at an early day.

The Senate committee on agriculture have favorably reported the bill which was passed by the Senate last Congress, but not by the House, providing that the Commissioner of Agriculture shall be a member of the Cabinet.

Senator Ingalls has given notice that he will tomorrow reply to the speech made by Senator Voorhees, the distinguished copperhead from Indiana, last week. Mr. Ingalls says that he proposes to correct the misstatements and supply the omissions of Voorhees. That's a big contrast, for Voorhees' speech was made up almost entirely of glaring mis statements. But by the time that Ingalls, who is sometimes spoken of as the Kansas cyclone, gets done with Voorhees, he is likely to feel as bad as Vest of Missouri did a few weeks ago under similar circumstances.

The New Chief Justice.

WASHINGTON, D. C., April 30.—The President sent to the Senate this afternoon the nomination of Melville W. Fuller, of Illinois, to be chief Justice of the United States.

Mellville W. Fuller has for many years been at the head of the Illinois bar. He was admitted and practiced during the days of Judge Douglass, and took active part in all the State contests with Lyman Trumbull and men of that stamp. His father was one of the original settlers of Chicago, and left immense landed property to his son.

The nomination is regarded as a compromise between conflicting interests, in which the Southern Senators were led by Isham G. Harris, Senator from Tennessee, and [illegible] led by Attorney General Garland. The combination was sufficiently powerful to defeat the appointment of Phelps.

Out of the Code.

MARYLAND, MD., April 30.—In the new code of Maryland compiled by Mr. John Prentiss Poe and adopted by the General Assembly of Maryland at their last session, the word "white" is eliminated from the bastardy law. In the printed copy of the laws of the session of 1882 a chapter is inserted entited "An act to repeal section 1 of aricle 13 of the code of public general laws, and to re-enact the same." This is classed as chapter 339, and it diminates the word "white." The new code contains this section, and probably to make section 4 of article 13 to conform with it, the word "white" is eliminated from section 4 aso, and in that shape there is in the law, as given in the code, no distinction as to the color of the woman. The statement is made that the journals of proceedings show that the so-called act of 1862 was never passed, and that the Court of Appeals have so ruled. But the adoption of the new code is said to settle the point that the word "white" is no longer in the Maryland law. Mr. Poe says that since the adjournment of the Legislature he has informally asked the Court of Appeals whether, in the reprint of the new code, which is now being made, the word "white" should be inserted. The answer was in the negative, and he says the law will stand as it was printed in the copy of the code which the legislature adopted. Most of the lawyers and some of the lay members of the Legislature no doubt knew of the circumstances that the word "white" did not appear in article 13 of the new code. On three occasions a bill was brought up to strike out this word, and on each occasion it was lost in the House for want of a constitutional majority. Its strongest supporters were members of the Judicary Committee, who had favorably reported upon the new code. It was, no doubt, their earnest purpose to get an act passed that would conform to article 13 as the new code gives it.

West Virginia Central Road.

BALTIMORE, MD., April 26.—The annual meeting of the stockholders of the West Virginia Central & Pittsburgh Railway Company in Maryland was held yesterday at the office of the company, 213 East German street. Mr. H. G. Davis presided, and Mr. E. W. S. Moore was Secretary. The old Board of Directors was re-elected. The lease to the West Virginia Central for ninety-nine years was confirmed without opposition.

The Executive Committee of the Board of Directors of the West Virginia Central Company met at the office of the company at noon, President H. G. Davis in the chair, and E. W. S. Moore, Secretary.

The President made a report of the earnings and condition of the road for the quarter ending April 1. The earnings for the last three months are about nearly those for the same period in 1887, and more than quadruple those of 1886.

The company now has in use two hundred trench hoppers of the Baltimore & Ohio pattern, and three hundred coal and lumber cars of the Pennsylvania Railroad standard.

Capt. G. W. Harrison, heretofore acting as Superintendent, has been made General Traffic Agent. In addition to the telephone line, the company has completed a telegraph line for the road.

The Ladew tannery at Davis, now working two hundred to three hundred men, is largely increasing its capacity. Several additional saw mills have been erected on the line of the road

CHAPTER 130.

AN ACT

To prevent non-residents of the State of Maryland from fishing and hunting in Garrett county without permission in writing from the owner of the premises upon which such hunting or fishing is done, and to prevent any person from fishing in Bear Creek in said county for two years.

SECTION 1. Be it enacted by the General Assembly of Maryland, That any person not a bona fide resident of the State of Maryland who shall fish or hunt in Garrett county without the written permission of the owner of the premises upon which he so fishes or hunts shall be guilty of a misdemeanor.

SEC. 2. And be it enacted, That any person who shall fish in Bear Creek in Garrett county before the first day of April, eighteen hundred and ninety, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor.

SEC. 3. And be it enacted, That any person convicted before a tribunal having jurisdiction, of a violation of sections one and two of this act shall be fined not less than ten nor more than fifty dollars, one half to the informer and the other half to School Commissioners.

SEC. 4. And be it enacted. That this Act shall take effect from the date of its passage.

I hereby certify that the foregoing is a true copy of an Act of the General Assembly of Maryland, passed Jan. Session, 1888,

5 5 3t CARLTON SHAFER,
Chief clerk, House of Delegates.

AN ACT

For the better protection of deer in Garrett county.

SECTION 1. Be it enacted by the General Assembly of Maryland, That it shall not be lawful for any person or persons to chase or hunt deer with a dog or dogs on Winding Ridge, Meadow Mountain, Negro Mountain, or any place East of the Youghiogheny river in Garrett county, and it shall be lawful for any person to shoot or kill any hound or hounds found chasing deer in any of the places above mentioned. And it shall be prima facie evidence to convict under this section if any person shall be found in any of the above named places with a hound unless such persen be on his own premises or traveling on some public road.

SEC. 2. And be it enacted, That any person violating any of the provisions of this Act shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined not less than twenty five nor more than one hundred dollars for each offense one half to to the informer and the other half to the School Board of said county.

SEC. 3. And be it enacted, That it shall be the duty of the constables of said county to see to the enforcement of this Act in their respective bailiwicks and to report to the Grand Jury any violations of the same.

SEC. 4. And be it enacted, That this act shall take effect from the date of its passage.

I hereby certify that the foregoing is a true copy of An Act of the General Assembly of Maryland passed January Session, 1888,

To pay this amount it was ascertained that the taxable property of the county amounted to $3,936,631.00, which at $1.10 on each hundred dollars, the County taxation will make the above amount of $43,302.94; deducting $155,607.00 for corporations paying the State tax direct to the State Treasurer, leaves the basis for State tax $3,780,964, which is fixed at 17¾c. on each $100.00, making the State tax $6,711.21, which, added to the County, makes for county and State purposes $50,014.15.

—The remains of the late Samuel W. Smith will arrive in Oakland on the 5 00 P. M. train Tuesday next, for interment in the Episcopal cemetery, which will take place immediately on the arrival of the train.

—Persons attending Court should remember that the Commercial House is a good place to stop at. It is situated in a quiet part of the town, is well furnished and gives a good bill of fare. Terms to suit our people.

—W. C. L. Correll has just opened up a full line of dry goods. Consisting of Muslins, Cambrics, Ginghams, Prints, &c., and also a fine line of Satines, very handsome patterns and latest styles, on all of which I am able to give my customers the lowest prices. Come and examine and be convinced. Corner R. R. and Main streets, Oakland, Md.

—Died, in Oakland, Thursday of last week, Thomas Philpot, after a long illness, aged about 45 years. Deceased had lived in Oakland for many years, and was generally liked, in fact we do not think that he had an enemy in the world. He was a member of the Catholic church. His remains were interred in the Catholic cemetery Saturday, after funeral services in the church. He leaves a widow but no children.

A Good Washing Machine.

Mr. E. D. Kepner, of Oakland, has taken the agency for the "Lovell Family Washer," pronounced the best washer in use. Can be attached to any tub. It will wash clean anything that can be washed by hand, with half the labor and in half the time. The springs are of Bessemer steel, and will never wear out. Price only $5.00. Mr. Kepner will have the washer on exhibition during court. 4 21 3t

WILSON'S MILLS, April 30, 1888.

ED. REPUBLICAN:—Mr. Geo. W. Kitzmiller asks what became of the petitions for the re-establishment of District No. 12. And in answering his question, I must claim his indulgence to the extent of a few remarks in general, on the division, and subdivision, of that section into Election Districts.

I happen to know something of the locality, as I was born and raised in No. 12, and have hunted coons and killed rattlesnakes and other game all over it. I think I have killed more snakes and coons than George has, though I have not lived there quite so long, but I know every foot of the ground, and I must say that, if the convenience of the voters, and the interests of the tax-payers had been considered, old No. 1 would never have been divided.

It was a large district, but Altamont the polling place was a central point, with roads converging from all directions, and was easily accessible from all parts. But Garrett county, though clearly Republican at every election, has had the misfortune to be mis represented at Annapolis the last six years by Democrats, whose traditional policy is and has been to keep their party strong by taxing the people to support as many officers as possible; so with this object in view they divided the district in such a way that it was more inconvenient to reach the two polling places than it had been when there was but one.

The citizens of Kiztmillersville and vicinity had to go, part to Deer Park to vote, three miles beyond Altamont, and the other part to Swanton, a longer and more difficult road, than before the division.

So the way the division of the districts were butchered and buggared up in the organization of district No. 10, another district became a necessity; and No. 12 was also organized out of the territory of what had formerly been a part of No. 1. But, it too, was badly located, as it extended down the North Branch opposite Swanton, and took in territory much nearer to Swanton than to Kitzmillersville.

This caused dissatisfaction, and petitions were circulated and signed asking for the repeal of the law creating district No. 12.

I was informed of this, and also of the fact that the citizens in the upper end of the district and about Kitzmillersville were solidly in favor of the continuation of the district.

So I went to Mr. Browning, the only one of the three Democratic Representatives from Garrett who seemed to have any respect for the wishes of the people, and who, by the way, always seemed disposed to be reasonable, and had a talk with him. He suggested that the better way would be to let the bill which he had introduced go on and pass, and then the people asking for the continuation of the district, could send in a petition describing the new boundaries asked for, and another bill could be passed re-establishing the district with different boundaries.

This was satisfactory, and I so advised the parties concerned, who sent in their petition accordingly.

I presented the petition and it was referred to the Garrett county delegation and a member from Allegany; and Mr. Friend, who, I believe, considered himself the chairman of the delegation, and something like about nineteen twentieths of the rest of it, took charge of the petition, and very courteously, and generously considered it at his convenience, when I did not happen to be present, and wrote an unfavorable report on it. I ventured to mildly remonstrate with him for making such a disposition of a petition that had been forwarded to me without consulting me in regard to it, and explained the understanding I had with Mr. Browning, but about that time he was stricken with a spasm of virtuous economy and concluded it would be too expensive to have another district there, and besides, he said, it was too much like child's play to abolish the district and then turn round and re-establish it. And that is what became of the petition.

Trusting that my explanation will sufficiently explain, I remain,

Very truly yours,
GEO. W. WILSON.

MT. LAKE PARK, May 1st, 1888

A recent number of the REPUBLICAN contained a letter from Mr. George W. Wilson, of our late lamented Legislature, relative to the receipt and presentation of certain petitions against the repeal of the Local Option law in Garrett county, Md. In it he stated that the subscriber charged him, by "implication," at least, with failure in performance of his duty as our representative, in regard to this very important measure, and he complained because of the publication of his letter announcing the result, which he had considered as "strictly confidential," in a public circular.

The reason he gives for not presenting our petitions more promptly, and, in fact, until, as he wrote, it was "too late to do any good," is that he did not know of their being in the postoffice. The law requires an immediate notice of the receipt of a registered letter to be sent to the person to whom it is directed at a delivery office and the postmaster at Annapolis wrote me that such a notice had been sent immediately by the hands of the messenger employed to carry mail to the House of Delegates, upon the 28th of March, the day it was received, but Mr. Wilson writes that he knew nothing of them till April 2nd, and the fact in the case is that Mr. Wilson was absent from Annapolis about that time, for reasons known but by himself.

As regards the publication of the letter which he considered "confidential," it can do no harm to him now to repeat it so that all can judge of its character themselves:

ANNAPOLIS, MD., April 3d, 1888.

MR. H. H. VAN METER—Dear Sir: The bill to repeal Local Option Law in Garrett county is deader than Julius Cæsar.

Came back last night from Conference Committee, and when put on its passage as amended, received only 24 votes, with 29 against.

I send you greeting.

Yours truly,
GEO. W. WILSON.

Having written to Mr. Wilson requesting him to send me full particulars concerning bill, and also any statement he might see fit, to straighten his standing among the temperance people of our community, and receiving this message in reply, I took it to be a frank, friendly report of affairs in response to my request, and published it as a public matter from a public man.

Surely the citizens of Garrett county had a right to know through their representatives the result of this contest, and as I simply corresponded with Mr. Wilson as our representative, elected mainly by "Local Option" votes, and as he had "appealed for moral support" in this matter, and I had sent him several hundreds of signatures to "Local Option petitions" in response, I did not then, nor do I now, consider said communication confidential.

My main motive for putting it at the head of the circular was, aside from informing the public, a desire to deal fairly with Mr. Wilson in the matter, and as I stated the facts regarding his failure to present petitions promptly in the body of the circular, I felt it to be but just to publish what I took to be a manly manifestation of friendly feeling for the temperance cause, and congratulation over our complete victory for right.

It is a disappointment to many friends of the temperance cause who have felt favorable toward Mr. Wilson to think that they may have misinterpreted his motives in sending said message, and it certainly is strange if the publication of his letter has misrepresented his position upon this subject before the public, as his explanation seems to indicate, but however that may be, it is time for the respectable citizens of Garrett to know whom they can or cannot rely upon.

The bench and the bar might both be true, but if our legislators are always to tamper with this law the turmoil will be interminable and more embittered.

Swanton.

Mr. and Mrs. Hugh Mahlia started for their home in Finley, Ohio. Monday. They have the best wishes of a host of friends.

Mrs. Andrew Friend still continues very ill.

Rev. M. A. Kiracofe, of the U. B. Church, preached here on Sunday to a large and attentive congregation.

Rev. Mr. Hipkins, of Oakland, will preach in Anderson chapel on Sunday, the 6th inst, at 8 o'clock A. M.

There were large forest fires in this section this week.

The feeling here among Republicans is that "Little Mac" should succeed himself. He is the right man in the right place. He is one of the best Representatives Maryland has ever had in Congress, and has proven himself faithful to every trust. We cannot do better. We can very easily do worse. Let us follow the example of other States which keep their men in Congress as long as they are deserving. Mr. McComas can get more votes than any other man. Let Garrett send a delegation to the convention pledged for McComas.

Mr. and Mrs. E. J. West, of Oakland, were visiting friends here Saturday and Sunday.

Miss Ella Laughlin, of Deer Park, is visiting relatives near Swanton.

Mr. George Connell, of Deer Park, was in Swanton Sunday.

THE LITTLE GRAVE.

'There's a spot on the hillside far away,
Where in summer the grass grows green;
Where, beneath a rustling elm tree's shade,
A moss-covered stone is seen.
'Tis a quiet and unfrequented spot,
A solitude lone and wild;
Yet—somebody's hopes are buried there—
'Tis the grave of a little child.

In winter, alas! that mossy stone
Is hid 'neath a shroud of snow;
But around it, in springtime, fresh and sweet,
The daisies and violets grow;
And o'er it the summer breezes blow,
With a fragrance soft and mild,
And the autumn's dead leaves thickly strew
That grave of a little child.

And every year there's a redbreast comes,
When the month of May is nigh,
And builds her nest in this quiet spot,
'Mid the elm tree's branches high;
With her melody sweet by the hour she trills,
As if by the scene beguiled;
Perhaps—who knows? 'tis an angel comes
To the grave of that little child.

Yes, somebody's hopes lie buried there,
Some mother is weeping in vain.
For, though years may come and years may go,
'Twill never come back again,
Yet blessed are those who die in youth,
The pure and the undefiled;
Some road to Heaven, perchance, runs through
That grave of a little child.

ANIMALS AND SOIL.

The Wonderful and Useful Work Done by Ants.

What Is Accomplished by Crayfish, Field Mice, Bugs, Etc.—But the Ants, in Many Districts, Are the Most Important Agents.

The admirable studies of Mr. Darwin on the influences of the earth-worms upon the soil has made it clear that these animals exercise a most important effect in its preparation for the use of plants. Mr. Darwin's luminous essay has served to call attention to the effect of organic life on the development of the soil-coating. In the following pages I propose to submit the results of some studies of a general nature, which serve to show that a number of other animals have a considerable influence on the preparation of soils.

Our soils, as is well known, depend upon a variety of actions which serve to break up the rocky matter of the earth and to commingle that matter with organic materials more rapidly than the erosive agents can remove the detritus from the point at or near which it decays. For the formation of the soil two actions at least are essential. First, the bed-rock must be broken into fragments sufficiently separated from each other to permit the passage of roots between them; second, the rock fragments must be still further comminuted and commingled with organic waste to make the combination of organic and inorganic matter on which the utility of the soil absolutely depends. Although the earth-worms are undoubtedly very important agents in overturning and breaking up of soil, it appears to me that they are most effective in the tilled fields or in the natural and artificial grass-lands. So far as I have been able to observe, these creatures are rarely found in our ordinary forests where a thick layer of leaf-mold, commingled with branches, lies upon the earth. The character of this deposit is such that the creatures are not competent to make their way through it, and they therefore in the main avoid such situations. Moreover, wherever the soil is of a very sandy nature, earth-worms are scantly found if they are present at all. These worms are practically limited to the soils of a somewhat clayey character, which have no coating of decayed vegetation upon them.

As the greater portion of the existing soil has been produced in forest regions, I shall first examine the action of various animals upon the soils of wooded countries. The mammals are, of all our vertebrates, the most effective in their action upon the soil of forests. Twenty species, or more, of our American mammals are burrowers in the forest bed. They either make their habitations beneath the ground or resort to it in the pursuit of food. Of these our burrowing rodents are perhaps the most effective, but a large number of other small mammals resort to the earth and make considerable excavations. In forming their burrows, or in the pursuit of other burrowing animals, these creatures often penetrate through the whole or greater portion of the soil-covering. The material which is withdrawn from the burrow is accumulated about its mouth. The result is the overturning of a considerable amount of the earth and a consequent commingling of the material with vegetable matter. When brought to the surface and left exposed to the action of frost the breaking up of the material is greatly favored, and thus the formation of the soil is facilitated.

Considerable as is the effect of burrowing mammals, the principal overturning of the earth in our primeval forests is accomplished by the invertebrate animals. Where the woods are not very dense, and particularly where the soil is somewhat sandy, our largest species of ants are very effective agents in working over the soil. Their burrows extend to the depth of some feet below the surface, and each hill brings to the air several cubic feet of excavated matter, which, as slight inspection shows, is much commingled with vegetable matter. Wherever these ant-hills abound they commonly exist to the number of a score or more on each acre, and the occupants of each hill, in many cases, bring as much as a cubic foot of matter to the surface in the course of a single year. The action of rain constantly operates to diffuse this material on every side of the hill. We may often observe a thin layer of sediment extending for a considerable distance from the elevation.

As is well known to all those who have inspected the soil within virgin forests, the earth is occupied by a host of larval insects, principally belonging to the group of beetles, but including also many orthopterous insects. These creatures in the course of their life underground displace a good deal of soil, a portion of which is thrown upon the surface, the greater part, however, being merely dislodged beneath the surface. The effect, however, is to commingle and to break up the soil, and thus favor its comminution. Although the roots of trees do by far the larger part of the rending which is accomplished in the soil layer, they do not bring about much commingling of the soil. The thrusts which they apply to it shear the materials about, and so to a certain extent mix them, but by far the larger part of the commingling is effected by the animal life which dwells beneath the forest bed.

Where the woods are wet and favor the development of the crayfish the effect of this group of animals on the overturning of the soil is extremely great. It probably exceeds that which is accomplished in our ordinary fields by the action of the earth-worms. A single crayfish will often bring in the course of a single season's activity not less than half a cubic foot of earthy matter to the surface. In certain districts where these animals abound there appear to be not less than a thousand to each acre of surface. If such be their number, it is evident that not less than five hundred cubic feet of matter is brought to the surface from a considerable depth in the course of a year. As this matter is generally of a rather fine nature and easily dissolved in water, it rapidly washes away and forms a thin sheet on the surface. I am inclined to believe that large areas of our wet woods and the open border lands along our streams are completely overturned to the depth of two feet or more in the course of half a century by the actions of these animals. It is not impossible, indeed, that the very fine division of the soil which characterizes the regions inhabited by these creatures may be in good part due to their action. In this manner the creatures may have in part worked to bring about the very conditions which best serve their needs. "In open grounds, in natural prairies or grass-plains, the smaller species of ants are extremely effective agents in overturning the spoils. Wherever the ground remains for some time unplowed, it becomes occupied by those creatures. In the sandy soils of Eastern Massachusetts, the overturning accomplished by these creatures assumes a geological importance. For many years I have been puzzled by the fact that the glacial terraces and plains of this region were extensively covered to the depth of a foot or more by a coating of fine sand and very small pebbles, while below the depth of a foot pebbles of larger size are very numerous and the spaces between them but imperfectly occupied with any material. It is obviously impossible to explain these conditions through the action of earth-worms, for the reason that these creatures are rarely found in soils of this description. From much observation I have become convinced that this coating of sandy material is to a great extent to be explained by the action of various species of ants, in the forest condition by the work of the larger black ants, and in the condition of open plains by that of the smaller species.

The amount of material which these creatures bring to the surface in a single season is surprising. At several points in Eastern Massachusetts I have found the surface to contain at least one ant-hill to each square foot of area, or about forty thousand hills to the acre. This is probably an exceptionally great number; it will perhaps be safer to estimate the number at twenty thousand to the acre. The incoherent heaps of excavated matters which these creatures form are quickly washed away by the rain, or in many cases are blown away by strong winds, and so scattered over the surface. As soon as destroyed they are, in most cases, rebuilded, the result being that a single hill is reconstructed at least half a dozen times during the season. I have estimated that the amount of material brought to the surface often exceeds three cubic inches to each square foot of surface in a single year, or about a fiftieth of an inch of the whole area each year. Thus, in the term of fifty years, the accumulation of material on the surface would amount to as much as an inch and, reckoning the soil as having an average depth of one foot, a total overturning would be accomplished in less than one thousand years. It is likely that in some cases, over considerable areas, a tolerably complete overturning is brought about in less than a quarter of this time.

The effect of this action of ants on the soil material is peculiar. The tendency is like that noted by Dr. Darwin in the case of earth-worms to bring the finer particles to the surface. I am inclined to think the ants accomplished this part of their work even more effectively than the earth-worms, for the reason that they penetrate more deeply between the stones than their less active associates. Like the earth-worms, but in larger measure, the ants convey considerable amounts of organic matter into the soil. Their winter store of food is deeply buried, and much of it remains unconsumed in the nether earth. There is thus a constant incarnation of vegetable matter beneath the materials which they bring to the surface.

Although the burrowing vertebrates operate most vigorously in the forest-covered regions, they also exercise a certain influence on the open country. The moles, which work only here and there in the forest, are conspicuous agents in overturning the soil in the grassed regions. Still, as this group is peculiarly limited in its distribution and rarely penetrates to more than four or five inches below the surface, it exercises a relatively small effect. The field-mice are more potent agents in effecting the character of the soil. Their dwelling-chambers are at a considerable depth below the surface, and in forming them, they a bring a certain amount of matter to the open air. Moreover, the remains of their food, as well as their excrements, are important contributions to the organic matter of the soil. Insects in their larval stage exercise a less effect in the open field than in the forest-covered regions; still they are not to be left out of account in considering the process of soil-making in such areas. In Europe the rabbit, which has a habit of burrowing to a considerable depth, and in certain districts west of the Mississippi, the prairie dogs overturn the soil on the areas they occupy with considerable rapidity. Still as the number of these creatures in any given district is not great, their influence is mostly exercised in a very local way.

The foregoing considerations make it tolerably clear that our ants are, in some districts, by far the most important agents in overturning the soil and in commingling the superficial organic matter with the mineral material of which it is composed. Although on a field of a certain class, those which are of a clayey nature, the earth-worms are probably more efficient soilmakers than the ants, this latter group appears to be, at least in the eastern part of North America on the whole, by far the most effective in the preparation of the soil for the needs of plants. They do not, it is true, take the soil into their bodies, and thus disintegrate it, as the earth-worms do, but they accomplish what is perhaps the more important task of rapidly overturning the soil-material, as well within the forests as in the open fields, wherever that material is of a sandy nature.—Popular Science Monthly.

FLOATING IN SPACE.

The Only Kind of Flight Likely to Be of Practical Use.

I believe that athletes such as those who first obtained mastery over the problem of the bicycle could very soon learn to float, to ascend, to descend, to ride upward, to soar and so forth, in a way which would very decisively indicate the possibility of a much fuller mastery over the problem of flight later on. Experiments which have been already made prove decisively that a man's weight can be supported by planes or sails of very moderate extent—not much greater, proportionally, to his body than an eagle's wings—if only there is either rapid motion of advance or a strong current of air against their slightly slanted surface. But such experiments have not yet been scarried on as to show fully what can be done when practice in the art of balancing in the air and in making the adjustments necessary for changing the direction of flight has been sufficiently extended. Yet Mr. Charles Spencer, a teacher of gymnastics in England, was able, after obtaining no greater velocity than would be given by running down a small incline, to sustain flight by the supporting action of wicker wings for a distance of 120 feet. Besnier, indeed, toward the close of the last century, devised a method of supporting the body by pinions, which enabled him, after a sharp run to fly across a river of considerable width. It is certain that very little is to be gained from the attempts which have been made to direct balloons. The velocity which can be given to a balloon in still air is very small. A very moderate breeze would carry a balloon one way despite all the mechanical attempts to direct it in another, let the balloon be shaped as it may. Moreover, all such attempts are dangerous, for the wind has a great hold on the necessary large surface of a balloon, and going against the wind would subject the balloon to destructive influences. Whenever man attacks the problem of flight, seeking real advantage from its mastery, he will aim at much more than such mere floating power as the balloon gives—at more, even, than the rapid floating motion, with power of guidance, which may be obtained by the experiments suggested above. There must also be a power of energetic propulsion while still in the air. This might be obtained by suitable adjustments of levers to be worked by a man in actual flight. But while I believe flight to be possible for man in this way, I consider the only kind of flight which is likely to be really useful to men to be that of flying machines propelled, balanced and directed by some one or other of the natural forces man has brought under his control. That man who has learned to traverse the land more swiftly by mechanical means than its most actual denizens, and to make the wide seas his highways by similar devices, should be unable to travel in the air, which by natural selection alone has become the home of creatures descended from reptilian forms, is to me unthinkable.—*Richard A. FIRES IN JAPAN.

Peculiarities Which Make Them a Source of Amusement to Foreigners.

A Japanese fire is one of the sights to see, and beside the sorrow, the misery, suffering and tears that one sees, there are humors that renders such situations incomparable. When the fire-bell clangs every one rushes to the scene, friends helping friends to save their household effects, and thieves making most of the opportunity. Excitement reigns blocks away from the fire, agitated people gathering up their mats, screens, bedding, clothing and cooking utensils and hurrying away from the neighborhood. The simplicity of Japanese life is best shown then. There is no clumsy furniture to be rolled out and broken, no tables, chairs or clumsy beds to be more than ruined in the saving. One small hand cart holds the roll of wadded comforters and gowns that are the bedding of the family, and their clothing, and the few other effects go with it. The sliding paper screens are slipped from their grooves, the thick straw mats are taken from the floor, and the family decamp, leaving nothing but the roof, corner posts and rough floor of the house behind them. Processions of these refugees are met streaming away from the fire, tearful women and wailing children conveying to one a sense of what their sorrows are. It is always the wonder how these poor people live with so little, and when that little is swept away all one's sympathy is with them.

At three o'clock the other morning there was a great fire in Japanese Town. The reflection in the sky penetrated thick blinds, and wakened residents in the foreign settlement, to whom fire is as much a haunting terror as to the natives. A fresh wind was blowing up the bay and against the steely blue water the white ships and men-of-war glowed like crimson ships in the fire's reflection. By nine o'clock in the morning more than a thousand houses had been burned, and the flames were not subdued. An hour later we went to view the scene. At one end of the leveled space streams of water were being played on smouldering ruins, hand-pumps were being worked with a shouting chorus, and lines of buckets were being passed up from the creek. A few fire-proof godomes, built of thick mud and tiles, with all the chinks stopped with mud, stood with cracked and blistered walls as sole monuments in the area of ruins. At the other end of the burned region a plank fence had already been built around the space, and carpenters were building new houses on the smoking ground and stepping gingerly to escape hot stones and tiles. The amazing quickness with which Japanese houses rise from their ashes defies comparison. The Phœnix and Chicago are nothing for parallels. By the same afternoon the new houses were advanced enough for the little shopkeepers to set up their wares, and by lamplight the workmen were creeping over the roofs and nailing on the tiles. One has to follow quickly upon the first alarm to see the fire, and oftentimes coming upon a section of new houses with their fresh unpainted walls, is the first intimation that one has of there having been a fire along the street that one most commonly frequents. Fire is so common and so frequent that there is not a Japanese who has not been burned out a gain and again, and looks upon future experiences with cool philosophy. He might even preface his stories by the accustomed "I always do so and so when my house burns down."—Yokohama Cor. St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

THE OLDEST ROCKS.

Formations Largely Developed in Northern America and Europe.

Oldest of all the formations known to geologists, and representing perhaps the earliest rocks produced after our earth had ceased to be a molten mass, are the hard, crystalline and much-contorted rocks named by the late Sir W. E. Logan Laurentian, and which are largely developed in the northern parts of North America and Europe, and in many other regions. So numerous and extensive, indeed, are the exposures of these rocks, that we have good reason to believe that they underlie all the other formations of our continents, and are even world-wide in their distribution. In the lower part of this great system of rocks, which, in some places at least, is thirty thousand feet in thickness, we find no traces of the existence of any living thing on the earth. But, in the middle portion of the Laurentian, rocks are found which indicate that there were already land and water, and that the waters and possibly the land were already tenanted by living beings. The great beds of limestone which exist in this part of the system furnish one indication of this. In the later geological formations the limestones are mostly organic—that is, they consist of accumulated remains of shells, corals and other hard parts of marine animals, which are composed of calcium carbonate, which the animals obtain directly from their food, and indirectly from the calcareous matter dissolved in the sea-water. In like manner great beds of iron ore exist in the Laurentian; but in later formations the determining cause of the accumulation of such beds is the partial deoxidation and solution of the peroxide of iron by the agency of organic matter. Besides this, certain forms known as Eozoon Canadense have been recognized in the Laurentian limestones, which indicate the presence at least of one of the lower types of marine animals.. Where animal life is, we may fairly infer the existence of vegetable life as well, since the plant is the only producer of food for the animal.—Sir William Dawson, in Popular Science Monthly

TEMPERANCE READING.

THE SIN OF DRUNKENNESS.

The Bible View as to the Guilt of the Liquor Drinker—Appetite Not a Valid Excuse—The Way to Extirpate the Drinking Habit.

The guilt of the drunkard is not recognized as it should be. In the old times, when at almost every dinner party men drank till they could no longer sit in their chairs, such excess was regarded only as "improper." And the ordinary Temperance address of the present day deals almost entirely with the sin of the rum-seller; seldom or never referring to the deep guilt of the rum-drinker.

The Bible, however, treats drunkenness not as a misfortune, but as a sin, classing it with "adultery, . . . hatred, . . . murders and such like;" while in another passage it groups "fornicators, . . . thieves, . . . drunkards, . . . extortioners." It teaches that while drunkards are to be pitied, it is only as the dishonest and the licentious are to be pitied. This is different from much moral teaching at the present day.

The sale of liquor is a sin only because the drinking of liquor is a sin. The rumseller is merely accessory to the main crime; it is the rum-buyer whose is the principal guilt. If a druggist should, for pay, consent to compound a dose of poison wherewith a murderer could take the life of his victim, that druggest should, of course, be punished; but it is the man to whom he sells the poison who would be the principal criminal. So, while the Bible pronounces a woe on him that giveth his neighbor drink, it bestows its heaviest and most frequent condemnation on the one who drinks. None too much is said in Temperance meetings of the sins of the liquor dealer, but, to follow the Bible, one must set forth in still stronger terms the guilt of the liquor drinker.

In extenuation of the drunkard's fault it is pleaded that his appetite is powerful. But so is the appetite of the licentious man. Now we do not regard the adulterer's passions as an excuse for his debasing himself and bringing woe on others; no more can the drunkard be excused on the plea of appetite. The drunkard and the adulterer are alike in their temptation and alike in their guilt. If a licentious man declared an intention to reform it would be expressing it very mildly to "hope" that he would not return to his infamous course; so the drunkard who has quit his cups should be told that there will be no excuse whatever for his returning to his former criminal life. The drunkard, like the adulterer, can turn from his foul ways. All that is necessary is that he shall come to care more for God and his own better nature and his family than for the gratification of his preverted sensual desires. The Bible leaves no more excuse for drunkenness than for licentiousness, and if this Bible doctrine were preached more faithfully there would be more real reform.

It is sometimes said apologetically of a man: "Oh, he would not be bad if he did not get drunk." But the truth is that he would not get drunk if he were not bad. It is not being a drunkard that makes a man corrupt; he would never become a drunkard were he not corrupt to begin with. No man becomes a drunkard unless he is a bad man at the start, as no man would become a licentious man if he had not an unsound moral nature to begin with. The first time a man becomes intoxicated, it may be by accident, so to speak. He may not have known what would be the effect of his drinking. But, if he is a man of correct principle, he will stop horror-stricken with that first intoxication. He will not go on and get drunk again and again, and so become a habitual drunkard, unless he lacks moral principle to begin with. The drunkard's appetite is no excuse for him, for that appetite was not formed inadvertently; it was created by slowly, and in deliberate disregard of all the laws of right and decency.

The way to extirpate drunkenness is the way by which dishonesty and licentiousness and other sins must be extirpated by the cultivation of a higher moral nature. It is proper to have special Temperance meetings as it might sometimes be worth while to have special Honesty meetings, Slander meetings, and, as in some places are held, Purity meetings. But, in general, the most effective way is to deal with all sins together and eradicate them by teaching men to reverence God and honor their own better natures. It is hardly correct to say that the church is doing nothing for Temperance if no Temperance "crusade," as such, is carried on. A minister may be preaching against dishonesty though he says nothing about that sin in particular, and so, though it may contain no special mention of drunkenness, every Gospel sermon is a Temperance address, and a great deal better one than many which have been inflicted on unhappy communities.

We should suppress drinking saloons by law as we should suppress houses of rendezvous for thieves. But, to secure the rights of property, our principal reliance must be not the civil law, but the creation of a moral sentiment and the training of individuals in honesty; so our principal reliance in the Temperance reform must be "moral suasion" and the training of individuals to turn with abhorrence from drunkenness as a sin. We are glad that so many are earnestly striving to procure proper legislation for the suppression of liquor selling. But still greater efforts should be put forth to lead men to feel the iniquity of liquor drinking. With our most strenuous efforts we can only partially protect men from temptation; we can save them completely only by so training them that they will not yield to temptation.—Christian Inquirer.

A QUESTION ANSWERED.

Teaching Children Their Duty—An Incident from Real Life.

It is often questioned whether one should teach children their duty, if such teaching involves opening their eyes to a parent's wrong-doing. Perhaps the following incident from real life may give a satisfactory answer:

The lesson had been on Temperance, and I had explained the law as to selling liquor to minors, to the children. I did not teach this abstractly, but by questioning drew out from the little ones what they could do for mamma. They told me they could wash dishes, black shoes, sew on buttons, run errands, etc. Then came questions as to the errands they attended to, and side teaching on the fault of loitering, of which the mothers complain so much. To keep the attention, one boy and another was called to the board to write in different colored chalks what children could "go for." At last, to my great satisfaction, one little fellow wrote "beer." How the children's faces showed their sense of shame! But having talked of the butter and molasses, of the use of arnica and the necessity of keeping ipecac on hand if baby is croupy, it was quite natural to begin on this item: "Is this a good thing to get for mother? Is it food or medicine? What shall we call it? Drink? So is tea or coffee, water or milk; but this is not like any of them."

I drew from the children the effect of beer, and then told them how sorry good men were to see this poison taken by their friends and neighbors, telling them of the law which forbids the liquor dealers to sell even beer to children. Was it right to break the law of the land, even if mother told you to? No; you should say kindly: "I can't bring beer, mother, but I'll go for any thing except liquor;" and then be very careful to obey every other wish of father or mother.

A certain little boy named Willy sat in the second row. A boy of eight, but so stunted by want and exposure that he did not look over six. He listened and, as events proved, resolved that he would buy no more beer. On Monday, at noon, according to her usual custom, Willy's mother said: "Take the can and get a quart o' beer, and stop in for Mrs. Flynn's can."

"I mustn't go for beer, mother," said Willy.

The mother, a big burly Irish woman, turned on the child with a startling: "What's that your're sayin'?"

"I mustn't go for beer. Mrs. H—— says its agin the law; I'm too little, and ——"

"Ye just take the can and mind me; Mrs. H—— be ——"

"I can't. Let me get a quart of nice milk. Mrs. H—— says—"

"Shut up, ye little divil," and the mother's hand struck the child full in the face, then snatching up the can she started for her own beer. But in her temper she stepped hastily and tripped, falling heavily part way down the stairs, wrenching her ankle so that she could only hobble back to the room and seat herself in the big rocking-chair. Willy bathed the swollen ankle, got the dinner for the little ones, and waited sweetly and patiently on the angry woman. On her husband's return she told him her grievance.

"And the boy's right," said the man. "It's a shame to send him, and the beer does ye no good, Mary, nor me either. Don't let's be cross with him or the teacher. Do you mind how she helped us when I was out of work, and what trouble she took to get the young ones to the country? No, no, she's doing the children good, not harm."

For a week the mother was fast bound to her chair. On Wednesday, happening to pass that way, I called to see if Willy was at school, for these poor mothers need to be constantly kept up to a sense of the importance of steady attendance at day school. I found the boy polishing the stove, while the mother peeled potatoes, and she herself told me of his refusal, her anger, her husband's words, and Willy's patient, faithful attention to the household duties a boy naturally dislikes.

"There's not been a drop o' beer in the house since Sunday," she said, "and my man was saying that if you'd like it, we might as well sign the pledge with Willy, and kape from it altogether. Truly "a little child shall lead them."—Hope Ledyard, in Union Signal.

TEMPERANCE ITEMS.

Of 419 arrests made in New Haven Conn., in February, nearly sixty per cent. were for intoxication.

It is stated on the authority of the North Pole explorers that the men who drank were the first to give out.

Government chemists at Washington have been analyzing samples of beer from various parts of the country, and find all contain an alarming amount of dangerous adulterations.

Rum and murder have certainly mixed quite extensively and expensively over the country the past week. The usual hard drinker, in a fit of rage or jealously or for simple wickedness, has done with revolver and axe what the rum qualified him to do. It is a pretty costly way of running things, the freedom with which habitual drinkers get their maddening "drinks" and the irresponsible recklessness with which revolvers are sold.—Philadelphia Ledger.

FOR OUR YOUNG FOLKS.

MY WONDERS.

I wonder which child left her book in the way
For Rover, good fellow, to capture in play.
He's tossed it, and twirled it, and torn out a page,
It was all done in frolic, though looking like rage.
I wonder who left it? My dear little Prue,
You don't mean to tell me! 'twas surely not you?

I wonder which child of a gay, gleeful four,
Must always be called thus: "Come back, shut the door!"
I wonder who sometimes, thus summoned, forgets,
That people have nerves, which a sudden noise frets?
I wonder! What blushing, my dear little May,
Was it you did that same naughty thing, but to-day?

I wonder which child cried at bed-time last night,
And sulked with a face that quite clouded the light,
And said he thought eight o'clock came before seven,
And wished he was big, to sit up till eleven?
I wonder if such a boy feels very grand?
Why, Jack, was it you? That I can't understand.

I wonder which child made a fuss at the cold
This morning, and shivered till nurse had to scold;
Which hates nice clear water, and fidgets about,
And always get washed with a frown and a pout;
I wonder if Harry will own it is wrong,
And try to do better, and that before long.

I wonder if Aunty, who sits in her chair
And writes this all down, herself thinks it is fair
To tell of these children, when Harry and May,
Dear Jack, and sweet Prue, have assured her to-day
They will turn a leaf over, and presently show
How careful and thoughtful and good they will grow?

THE TABLES TURNED.

How a Sheep Really and Truly Chased a Wolf—A Funny Sight.

Did you ever hear of a sheep chasing a wolf? No, I don't mean a wolf chasing a sheep. Of course you have heard of that; but did you ever hear of a sheep which really and truly chased a wolf?

No, it isn't an allegory, nor a fairy story, and it hasn't any special moral. The only moral is that it is true.

Well, I went one fall to stay with a friend in Canada. My friend had a farm called Swamscot, near Collingwood, a little town at the head of Lake Superior, the station whence the steamers start for their trip through the lake and to the far Northwest.

There was quite a number of wolves in that region when my friend first went there to live; but he had a number of dogs on the farm, and some of them were very fierce and strong; so, after a few years, during which the dogs and the wolves often met, the wolves found it was hardly worth their while to pay a visit to Mr. Noble—who was the owner of Swampscot Farm—because one of those dogs would undoubtedly be disagreeable enough to bark at them, and then in a moment the whole pack would come tumbling out, and the boys would run helter-skelter to see the fun, and away would go Mr. Wolf, with such a shouting and hallooing and barking at his heels that he would think the end of the world was at hand. And very often indeed it was, so far as he was concerned, and he might consider himself lucky if he could reach the safe shelter of the big woods which came down to the edge of Mr. Noble's clearing. For more than once it happened that old Jowler came sauntering back to the house with a grim look, which said just as plainly as if he could talk, "There's another of those rascals out of the way." And soon the boys would come running in, with the wolf's head to nail up on the barn-door; and that was the conclusion of his little visit to Swampscot.

So you see, it didn't pay the wolves to come and see us on ordinary occasions. Only when the little new-born lambs were out in the fields with their mothers, would a wolf now and then find an opportunity to snap up one of the babies and carry it off to his family in the forest.

Oh, you thought I was only in fun, did you, and that I meant to tell you about a wolf chasing a sheep, after all? Just wait a moment till I tell my story. So far I have written only what the story-book people call an introductory chapter.

Now, the year I was at Swampscot, it happened that Mr. Noble's little daughter Annie, a dear little girl with rosy cheeks and curly yellow locks, took a great fancy to have one of the lambs for a pet. So her father had one of the little, white, fluffy baby-lambs brought into the house, and Annie used to feed it and carry it about in her arms as if it were a little toy-animal.

However, the lamb soon grew too heavy to be carried around by so small a girl, and before summer had well begun it was trotting about everywhere after Annie, like Mary's little lamb in that poem which some of you may have heard.

All the dogs were pets of Annie's, as indeed were all the animals in the farm-yard; and at first, when she took her baby-sheep out in the yard, the dogs did not know what to make of it. They wagged their tails and barked "how-do-you-do" to Annie's new friend; but the poor little lambkin did not understand the dog-language at all, and ran frightened to Annie, and hid its little head in her dress.

It was not long, however, before the dogs and the lamb were on excellent terms. They seemed all at once to become great friends, and when the lamb was almost a full-grown sheep it often forsook even Annie for the company of its new companions, and ran about everywhere with the dogs. Mr. Noble declared that he once heard the sheep trying to bark, but I am inclined to think he was making fun of us. I can't believe the lamb went so far as that, though no doubt it admired Rover's great loud "bow-wow!" and felt that its own little "ba-a-a!" was in comparison very mild.

The farmer often wished to take the sheep and kill it, now that it was too big for Annie to play with; but Mr. Noble declared that "Bob"—for so Annie had named it when it was a tiny baby—was one of the family and that it should stay in the yard with the dogs as long as it chose.

One day I was in the snug library writing. It was the beginning of the cold weather, and a few days before there had been a heavy fall of snow—the first of the season—just the time when the wolves are often driven by hunger to attempt a raid on the farmers' poultry-yards. Suddenly I heard a great commotion outside, and Tom and Harold ran past the window, shouting: "Rover, Jowler—here, dogs! Wolf!—a wolf!"

I was putting my papers together, and thinking whether I should venture out in the cold or whether I should leave them to catch the wolf by themselves, when Mr. Noble came in, saying, "Quick, Glaucus; quick! On with your coat! There is the funniest sight outside you ever saw."

Of course I jumped up, hurried into my coat and overshoes, and rushed out into the snow, wondering what new feature there could be in the not unusual visit of a wolf to the farm, and when outside I saw the boys and dogs were running across the open clearing in full chase after two large wolves. But, certainly, there was the strangest sight I ever saw in my life! There, among the pack of dogs, ran "Bob," scampering along with the best of them, and "ba-a-a-ing" with all its might at the astonished wolves.

I don't know what the sheep had planned to do if it caught them, but Bob's actions were so threatening that we wondered whether it would have eaten a wolf for supper if it had overtaken one. Unluckily for our sport, however, the wolves managed to escape for that time, and Master Bob came home with the baffled pursuers, looking as proud as though it had succeeded in securing some wolf for supper and had enjoyed the taste.

I don't know what became of Bob afterward, but I am convinced that a sheep with ambition enough to chase a wolf may have aspired to any thing.—St. Nicholas.

CARE OF THE HANDS.

A Bit of Good Advice to Girls, by One Who Speaks From Observation and Experience.

Because you live in the country and do housework, and even some good, honest toil on the farm itself, is no reason why you should neglect certain little niceties of life, such as the care of your hands and teeth. You probably will not be able to keep the former white and soft as if you used them only for dainty embroidery, but a few minutes spent each day in caring for them will show at least that they are well kept, and the signs of toil that can not be eradicated you need not be ashamed of.

The nails can be kept nicely trimmed; they can not be even moderately long, but they may be shapely and pointed. Perhaps you can not afford to buy the outfit of a "manicure," but you undoubtedly have a pair of small embroidery scissors; the file you must replace as best you may with the one in your penknife, or, failing that, with a piece of course sandpaper; and the chamois polisher, costing any where from sixty cents to two dollars, you can make yourself. Take a child's block about an inch thick, and three inches wide by five long—large enough to grasp it firmly—tack a bit of soft cloth for padding, and over that a piece of the chamois you keep for polishing silver on one of the edges, and you have an article that may not be ornamental, but will answer every purpose.

Soften your hands by washing in warm water with some good toilet soap for a few minutes, then with the small scissors trim the nails, rounding them nicely, and cutting the corners very low. With some blunt instrument (if you have not a file) push back the flesh from the base of the nails, and trim away all the dead skin. Now apply your polisher and brush vigorously for a few minutes. Do this once a week, and every day spend a few minutes in the use of the polisher, and your hands will repay you in their neat appearance for the time you have spent. A solution of oxalic acid kept in a bottle with a glass stopper will remove all stains of ink or fruit, and a match or a small stick dipped in the solution and passed under the nails will remove any discoloration that does not come off with washing. There is a pink powder sold by druggists for polishing, but this may be dispensed with. If, however, you get any, be sure that you get the best and not a spurious article. You should have a pair of old kid gloves, or better still wash leather, to wear when you are weeding in the garden, or doing any housework that will admit of it.

I speak with a conviction born of sad experience, for I am a farmer's daughter myself, and never thought of caring for my hands when I was a child. When I was old enough to care it was too late, and I have found out that no amount of after care can make up for the early neglect.—American Agriculturist.

A fund of over $1,000 has been raised to further the project.

A GIRL'S INVENTION.

How a Veteran's Daughter is Filling a Depleted Family Treasury.

In a remote but decent part of Boston has lived for about fifteen years an English family of rather unique interest. The father served in the war of the rebellion, and, being a partial invalid in consequence, receives a small pension, which does not go far toward supporting the family, and he can do little besides draw his pension and suffer his constant pain. The mother is a small woman, with large brown eyes and pale cheeks. She has had a toilsome life, indeed, and has done all sorts of work to try and eke out the family support. Two daughters, the elder somewhat noted in her neighborhood as a beauty, and a small boy make up the balance of the household. Although desperately poor, the family have been as proud as Lucifer and seemed bound to accept no more charity than was absolutely unavoidable, though there are plenty of well-to-do people around them who would gladly have contributed in their aid, as every member of the family commanded respect. They have come to be known even outside their narrow circle from their constant effort to better themselves, trying now this thing and now that. Every thing failed until a short time ago; but at last the family have struck something that will give them ease and comfort if not comparative wealth. The handsome daughter is credited with the discovery, which is simply a new method of treating photographs in reproduction. Her name has been given to it, and her work is getting more and more circulation every day with of course an increased inflow of dollars to the family treasury. She has secured a patent on her process. All the photographers are puzzled by the work and would like to have it for use in their business, as they see that this girl is getting as many orders as she can fill at the good price of three dollars for each cabinet reproduction. The pictures are the same size as the cabinet photographs, but softer and more pleasing in tone, and are mounted under thick plate-glass with beveled edges. How she makes her copies nobody has been able to find out as yet, but in the slang of the day her work "goes."—Springfield Republican.

CUSTOMS OF CAPRI.

Picturesque Scenes On the Island Made Famous by Garibaldi.

They have a strange way in this little place, I found, of betrothing the girls to the young men before the latter leave the town. As very few of them are able to either read or write, long years pass by without a word from the lover or "spoza" reaching the patient girl at home.

It is not a rare thing to meet here young couples who were engaged for ten, twelve or even fifteen years before fortune was sufficiently favorable to allow them to marry.

One can not soon get rich on thirty cents a day, and that is the wages of a man in Capri. This is perhaps the reason why so many men leave the island, leaving the women at home to take care of the vineyards and olive groves.

It is a very picturesque scene, those women, with their gay costumes, rich complexions, bright, flashing eyes, at work in the fields, or leading their flocks of goats up the mountain side to pasture. Their feet are always bare, and become so hard that it is simply wonderful what they can endure. They will walk over the roads covered with sharp, flinty stones, climb the rugged mountain sides, and be quite as comfortable as if walking on the softest carpet. In fact, for hardness their feet resemble hoofs of the Western girl, who, when told by her mother that there was a hot coal under her foot, drawled out, without moving an inch: "Which foot is it under, mammy?" Yet the feet of these women are by no means misshapen, but, on the contrary, are perfect models for an artist.

During my stay on the island I enjoyed the rare treat of witnessing the grand festival of San Antonio, this being the great feast day of the year.

One of the most attractive features to me was the procession of white-robed maidens, wending their way through the narrow streets, lined with white-walled houses. From the top of these walls, friends and lovers showered down the sweet-smelling, golden San Antonio fiori upon the procession below. The girls were wreathed with flowers, and carried in their hands either candles or little wooden images, and chanted as they walked, surrounded by clouds of smoke from swinging censors.

Through the town and up the winding stone stairs cut in the mountain side, they passed to the chapel, where the religious services were held. After that came the feasting, and the dancing, and the music, over which they became greatly excited.

The numberless movements of their favorite dance, the "Tarantata," and the easy graceful forms of the dancers as they swayed backward and forward was indeed a pleasing and exhiliarating sight. The "Tarantata" is danced by three couples only, the men dancing around the women and then kneeling as suppliants at their feet. The women raise them, and with airy movements dance around the men. Then they separate into pairs, advancing and retreating and again dancing together. The figures of the dance are but a small part of its beauties; there is an indescribable fascination in the free and graceful movements of the arms, head, and, in fact, of the whole body.—Beatrice Presswood King, in Woman.

BANKING IN CHINA

How Pigtailed Tellers Handle Scraps of Silver and Clumsy Bank Notes.

A curious place that we looked into on our way across the city of Canton was a Chinese bank, where the counterpart of the brisk young cashiers, tellers and accountants of our home banks were sitting in pigtails, and the long blue blouses of gentlemen and scholars, shoveling silver Mexicans from basket to basket, and letting them fall on the stone floor with a deafening ring and clatter. A Chinaman can do nothing quietly, and noise is his necessary accompaniment to every action. Every one of the pewtery-looking dollars is weighed and stamped by the bank, rung on stone slabs and fully tested, and there are baskets full of fragments, halves and chips of silver dollars that pass as smaller coins. These scraps and bits of silver pass current by their weight and their purity is tested by the ring. The Hong Kong and Shanghai Banking corporation issue paper notes of different values that save one from carrying loads of these clumsy Mexican dollars about with them, but the bank notes are as clumsy in proportion. They are all over six inches long and four inches wide, of a tough, fibrous paper, as thick as blotting paper, and as flabby as so much dirty calico, which they chiefly resemble. Those diploma-sized notes of the Bank of England are small and compact by comparison, and every common-sense traveler cries for Mitkiewicz and his syndicate to come with the great bank and do away with the ugly Mexican and the clumsy English notes. A great proportion of Chinese talent must be employed in counterfeiting Chinese dollars, to judge from the numbers about and the wariness with which every one accepts one of the coins. A most clever counterfeit passed off on me was one that was plainly pure silver and newly minted. An expert rapped it sharply with his pen-knife, and the top fell off like the lid of a box, and disclosed an interior of pure pewter filling in the thin shell of silver. At the American schedule of wages, two dollars of a silversmith's time had been used to plane off in a thin shaving the top of the dollar, dig out the solid part and fill up the cavity with lead, and bring the deceptive seventy-cent dollar down to a silver value at ten cents or less.—Cor. St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

STARTING A FASHION.

How Count D'Orsay Balanced a Tailor's Troublesome Bill.

One day, being caught in his private dressing-room by a tailor, who raged and said he would not leave till he had been paid his bill, Count D'Orsay listened thoughtfully for a time, fixing his eyes upon a package that the irate tailor had deposited upon a chair. This package was enveloped in a coarse sort of canvas.

"Have you much of that stuff in your shop?" said Count D'Orsay.

"What kind—that ugly canvas? If I wanted it I could to-morrow have enough to wrap up all the merchandise in the London docks."

"London docks!" said the Count; "don't talk nonsense. Come to me to-morrow at four o'clock and take my measure for a pair of trousers cut from this canvas."

In vain the tailor endeavored to dissuade the Count, stating that the canvas was not suitable for a garment, and in a short time Count D'Orsay was supplied with the canvas trousers.

At five o'clock one afternoon he climbed the vast staircase of Crockford's, then one of the fashionable clubs of London, and the first person he met was Lord Chesterfield.

"Upon my word," said the noble Lord, "you have a singular garment there—something rare, without doubt. Always the same original and charming D'Orsay!"

The Count received the compliment with some confusion.

"It is perhaps not exactly elegant," he said, "but it is very handy and fresh, especially suited to riding on horseback."

In a few moments a group of dandies had surrounded the clever Frenchman, Lord Chesterfield in the main parlor was expatiating on the originality of D'Orsay's taste, and a few days afterward the tailor found himself overrun with orders for the canvas trousers. Lord Chesterfield himself ordered a dozen pairs. Count D'Orsay had accomplished his purpose, and the delighted tailor came no more with his troublesome bill.—Illustrated Weekly.

FASHION'S FANCIES.

Combination Costumes for Summer—Ornamental Hooks and Eyes.

Combinations of woolen and silk remain as popular as ever, and costumes of this class are possibly a trifle more dressy than the all-wool or all-silk dresses, which are naturally more quiet in effect. Polonaise effects are noticeable, and many of the street and yachting costumes intended to be worn without a wrap, have a polonaise front and basque back, with the drapery made so that it can be attached with hooks and loops to the basque, completing the effect.

Plaids are generally used in combinations with self-colors, but the usual fashion of taking one of the colors of the plaids into consideration is not followed in using the beautiful multi-colored plaids, which are most artistic if properly arranged. The immense checks of solid color, such as Gobelin blue and white, or black and gold, are also exempt from necessarily employing one of their colors in combination; blue-and-white check may be used with gray or black, and black-and-gold with gray or Gobelin blue.

Many costumes, especially those of striped camels' hair, are made up in one material throughout, and the stripes often play an important part in their effectiveness. The basque seams can be so arranged by the cutting and fitting of the striped goods that a much greater effect of slenderness can be given to the figure. The same effect is sometimes produced by the use of folds of material or braid put on to simulate stripes.

Small ornamental hooks-and-eyes, covered silk buttons with loops of silk folds, or lacings of cord run through worked eyelet-holes in the edges of the goods, are used to hold opposite edges of the drapery together at the side, for about half the distance down the skirt; where something of this sort is not used, a cluster of ribbon loops is frequently placed at one side.—Demorest's Monthly.

RICH, BUT COINLESS.

Ready Money Not Infrequently Absent from a Capitalist's Pocket.

"It would be a pleasure to accommodate you, but the simple truth is I haven't $500 in cash in the world," said a Buffalo Crœsus to the financial man of the firm, who was seeking a purchaser for a gilt-edged $1,300 six per cent. real estate mortgage. Noticing an expression of incredulity upon the face of his caller, Crœsus hastened to add: "It is a common mistake of those having small means to suppose that a millionaire always has $50,000 or more at instant command. It is only on rare occasions that most of us see $25,000 in currency at one time, and for two years I have never once had $10,000 of my own on hand.

"The men of great wealth, are, as a rule, men of large business interests. We own blocks, elevators, ships, telegraph, telephone and railroad stocks, suburban tracts, and many other kinds of property, but none of these can be converted into cash at an hour's notice. Then, again, most of our real estate is mortgaged, because we are able to use ready money in such a manner as to realize more than six per cent. You would be astonished could you learn how large a load of debt some very wealthy Buffalo men are carrying. It is usually the second generation of wealth that buys mortgages, government bonds, and other securities which yield a moderate income and require no looking after.—Buffalo Express.

SCIENCE AND INDUSTRY.

—New silk mills are springing up everywhere, and the immigration of foreign weavers has almost stopped.

—Cavendish in 1766 discovered hydrogen; and between 1774 and 1779 Priestley discovered oxygen, azote and nitrous gas.

—A new attachment to the microscope has been devised, the object of which is to observe the melting points of minerals while under the process of examination.

—It is estimated that the sum spent on new buildings in this country last year was $2,600,000,000, and that the transfers of real estate amounted to $10,000,000,000.

—Careful experiments have shown that waste silk is the most effective of all non-conducting coverings for steam-pipes, and the demand for this purpose is great in spite of the cost.

—The values of the exports of mineral oils from the United States for the year ended December 31, 1887, showed a decrease of $2,584,977 from the values of the corresponding period of 1886.

—The process of manufacturing gas from water at Los Angeles, Cal., is a magnificent success. Its bright, steady light has been pronounced a decided improvement over electricity.

—A simple formula for the preparation of hektograph ink is given by a competent authority. Take one part of aniline, of the color desired, dissolve in about seven parts of water, and add one part of glycerine.

—Meteorites sometimes attain a velocity of 180,000 feet per second. When passing through the air at this rate the friction is so great that the air is heated up to a temperature of 10,800 degrees Fahrenheit.

—The French national printing office employs girls as type-founders, printers, book-sewers, book-binders, etc., the wages ranging from fifty cents to one dollar per day. After thirty years' service both men and women are retired upon a pension.

—Civilization is spreading rapidly beyond a doubt. African rubber is now systematically adulterated with sawdust, bark dust, etc., and after purifying does not contain more than thirty-three to fifty-five per cent. of pure gum. The natives add this substance to overcome the stickiness.

—As a wood preservative naphthaline is now largely used in Scotland, its action being to destroy all albuminoid compounds in the wood, leaving it dry and clean to handle, and with only a faint, aromatic smell. The naphthaline is melted in a vessel capable of being tightly sealed, and in this the wood is saturated.

—Extensive use is now being made in France of the unique article known as wood wool, consisting of extremely thin and slender shavings of wood, that are comparable to paper cut for packing. It weighs some forty or fifty per cent. less than the materials generally used for such a purpose, and its beautiful appearance, fineness, and exceeding cleanness have brought it into great favor.

—A recent chemical examination of several prominent brands of "family lard" showed them to be variously constituted of different ingredients, and in one case not a trace of real lard could be found in the sample analyzed. A prominent lard manufacturer testified before the Senate Committee on Agriculture, at Washington, that so far as he knew the lard thus manufactured is more popular with the people than the genuine article is.

STRANGE RESEMBLANCE.

Twin Brothers Whose Signatures Proved a Puzzle to Patent Officials.

"I heard a good story the other day," said one of the orators, "on a couple of Lewiston men. They are twin brothers and the most remarkable in some respects that ever existed. Both are of scientific, artistic turn of mind and remarkably capable in many ways. The most curious thing to me, however, is the fact that their great resemblance extends even to their handwriting and has been a great puzzle to bank officials and every body else. These brothers are inventive and have lately patented an important device. The story, as I heard it, is that after the specification and affidavits, etc., etc., were made, it was required that both should make oath and sign documents. They did so and the papers were sent to the Patent Office.

"Not long after their attorneys received notification of irregularities in proceedings and soon the specified statement was made, from the United States Patent Office, that the law required that both persons should sign the papers, while in this case, it was very evident that one person had signed both papers. The lawyer smiled. Here was a direct statement. The United States Patent Office experts didn't say that they 'thought' that the names had been signed by the same person, but they deliberately stated, in so many words, that one person had signed both names. He had to make a personal explanation to the Patent Office and relate how wonderful is the wondrous affinity of birth."—Lewiston (Me.) Journal.

Partial Judgment.

It is difficult to avoid making an exception of ourselves, when we are reflecting upon the errors and frailties of mankind. Said a Quaker, one day, to his wife:

"All the world is queer, excepting thee and me, and thee is a little queer."

Another candid and self-righteous individual, in a moment of confidence, gave vent to the opinion:

"There's but two honest men in this town. Brother B—— and myself; and sometimes I have my doubts of Brother B——."—Youth's Companion.

CHAPTER 548.

AN ACT

To provide for the appointment of two superintendents to supervise and control the repairs and improvements of a public county road in Garrett county, known as the Legislative road leading from the West end of the covered bridge over Youghiogheny river, at Friendsville, in Garrett county, along the West side of said Youghiogheny river to Selbysport, as now traveled, and thence with said county road by Guard's store to the Pennsylvania line, and to authorize the County Commissioners of Garrett county to make a levy for the repairs and improvements of said road.

SECTION 1. Be it enacted by the General Assembly of Maryland, That the repairs and improvement and supervision of the public county road known as the Legislative road leading from the West end of the covered bridge over Youghiogheny river at Friendsville, in Garrett county, along the West side of said Youghiogheny river to Selbysport, as now traveled, and thence with said county road by Guard's store to the Pennsylvania line, be and the same is hereby placed under the charge and care of Joshua M. Friend and George Dunham.

SEC. 2 And be it enacted, That the County Commissioners of Garrett county be, and the same are hereby authorized and required at the time of making the annual levy in the year eighteen hundred and eighty eight, to levy the sum of eight hundred dollars in the hands of said superintendents, provided for by this act for the repair of said road hereinbefore designated and to be expended equally by said superintendent upon said road.

SEC. 3 And be it enacted, That said superintendents shall before entering upon their duties, execute a bond in the same manner that road supervisors in Garrett county are required to bond.

SEC. 4. And be it enacted, That George Dunham shall have charge of that part of said road which passes through lands supposed to be owned by George H. Williams, that Joshua M. Friend shall have charge of the remainder of said road, and that each shall on or before the first day of September, A. D. eighteen hundred and eighty-nine, render a specific account to the County Commissioners of their expenditures upon said road, and shall return their vouchers for such expenditures, and said superintendents shall each be allowed as an item of said expense, the sum of two dollars per day for their services whilst engaged upon said road.

SEC. 5. And be it enacted, That should either of said superintendents fail to qualify as required or should either resign or die, his duties shall devolve upon the other, and should both fail to qualify, resign, or die, the County Commissioners shall appoint two superintendents to take their places with powers obligatory.

SEC. 6. And be it enacted, That all labor employed upon said road by said superintendents shall be paid at the rate allowed by road supervisors on other county roads in said county.

SEC. 7. And be it enacted, That this Act shall take effect from the date of its passage.

I hereby certify that the foregoing is a true copy of An Act of the General Assembly of Maryland, passed January Session, 1888.

The barber's apprentice is generally a strapping fellow.

"The season's over," said Fogg, as he capsized the pepper-box.

"This is a burning shame," said the man who was smoking a bad cigar.

A young lady who was being stared at too earnestly drew a veil over the scene.

The voting is over but the girls are glad that the courting is not.

Much "adieu" about nothing—the parting of young ladies at corners.

You talk about women being flighty, what do you think of bank cashiers?

It is a long lane that has no turns and a mighty mean one that is full of gates.

Let a woman take the degree of A. B., that is a bride, and she may hope in due time to be entitled to that of A. M.

"Where are the men of '76?" shrieks an excited exchange. O, to Halifax with the men of '76. Give us the women of 21.

We see a lengthy article going the rounds of the papers headed "How to Manage a Wife." We didn't read it; no use.

The difference between a country and a city greenhorn is that one would like to know everything, and the other thinks he can tell him.

One redeeming feature of Mormonism seems to be that it does not throw the burden of the support of a husband on one woman.

An old lady near Midvale says her daughter has just purchased an elegant "cabin organ," and that the "mox vomica" stop is perfectly lovely.

"It's forty years, my old friend John, since we were boys together." "It is? Well don't speak so loud; there's that young widow in the next room."

A young man who was caught straining his sweetheart to his bosom the other night justifies himself on the ground that he has a right to strain his own honey.

We've heard of a secret which was so big that it required all the women in town to keep it and then they could not do so without the help of their husbands.

No wonder they say the Yankees exaggerate. We know one who complained to his butcher that the last piece of steak sent him was so tough his mother could not chew the gravy.

Tompson is not going to have anything more to do with conundrums. He recently asked his wife the difference between his head and a hogshead, and she said there was none. He says that is not the right answer.

The Nurses of the War.

The ladies, heaven bless them! did all they could to nurse and care for the wounded soldiers. Many noble women devoted all the years of the war to this humane duty, but now and then young ladies would drop into the hospitals and play nurse in an amatuer way for an afternoon, and it must be said such girls were more ornamental than useful.

One of the girls became interested in a good-looking soldier, who was wounded in the arms, and she addressed him in this way:

"My brave friend, can I do anything for you?"

"No, madame, nothing, replied the soldier.

"I should like to do something for you," she persisted; "may I sponge your brow?"

"Well," he said, you may if you want to very bad; but if you do you'll be the thirty-ninth gal that's done that blessed thing this morning."

A girl seeing a soldier lying asleep on a hospital bench, thought him dead, and whispered as she bent over him:

"Poor boy, let me kiss him for his mother!"

To her surprise, the soldier leaped to his feet, and, catching her in his arms, called out:

"Never mind the old lady; kiss me on my own account!"

A Noble Work Carried on by Women.

There is, according to Lady Grey, no part of the British Empire where a Girls' Friendly Society may not be found. In England alone there are 150,000 members of such societies springing from a central institution of which Lady Grey is the President, and which is carried on entirely by women. Temporary lodgings are provided for girls suddenly thrown out of situations, and recreation rooms are established for members settled in towns. In days when, to the credit of the society, the welfare of women and especially the care of friendless girls, are objects of an increasing concern of conscience, facts like these deserve to be made widely known, whether they relate to this particular institution or others founded with similar designs. Girls' homes and girls' friendly societies, a contemporary thinks, might with advantage keep themselves permanently before the public eye by bold advertisement, especially in the railway carriages and other public conveyances, waiting-rooms, the "wanted" columns of newspapers, and in all other places where the persons for whom the kindly aid is intended may learn that it is at hand when desired.

HOMOEOPATHY.—32,655 cases in European hospitals receiving Homoeopathic treatment showed a death rate of 4.4 per cent., while 119,639 cases under old treatment had a death rate of 10.5. (See Sharps' Tracts.)

Official figures in Bavaria give Homoepathy a death rate in Cholera of 6.75 against 48.50 of old treatments. (Dr. Rath)

These figures, whose accuracy has never been refuted, should make every one give the matter a more than passing thought, and it would be well to write for a copy of our Book Catalogue, and "Medical Index," also, if interested in live stock, of our "Veterinary Index." We will them free. Many druggists [illegible] medicines or they may direct.

AN ACT

To repeal section forty-nine, of chapter one hundred and eight, of the Acts of Assembly passed at January Session, eighteen hundred and seventy eight, entitled "An Act to add an addition article to the Code of Public Local Laws, to be entitled Garrett county," sub-title, "Justices of the Peace and constables," and also to repeal chapter two hundred and sixty-three, of the Acts of Assembly, passed at the January Session of eighteen hundred and eighty, entitled "An Act to repeal section forty-nine, of chapter one hundred and eight, of the Acts of Assembly passed at the January Session, eighteen hundred and seventy-eight, entitled An Act to add an additional section to the Code of Public Local Laws, to be entitled Garrett county, and to re-enact the same with amendments, limiting the Jurisdiction of Justices of the Peace." And also to repeal chapter fifty-nine, of the Acts of Assembly, passed at January Session, eighteen hundred and eighty-six, entitled "An Act to repeal chapter two hundred and sixty-three, of the Acts of Assembly, passed at January Session, eighteen hundred and eighty, entitled an Act to repeal section forty-nine, of chapter one hundred and eight, of the Act of Assembly, passed at the January Session of eighteen hundred and seventy-eight, entitled An Act to add an additional section to the Code of Public Local Laws, to be entitled Garrett county, and to re-enact the same with amendments, limiting the Jurisdiction of Justices of the Peace, and to re-enact the same with amendments."

SECTION 1. Be it enacted, by the General Assembly of Maryland, That section forty-nine, of chapter one hundred and eight, of the Acts of Assembly, passed at January Session, eighteen hundred and seventy-eight, entitled "An Act to add an additional article to the Code of Public Local Laws, to be entitled Garrett county," sub title "Justices of the Peace and Constables." And chapter two hundred and sixty three, of the Acts of Assembly, passed at the January Session of eighteen hundred and eighty, entitled An Act to repeal section forty-nine, of chapter one hundred and eight, of the Acts of Assembly, passed at the January Session, eighteen hundred and seventy-eight, entitled An Act to repeal section forty-nine of chapter one hundred and eight, of the Acts of Assembly, passed at the January Session of eighteen hundred and seventy-eight, entitled An Act to add an additional section to the Code of Public Local Laws to be entitled Garrett county, and to re-enact the same with amendments, limiting the Jurisdiction of Justices of the Peace." And chapter fifty-nine, of the Acts of Assembly, passed at January Session, eighteen hundred and eighty-six, entitled An Act to repeal chapter two hundred and sixty-three, of the Acts of Assembly, passed at January Session, eighteen hundred and eighty, entitled An Act to repeal section forty-nine of chapter one hundred and eight, of the Acts of Assembly, passed at the January Session of eighteen hundred and seventy-eight, entitled An Act to add an additional section to the Code of Public Local Laws, to be entitled "Garrett county," and to re-enact the same with amendments, limiting the Jurisdiction of Justices of the Peace, and to re-enact the same with amendments be, and the same are hereby repealed.

SEC. 2 And be it enacted, That this Act shall take effect from the date of its passage.

Approved March 31st 1888.

I hereby certify that the foregoing is a true copy of An Act of the General Assembly of Maryland, passed January Session, 1888.

Paine's Celery Compound

CURES Nervous Prostration, Nervous Headache, Neuralgia, Nervous Weakness, Stomach and Liver Diseases, Rheumatism, Dyspepsia, and all affections of the Kidneys.

WEAK NERVES

PAINE'S CELERY COMPOUND is a Nerve Tonic which never fails. Containing Celery and Coca, those wonderful nerve stimulants, it speedily cures all nervous disorders.

RHEUMATISM

PAINE'S CELERY COMPOUND purifies the blood. It drives out the lactic acid, which causes Rheumatism, and restores the blood-making organs to a healthy condition. It is the true remedy for Rheumatism.

KIDNEY COMPLAINTS

PAINE'S CELERY COMPOUND quickly restores the liver and kidneys to perfect health. This curative power, combined with its nerve tonics, makes it the best remedy for all kidney complaints.

DYSPEPSIA

PAINE'S CELERY COMPOUND strengthens the stomach, and quiets the nerves of the digestive organs. This is why it cures even the worse cases of Dyspepsia.

CONSTIPATION

PAINE'S CELERY COMPOUND is not a cathartic. It is a laxative, giving easy and natural action to the bowels. Regularity surely follows its use.

A Wonderful Structure.

Carter Harrison, writing from Delhi, India, to the Chicago Mail, describes the many magnificent tombs, morgues and other structures in that region. We quote from Mr. Harrison's letter as follows:

But this and all the things I have named and all the things I have seen, many of which are of wondrous beauty or of lofty grandeur, and will live in memory while I live—all of these pale and dwindle when brought into comparison with the one perfectly beautiful thing, not of India alone, but of the world. I refer to the "Taj Mahal." I had read much of this famous structure. I expected much, but had an undefined impression that it was to be disappointing. There was the feeling that my expectations could not be realized. I almost decided this when I approached it through the great south gateway, itself a magnificent building of red sandstone, 110 feet square and 140 feet high pierced by a portal seventy-five feet to the keystone of the pointed arch. The structure is so relieved by inlaid white marble in arabesques, friezes of vines and flowers, and enbiatures of quotations from the koran that it looks light and cheerful. The gateway alone would be a fit mausoleum for a Queen. Between this and the tomb is a garden 900 feet square, planted in trees of rich foliage. These so hid the mausoleum that I did not see it until I stood before the great arch portal of the gateway. This made a frame work showing only the tomb proper. At first it looked small, for so perfect are its proportions it seemed quite near and so light and airy as to seem a phantom picture thrown before a blue sky. The picture was so beautiful that I paused for some minutes. A man passed along the platform and seemed a mere pigmy, thus showing my eye the distance and causing it to comprehend the perfect proportions of the structure. I soon knew there was to be no disappointment. The "Taj" was even more beautiful than I had anticipated. As I walked forward through the gateway the picture widened until its broad wings and lofty minarets were in full view, and as it widened I could fancy the dome was lowering. Yew and cypress has made a broad avenue partially concealing the lower portion of the wings and minarets. In the middle of this avenue was a broad marble walk, with a long pool of pure water confined between marble walls, and a broad fountain bed half-way down.

I walked slowly along this walk looking at the building before me, dazzling and white in the Indian noonday sun, and still it seemed to be growing lower. But after removing my eyes from it, after passing around the central fountain, this effect disappeared, and as I still approached it grew taller, until standing in front of the great platform on which it is built, I realized the grandeur of the whole. Its whole length, from minaret to minaret, and the height to top of dome, all was fully before me. I looked up to the pinnacle 250 feet. I shall not attempt any further description than to say the entire structure is of white-veined or rather slightly clouded marble, is square, with the corners cut off, and is surrounded by one grand dome, with a smaller one at each corner, and four lofty minarets over 150 feet high at the corner of the wings. In front and on each side is a wonderful doorway, sixty odd feet high, being the segment of a Saracenic arched vault. Flanking these doorways are arched window recesses one above another to the level of the arch of the great portal. The whole is inlaid in beautiful figures and arbesques in dark marble, thereby relieving the structure of too glaring appearance. Under the great dome is a noble vaulted room of polished white marble, the wainscoting beautifully carved in vines and lotus flowers, and above inlaid in costly marbles.

In the centre of this vaulted room, immediately under the apex of the dome, is the cenotaph of "Montaz," called "Taj Mahol," or "crown of the house." It is cut from a great block of snow-white alabaster. A part of it is beautifully carved, and the whole made beautiful by graceful vines and pretty flowers, composed of lapis, lazuli, cornelian, topaz, blood-stone, jasper, onyx, moss-agates, gold-stone, turquoise and other costly stones, inlaid in tiny bits so as to give the blended hues of the flowers. In one small flower I counted thirty seperate pieces. By the side of Montaz is the cenotaph of Shah Jehan of the same pattern as that of his wife. He built this wonderful tomb and buried his wife in it. Afterward he was buried by her side. Around the cenotaph is a guard or fence some six feet high of open lattice work of alabaster, of most delicate workmanship, representing vines and flowers.

Inside of this enclosure we sat leaning against the tomb, and John gave an octave of tones, skipping one and then descending slowly—these were echoed with supernatural precision—the notes were caught and swelled till they would ring, and then died like a far off sigh. A deep bass note was sent back in a terrible musical groan, and then would melt into a dying wail. We could not give a note in so low a tone that it would not return to us in rich volume. We tried them so low that we could scarcely hear each other, though not four feet apart, yet they would swell until they would fill the chamber and come back to us louder by far than we at first heard them. The echo lasts far too long to make any recitation or any song effective. A single musical tone rises and dies away, taking many seconds to die out. We found that a pure round note made a greatly more prolonged echo than a harsh one. I had no admiration for the character of Montaz, she was cruel and crafty; but after listening to those sweet echoes, I almost imagined I had heard her spirit in chastened repentance. I arose, bought some flowers, and laid them reverently upon her beir. Art for a moment sanctified the woman.

To Harness up the Niagara.

If the plans of the Niagara River Hydraulic Tunnel, Power and Sewer company are carried out as arranged at the present time, the mighty power of the Falls of Niagara will be utilized for the general benefit of mankind and for the financial enrichment of the stockholders in the enterprise. The company was incorporated by an act of the Legislature in March, 1886, and since time the efforts of the projectors have been directed toward securing the capital necessary to enable them to execute their designs. It is now claimed that enough money has been secured and that the work of construction will begin in July. The prospectus issued by the company yesterday states that the company was organized for the purpose of utilizing the power of the Niagara river by constructing a subterranean tunnel from the water level below the falls, about 200 feet under the high bank of the river, extending through the rock to the upper Niagara river at a point about one mile above the falls, where a head of 120 feet is obtained. The tunnel is then to extend, parallel with the shore of the river one and one-half miles, at an average depth of 100 feet below the surface of the earth and at a distance of about 400 feet from the navigable water of the river, with which it is to be connected by means of conduits or laternal tunnels.

The scheme is one of gigantic proportions, and includes the establishments of innumerable mills at the point where the power is obtained, as well as distributing the power through electric wires to other centers, where it can be used in lieu of steam or local water power. The power is to be obtained from the conduits leading to the main tunnel, and not from the tunnel itself or from the falls. The conduits will, it is contemplated, lead to wells sunk to the tunnel 100 feet below the earth's surface. In these wells will be placed turbine wheels, which are turned by the weight of the water in the wells. Thus, it is said, the power will be uniform, because the wells will always be kept full, and as the wells are supplied from the river there will be no variation in the quantity of the water available. The river itself being fed from the five great lakes, will always have a uniform quantity from which to supply the conduits. It is claimed that the drain from the river by the conduits and tunnel will not take 1 per cent. of the water in the stream, that is the depth of the river would not be reduced 1 inch. The prospectus states that since the incorporation of the company sufficient land along the river has been secured, surveyed and apportioned into mill sites fronting on the river and on the line of the proposed tunnel, with ample streets and dockage, affording approach by rail or water to accommodate 238 mills of 500 horse-power each, or 119,000 horse-power in all, which is the estimate of the engineers of the capacity of the tunnel proposed to be built.

This power would be greater than all the other water power of the country combined. The land secured by the company is two miles and a half above the falls, and beyond the limits of the Government Park land surrounding them. The tunnel is run under the streets of Niagara village, and all of the conduits will be located on the company's land. The estimated cost of construction is $3,000,000, and enough patronage has already been secured, it is said, to pay a dividend on the investment. The City of Buffalo has agreed to pay $100,000 per annum for power for electric lights and an electric smelting company in Cleveland has made application for 20,000 horse-power to be carried through wires. The mills are to be located so far above the falls that vessels of any draft can come to the wharves, thus insuring cheap water freights from the mills to tidewater. It is claimed that the volume of water over the falls will not be lessened by the construction of the tunnel; that the beauty of the landscape will not be impaired in any way, since the mills will give forth no smoke, and that the drain from the river will be less than half the amount taken from the lakes by evaporation.

If the project proves to be a success it is also intended to use the power in lighting many of the larger cities in that locality by electricity.

Prepared for the Capitalists.

"Are you getting ready for that excursion of eastern capitalists which is coming here when the railroad is completed?" asked a prominent citizen of a new Kansas town of the mayor.

"Oh, yes. We've made arrangements with Metropolis City to borrow its county seat for the day, and will move it down."

"That's good. Anything else?"

"Yes; each merchant is going to put up fifty packages which will look as if they contained sugar, and the farmers will be going out of the stores with them all day."

"Fifty packages won't last."

"But they'll keep sneaking them around in the back door again when the capitalists aren't looking. We propose to sell each bundle twenty times. Then we're going to have two brass bands, and the railroad company will side track a couple of freight trains here all day, and I'm having the creek dammed up two miles above here, and just before they come we'll cut the dam and let her howl all day and call her a river, and I'm going to salt the town well with a barrel of kerosene, and have an expert smelling of it and talking loud about natural gas, and then there'll be two or three men run over with teams, and a lot more will be going around and looking awful deep and sticking stakes around for new buildings, and everything will boom proportionately all day. Oh, you just let me alone to extract the reluctant dollar from the pocket of the eastern investor."—Chicago Tribune.

Hypocrisy of a Love Token.

"I have become a hopeless cynic from my thirteen years' experience as a jeweler," said the foreman of a leading firm. "I have learned that so much is tinsel that shines as gold that I can only look on the world's splendor as clinquant, hollow sham. Even when the genuine glittering gold, plucked from the bowels of rich Potosi and set with gems of purest ray serene, adorns fair throat, or rounded arm, or tapering finger, it only produces a sentiment of scorn for the hypocrisy of human nature.

"Let me illustrate: It has been for some time a favorite fad with the young men in society when one becomes engaged to present his fiancee with a jeweled bracelet, which the jeweler rivets on the wrist so that it cannot be slipped off. This is supposed to be a token of the eternal bondage of the wearer to the donor and a perpetual reminder of fidelity. But in a day or two the young lady receives a note from the jeweler requesting her to call. When she does so she is shown a secret spring whereby she can put aside the bond at will." "And I have observed," added the jeweler, "that although the fair lady protests against making use of the spring she is delighted to find the secret of it."—Philadelphia Press.

A SAD STORY.

A queer old creature? Well, yes; that's so;
She is a curious sort of bird;
I used to see her long years ago—
Before her hair was so white, you know—
When she was a girl. Perhaps you've heard.

Her story—no? That's a little queer;
But then you're strange around these parts.
She's always lived just over here,
Behind that hill where the sun sets clear
These fine June nights—there, now she starts.

She is going home, as she's sure to do
When night comes, though she is out all day.
Just mark how sharp she will look at you;
She eyes a stranger through and through,
While never a glance will she throw my way.

As pretty a girl as you ever see,
Was that old crone forty years ago,
And the way she ever came to be
This half-crazed creature seems odd to me,
But I'll tell you, stranger, the best I know.

It was just this same time of the year,
In June, when every thing looks so gay,
That a big ship sailed away from here;
The wind was fair and the sky was clear
When old Kate's lover sailed away.

And they were young, and their life, I s'pose,
Looked like a great, long, sweet June day;
So they said good-bye as the bright sun rose,
And the days went on as all time goes
When one that we love is far away.

The letter she waited for never came,
But instead the news that the brave old ship
Was lost at sea—and never a name
Of those who sailed came back to claim
The welcome that waited from heart and lip

All that was forty odd years ago,
But now, as every June rolls round,
This poor old creature walks to and fro,
With her broken heart and her head of snow,
That will soon find peace beneath the ground.

You have the story, stranger. To me
It's wonderful sad. It's hard to say
Why God permits such things to be;
But the time is coming when we shall see
His reasons, stranger, as clear as day.

"THAT YANKEE GAL."

A "Quare Story All Mixed Up Amongst Two Families."

"I never hain't liked them Yankees much," observed the veteran as I sat beside him in front of his little log cabin, in the cool of the evening.

"No, I never hain't liked 'em much sence they killed the best breedin' sow I had when that feller Wilson come through with 'is cavalry, an' jest nat'ly tore up the yea'th. But I tell ye, pard, ther' mus' be some good in 'em, or leastways ther's some uv 'em that's 'bove the averidge.

"Do you see yon house on the hill to the right? Now, look across the level toward the left, an' you kin jest diskiver the chimbleys uv another. Them's both Yankee houses, or leastways they're ha'f an' ha'f. Captain McAlpin lives to the right, and Colonel Imboden lives in the other one. Now, there's a quare story all mixed up 'mongst them 'ere two famblies.

"Ah, how well I rickollect the fust time I ever seed Imboden's wife. We'd gone down to Jonesboro to market, me an' some o' the neighbors, an' while we wer' a knockin' 'round the grocery we seed old man Imboden's carryall driv' up to the station, an' when the train came we seed Mr. Imboden go 'round an' hunt up a little slip uv a gal an' put 'er in the carryall an' drive off towards the settlement.

"'That can't be the new school-teacher?' says Bill Jennings to me.

"'No,' says I, 'tain't noways likely, Bill.'

"But sure 'nough it wus. We foun' that out nex' day when old man Imboden come 'round an' axed us how many children we'd sign fur the quarter.

"'Who's to be the teacher?' says I.

"'O, my little Yankee gal,' says he. 'Didn't you see'er down at the depo' t'other day?'

"'Well, yes, I s'pose I did; but r'ally, Mr. Imboden, you're a-jokin', hain't you? That ere gal look's if she'd better be a-gwine to school stiddier a-teachin'.'

"'O, she's all right,' says he, a-laughin'. 'You know she's a Yankee gal, an' they gits grown quicker'n other gals. They're like young pa'tridges. Soon's the'r wings air dry they're ready to shif' fur theirselves.'

"Well, the school wus made up an' the Yankee gal come out fust rate. The children all jest nat'ly doted on Miss Marian—Marian McAlpin wus the way she signed 'er name. So when the spring quarter wus out, we jest put in an' made 'er up another school fur the fall. This wus 'long in '59, an' times wer' raither ticklish. Everybody wus s'picious uv everybody else, an' 'specially strangers. This created some prejydices ag'in' Mis McAlpin, an' although I wus a leetle that way myse'f, I wus satisfied a'ter'ards that I wus mistaken. All we knowed 'bout the gal wus that she wus a leetle pecked-lookin' thing with great wondersome lookin' eyes—blamed 'f I ever did fin' out what color they wer', and' long brown hair what wus a caution to look at. She wusn't extry purty, I didn't think. R'ally, she wa'n't as purty as Carrie Weldon, the old man Weldon's gal, what used to live over yon way, in that t'other house. You see the Weldon and Imboden places j'ined lands, an' both on 'em were well off, an' both had plenty uv niggers to tend 'em. Jack Imboden was the only child old man Imboden had; an' he had set his heart on Jack's marryin' Carrie Weldon, beca'se that would fetch all the prop'ty into one body. Carrie wus a good gal, too, an' her 'n Jack 'ud bin sweethearts all their lives.

"Jack wus off at collidge when Miss McAlpin come to the settlement, an' he never saw 'er tell winter, when he come home to vacation. I don' know 's he'd a-seed 'er then, but when her school wus out Mr. Imboden axed 'er to stop at his house an' rest tell the holidays wus over, an' promised 'er that ef we could 'ford it, we'd try to git 'er up another school. W'y, sir, I never seed childern l'arn so 'n all my borned days as they did under that little Yankee gal. My Jane, what didn't know the fus' letter in 'er book when she started, went clear thr'ugh an' thr'ugh in the fust three months, an' besides she l'arnt to say the one I ones, too.

"Ther' wus sump'n' 'bout the gal that we couldn't nn'erstan'. She claimed to de f'om Pennsylvany, an' said she wuz an orphant an' had lived with 'er old aunt tell she died, an' that she had a brother sever'l years older than she wus, but she didn' know wher' he wus. He'd went out West afore her aunt died, an' she hadn't hearn nothin' f'om 'im in five year. That's the tale she told, an' it turned out to be true, but we had our s'picions then.

"Well, jest as soon as Jack laid eyes on th at gal he seemed to be possessed. He jest hung 'round 'er all the time he wus there, an' when he started off to finish his eddication at collidge, I've hearn sence ther' was a right smart uv didoes cut up betwixt 'em. Seems he wanted 'er to promise him, an' she jest right out 'n' out an' plainly told 'im that she wa'n't a-gwine to do it. She seed how the 'rangements wus 'twixt Jack an' Miss Carrie, an' she wus jest de-termined not to have nothin' to do with it. A'ter Jack wus gone her an' Carrie got to be putty thick together. Old Mis' Weldon wus er haughty old soul, but she wa'n't overbearin', an' she jest made the little Yankee gal feel at home there. I've hearn 'em say sence that Carrie used to show Marian the letters Jack writ 'er f'om collidge, an' that she even joked at 'er 'bout sich questions as he'd ax 'bout my little Yankee gal, an' so on.

"At last times got so hot they wa'n't no coolin' 'em, an' Jack come home fur good, an' they begun to talk 'bout war, an' call fur volunteers, an' kick up their heels ginerly. Uv co'se school broke up an' Miss Marian packed up to leave. She'd bin a-boardin' at Imboden's, an' when the time cum fur her to hunt a new place, old Miss Imboden found 'er a-settin' in 'er room a-cryin' one mornin', an' she jes' up'n says to her old man: 'Mr. Imboden, it's a sin an' a shame to let that poor thing go off that way. Le's keep 'er here.'

"'Well they had it up 'n' down. The old man didn't s'picion nothin' 'bout Jack, fur he thought that was all safe; so at last they 'greed to ax 'er jest to stay there till times got better. She wouldn't hear to it at fust, but as the po' thing didn't have nowher's to go, she fin'ly concluded to stay for awhile. Well, sir, when Jack come home, he jest laid siege. He done it in such a quiet way tell the gal herself didn't know hardly what to think uv 'im. He'd rattle an' run on with Carrie jest like he al'us did, but he wus al'us on the lookout fur Miss McAlpin. I didn't blame 'im much, fur as soon as she got over her first proud fit she jest dropped right into the fambly as natchul as life. She got so she could manage things jest as well as Mis' Imboden, and a dinged sight better. An' how she did flesh'n' up. She got as red as a rose, an' her arms got to be as plump, an' I never seed sich a come out in anybody.

"Well, the war broke out. Everybody went crazy, an' the men commenced to leave in comp'nies an' r'dgments, an' all was harum-scarum, helter-skelter. I didn't go as long as I could help it, but like a great many others I had to go a'ter awhile. The draft tuck Jack Imboden just as he come uv age, but the old man didn't keer. He had money 'nough to pay fur a substitute.

"Now comes the curiousest part. Jack 'ud jest got to lovin' that Yankee gal to kill, an' she, po' thing, loved 'im back, fur nobody could'nt he'p that. He was just as clever as he could be, an' as handsome as one o' them 'ere pictures you see in history books what reads 'bout the heathens an' the'r gods. So one day Jack jest up'n axed her the question right out. Well, sir, hit like to a-scared the gal to death. She did'n' know what to do. Fin'ly she said:

"'Mr. Imboden, I've bin here at your pay-rents' house a good while now, and it's bin a mighty pleasant home for me. I know that they intend for you to marry Miss Weldon, and it would be wrong for me to step in the way, and I won't do it.'

"Jack begged an' begged, tell fin'ly she told him that ef his people was willin', an ef he hadn't never promised 'imse'f to Miss Carrie, she might study 'bout it. Then she went an' shet herse'f up 'n had a bout uv cryin'.

"Jack he jest went right up to the old man an' told 'im plump out that he loved the gal, an' would have her or nobody. Whoopee! The old man was dumbf'unded.

"'What!' says he. Marry that 'ere Yankee gal when everybody knows hit's as good as settled betwixt you and Carrie! Why, this gal hain't got the wrappin's of her finger, an' Carrie Weldon's got seventeen likely niggers besides the plantation.

"'It don't make any difference to me, father,' says Jack; 'I'll have Miss McAlpin if she'll have me, and there is no use in discussing the matter!'

"Well, sir, there was a storm raised. The old man kicked up a ter'ble rumpus, an' at last it all turned out jest as mount 'a'bin expected. Miss McAlpin got ready to hunt 'er a home, an' Jack, bein' cut out on every side, got on his hoss an' rode to Jonesboro, an' before anybody knowed what he wus up to he wus in Virginny, a-fightin' Yankees like the very dickens.

"Afore he left, though, he went an' told Carrie the whole bus'ness, an' she laughed at his long face, fur she wus his cousin, his father an' old man Imboden bein' fust cousins; an' she got right up an' went over to Imboden's an' tuck Miss McAlpin home with 'er. I al'us liked Carrie, but I never knowed ha'f how good a gal she wus till then. She said a'ter'ards that while she mout 'a' had Jack ef he'd 'a' axed 'er, at the same time she never did love 'im more'n a sorter sister's love.

"The old man sulked 'round a few days, an' talked 'bout Yankee spies an' husban'-hunters an' all sich as that, but he 'peared to be onrestless. Now, this is what I l'arnt a'ter'ards, for you see I was in Virginny, too, 'bout that time, a-livin' on short rashuns an' a fightin' Yankees fur all I wus wo'th. In 'bout a week he rid over to Mis' Weldon's an' axed a'ter 'Manie,' as they called Miss McAlpin. It wusn't long afore he had her pe'suaded to go back to Imboden's, fur old Mis' Imboden tuck on ter'bly when Jack an' her both left 'em. So she sorter settled down thar ag'in. But she wa'n't the same gal no mo'. Hit seemed like she was a-totin' a dead weight on 'er shoulders. I r'ally don't b'lieve she'd agone back ef it hadn't 'a' been that she blamed herse'f fur Jack's gwine off like he did, an' she wanted to sorter make up fur it some way. Once she got a letter f'om Jack, but she never opened it, an' jest answered it with a short note, axin' him not to write any mo'.

"Well, sir, them wus rattlin' times. A feller had to take his life in his haversack up there in Virginny. Grant an' Sherman an' all them fellers wus jest a-shellin' us an' a-bombardin' us an' a-blockadin' us all the time, an' less'n we wer' a-fightin' we wer' a-starvin', an' so what wus the diffunce? But them sort o' things hain't got nothin' to do with my tale, excep' hit's jest to show you the ways an' wher'fo's.

"Bimeby ther' come a desp'rate cavalry fight way up thar in the mountains; hit wus 'long towards the last uv the war—an' who should get hit but Jack Imboden? He was badly wounded, too, I kin tell ye. They sent 'im to the hospittle, an' he stayed ther' awhile, an' somehow his daddy got 'im sent home. When he come home, he didn't look like the same feller what went off so hilariously. He was perished most to death, an' nearly dead with that wound, an' gangrene 'd set in.

"Well, sir, you orter 'a' seed them women folks. They tuck that boy home, an' they sot up night an' day with 'im, an' they doctored on him tell they got 'im started to mendin'. You couldn't tell nothin' 'bout which one thought the most uv him, fur Carrie, an' Mis' McAlpin, an' old Mis' Weldon, stiff an' haughty as she wus, an' his mother, an' all uv 'em, wer' alike. Hit seemed like they didn't take no mo' notice uv the war long as they had Jack back.

"'Bout that time things wus a-comin' to a p'nt, fur all uv a suddint Joe Brown's melish wus called out. This tuck the old man Imboden, as he wus under sixty, an' he had to pack up an' git off. I'll tell you, thar wus a time that 'ud 'a' made you cry. That old peaceable man what hadn't never even whipped a grown nigger, much less j'ined a ridgment, had to shoulder a muskit an' jine. Poor old man! He wus one uv the many what breathed out their last at Kennesaw Mountain. They brung his body home an' buried it, and then they hated Yankees wus'n ever.

"Bimeby, 'long towards the spring uv '65, the raiders came through. Jack Imboden had got able to hobble about on crutches, but he looked like a ha'nt, he wus so poor an' scrawny an' holler-eyed. One day the alarm wus give that the Yankees wer' a-comin', an' in an hour they rid up to the gate. Jack wus grievin' himse'f to death 'bout his daddy, an' he wus weak an' peevish any how, an' when the little squad rid up, he drawed his gun on 'em. They hollered out to 'em to 'surrender,' an he told 'em he'd die fust, an' they wus jest 'bout to fire on 'im when a Yankee officer came gallopin' up an' commanded 'em to stop. He then commenced to try to reason with Jack, an' a'ter awhile Jack seed how foolish he wus, an' axed the officer inside. Well, sir, the feller wus jest as p'lite as a jaybird. He walked into the house an' sot down, an' soon Miss McAlpin come, in an'—jee-miny! ef she didn't stop 'n' look at 'im a second, an' then jest run right up an' commence huggin' and kissin' 'im, I'll be dinged!

"'My broiher!' wus all she could say; an' shore 'nough, when she got so she could talk to 'im an' he got so he could talk to her, they splained the whole thing. But Jack had lef' the house, an' went an' made the niggers git whatever they could fin' to feed the hosses, an' he give the men sump'n' to eat, an' then went back to the house. Ther' sat Colonel McAlpin and Miss McAlpin still a-talkin'. A'ter awhile the Yankee officer says:

"'Sister, I must leave you. I must join my command, but not for long; and once I'm ever out of this we won't be separated any more.'

"Jest then ther' wus a ter'ble [illegible] out in the yard, an' Jack an' the Curnel an' ther' wus Mis' Weldon's carriage a-scared mos' to death, a-tryin' to tell how the Yankees had attacted Miss Weldon's place an' wus a-gwine to burn up everything, an' a whole passel uv nonsense.

"In a minit the Curnel an' his men wus mounted, an' went gallopin' off. They wus jest in time, fur some o' them fu'in stragglers 'ud attacked the place, an' wus a-makin' Carrie git dinner fur 'em, an' a-totin' up ginerlly. But hit wa'n't many minits afore that Yankee Curnel had 'em a-gwine 'ud marchin' in double quick time. Then he made 'imself known to the ladies, and he left a gyard thar, an' sent a gyard back to Imboden's afore he left the settlement. It was them furrin fellers what killed my best breedin' sow, cuss 'em, an' r'all they wa'n't out 'n out Yankees, nohow."

"Jack got well a'ter the war wus over, but it was some time afor he could muster up couridge to talk to Mis McAlpin 'bout the past. 'Twan't till a'ther brother writ to her f'om Savannah that Jack says to 'er: 'Miss McAlpin, you said you would never have me so long as my father's objections existed. He has passed away, and while I honor his name, I believe, if he was here to-day, he would change his mind. You have been so faithful to my mother that she has learned to look to you as a daughter. Will you not consent to be so indeed?'

"She objected uv co'se, an' writ to her brother, an' he come all the way thar to see 'bout the matter, an' finlly hit all wound up jest as I s'pose it would. Jack married Miss McAlpin, an' Colonel McAlpin married Carrie Weldon an' that settled the bus'ness.

"I never han't liked the Yankees much, but I mus' say that our settlement has prospered more'n any in these parts. D'ye see that big house down yander? That's the 'Cademy. He stands right wher' the little old school-house what that Yankee gal teached in useter stand. McAlpin an' Imboden had it built, an' I tell you they've got a crackin' good school thar now. Our settlement mout 'a 'bin like Briar Creek settlement, with its old tumble-down fixments, ef it hadn't 'a' 'bin fur them. An' I 'spose all 'ud 'a' bin diffe'nt ef it hadn't abin fur that Yankee gal."—N. Y. Evening Post.

DWELLING IN TREES.

Queer Habitations Found in Southern and Central Africa.

A study of the various habitations which do service as the home of man, is at once most curious and interesting. We find them made of almost every conceivable material—of snow and ice, of mud and sod, of the skins of animals, and of the leaves, bark and twigs of trees, as well as of the many other materials commonly considered suitable for building purposes. Quite as varied are the sites selected for dwellings; the caves of the earth, the cliffs of the rocks, the almost inaccessible mountain-side, the lowland swamps, and even lakes sometimes form the site of a pile village.

In thinly populated districts of Southern and Central Africa, where wild beasts abound, the natives dwell in huts which resemble gigantic bee-hives. These huts are firmly fixed among the large branches of the boabab, an immense tree—sometimes more than one hundred feet in circumference—which rises like a dwarf tower from twenty to thirty feet and then throws out branches like a miniature forest. One such tree furnishes ample room for several houses, and it is said that thirty families have been found to occupy a single tree. In many instances, natives who till the soil at any great distance from their tribe, build these huts for nightly accommodation.

The natives of New Guinea are said build their houses in high trees, sometimes upon the narrowest and most inaccessible ridges of the mountains. To these dwellings bamboo ladders yield the only means of access. To give these ladders strength, and to render the ascent and descent easier, vines were cultivated to clamber up them.

The Waraus, a tribe of Indians living upon the banks of the Orinoco, also sometimes build their huts in the tree-tops. The Indian searches through the forest until he finds a tree which suits his fancy, then proceeds to fashion a hut among its branches. When the annual floods come he uses it as a raft, and floats away to some locality which pleases him better.

Tree houses certainly offer some advantages from a sanitary point of view. The dwellers in them are sure of an abundance of good air. "Swinging in the tree-tops," they may enjoy an atmosphere unpolluted by ground air, a damp basement or an unclean cellar.—Good Health.

IN A CARPET MILL.

How Brussels and Tapestry Floor-Coverings Are Woven and Printed.

If Brussels carpet is to be made the yarn goes to the dye-room; but if it is to be made into tapestry, then it goes to the printer. When dyed, of course, each yarn is of one color throughout. When printed every yarn is of one color for a certain length, perhaps half an inch, then another for perhaps a quarter of an inch and soon. The dye-house is a picturesque place. It is filled with clouds of steam that roll from the caldrons, over which half naked men are stooping, lifting stout rods covered with hanks of yarn in and out of the boiling dye. When the workman thinks the yarn has acquired the right color he submits a skein of it to the chief dyer. If he passes it the batch of yarn is steamed in order to "set" the dye, and is then washed and dried in another hot room, and then the yarn is at last ready for the loom.

A Brussels carpet usually contains five colors. This is accomplished by filling five "frames" with spools of yarn, each frame being filled with yarn of one color. The threads are carried from each spool through the "heddle" to the loom. Above, the "Jacquard," a part of the machine of intricate construction, determines just which threads are raised at a particular moment so as to appear in the pattern. Thus Brussels is woven, the pattern growing like magic as the shuttle flies back and forth, every part of the complicated machinery of the loom moving at its appointed time and place as if inspired with intelligence.

The printing process is even more wonderful. Imagine a huge drum on which the yarn is wound. Beneath it runs a carriage carring a kind of brush loaded with color. The color is changed as required by a boy. The operator turns the drum to a certain point, and at a signal the carriage rolls across under the drum, painting a narrow strip of color. The drum moves a notch and the color brush flies back again, doubling the width of the strip. The operator follows the pattern before him, and he must follow it neatly. If he makes the strip of color too wide, and if the color be dark, so that another can not be printed over it, the whole drum of yarn is spoiled and the blunderer is fined one dollar.

When the yarn has all been printed it is steamed, washed and dried, and then reeled. Now, it must be "set" according to the pattern. This is a process requiring much patience and exactness, and the nimble fingers of girls are employed to do it. When a pattern is "set," it is rolled on a cylinder and then each thread must be fixed into its proper place in the loom. Then the weaving begins and the carpet commences to grow, every dot of color coming exactly where it should to bring out the pattern clearly and distinctly. The most wonderful thing about the loom is the "wire" movement. The machinery pulls out from a woven carpet a wire, armed with a blade at its end. This blade cuts the wool, and thus makes the "pile." Then the wire is pushed back and again thrust into the warp, the whole movement being accomplished with lightning-like rapidity.

The carpet must then be carefully scrutinized by women, who sew up any broken threads; its surface must be sheared and brushed by machinery, so as to make it perfectly even and bright, and then it is ready for the market.—Philadelphia Press.

VERMIN ON STOCK.

A Preventive and Cure Which Has Stood the Test of Twenty Years.

I have noticed several articles on the destruction of vermin on live-stock. We all have a way of our own, which is all right if based upon reason and common sense. My way is to lock the barn before the horse is stolen. "An ounce of prevention is better than a pound of cure," is an old saying if rightly used and applied. My belief is that no perfectly healthy domestic animal will ever breed or be infested with vermin if properly treated and cared for, and most all diseases may be warded off or prevented by using timely remedies or preventatives. During twenty years of farm experience I used from fifteen to twenty-five pounds of sulphur every year, which can be bought for six cents per pound by the quantity. To prepare it for use, to one part sulphur add two parts salt, one part fine wood ashes, the stronger the better. Place it under an open shed if you have it; if not, in the yard, and put a cover over it, where all can have access when they please, and feed no other salt. During the last twenty years I have kept from one to ten horses constantly, kept and fed hundreds of cattle, hogs and sheep, and never lost by disease or otherwise one hundred dollars, all told. In stall-feeding cattle, I give them a warm stable, plenty of fresh bedding, and use the card freely every day. To guard against lice, take an old tin baking powder can, fill about half full of flour of sulphur, perforate the cover with small holes, replace, and you are ready for business. Take your card in left hand, your pepper box in right; get on near side of steer. Commence at tail and rake the hair toward the head with card, following up with a light sprinkling of sulphur from your box, from tail to horns. Then give the hair a light brush with hand back and forth, to work sulphur down into the hair. Repeat this and in two or three weeks allow them all of the sunshine, but keep well sheltered from the storm. Crowd all of the feed into them that they will take and take clean. My word for it, you will be troubled with no lice and will get good returns for your trouble and feed.—Cor. Toledo Blade.

A GOOD EDUCATOR.

Lessons to be Learned From Observations Made in the Street.

The world is full of useful information, and no person of active mind can travel far over any part of its surface without learning something that is good for him to know. There is no institution for the diffusion of knowledge like the social system of which we all form a part, with its varied interests, its occupations, characters, achievements, failures and every-day history acted before our eyes. The man who can walk through Broadway, on any day of the year, without receiving an impression capable of being turned to good account either on his own behalf or that of his fellow-men, is little better than a dolt. The streets of a city constitute a museum of inestimable value to observing eyes and thinking heads. The specimens of utilitarian and ornamental art, of inventive genius, of scientific discovery and adaptation, of skill and dexterity in almost every department of human labor, exposed to view in the windows of the stores, constitute an ever open volume of information for the people, that he who runs may read. But he must not run too fast. It will pay him to pause now and then and make inquiries as he goes along, even when in full chase of the golden game we are all supposed to be pursuing. For even in a walk from Union Square to Wall street, he may gather knowledge that will help him to make a shorter cut to his object.

All discoveries and inventions are suggestive. A new labor-saving machine may not be applicable to your special purpose, but the principle upon which it works may be capable of being otherwise applied. Inquire about it. Don't be ashamed to question the inventor. His explanations may give you a hint that you may improve at your leisure. At any rate his conversation may set you thinking, and something valuable generally comes of earnest, well-directed thought. We have known a man to lay the foundation of a fortune by gazing into a mechanician's window, and afterwards spending five minutes in conversation with the mechanician himself. Inquiring eyes, quick ears and a questioning tongue are the atenniæ through which the human insect acquires practical knowledge as it moves along. Its brains would be of no more use without them than a head of steam without an engine.

There are lessons in trade, in social and political economy, in moral philosophy, in almost everything pertaining to the business of life, to be learned in the streets. There the great principle of mutual and reciprocal dependence, of community of interests, is illustrated and rendered self-evident. There we are taught the necessity of mutual forbearance, of mutual courtesy, of mutual charity. There we learn the value of honesty, brotherhood, sympathy, and see the consequences of fraud, selfishness and uncharitableness. It imports us to lay such lessons to heart, and to apply them in great things as well as small.—N. Y. Ledger.

CONVINCING GUARANTEES.

Which are Justified by a World-Wide Experience.

To the Public:

Having branch houses and laboratories in seven different quarters, and therefore having a world-wide experience, we, H. H. Warner & Co., justify ourselves in making the following statement:

First.—For the past decade we have held that 93 per cent. of diseases originate in the kidneys, which introduce uric acid into the system, a poison that is injurious to every organ, attacking and destroying first the organs which are the weakest. We have also held that if the kidneys are kept in perfect health most of the ordinary ailments will be prevented, or, if contracted, cured. Other practitioners have held that extreme kidney disease is incurable. We have proof to the contrary, however, in hundreds of thousands of cases in every section of the globe.

Second.—The kidneys being the sewers of the human system, it is impossible to keep the entire system in good working order unless these organs are doing their full duty. Most people do not believe their kidneys are out of order because they never give them any pain. It is a peculiarity of kidney disease that it may long exist without the knowledge of the patient or of the practitioner. It may be suspected if there is any gradual departure from ordinary health, which departure increases as age comes on.

Third.—We do not cure every known disease from one bottle. This is an impossibility.

Fourth.—Warner's Safe Remedies have been recognized by the doctors and the people all over the globe as standards of the highest excellence.

Fifth.—We make the following unqualified guarantees:

GUARANTEE 1.—That Warner's Safe Remedies are pure and harmless.

GUARANTEE 2.—That the testimonials used by us are genuine, and so far as we know, absolutely true. We will forfeit $5,000 for proof to the contrary.

GUARANTEE 3.—Warner's Safe Remedies have permanently cured many millions of people whom the doctors have pronounced incurable. Permanent cures are always convincing proofs of merit.

Sixth.—Ask your friends and neighbors what they think of Warner's Safe Cure.

REV. J. P. ARNOLD, Camden, Tenn., had fearful abscesses caused by Kidney disease. In 1878 and 1881, other running abscesses appeared. He was fully cured in 1882 by Warner's Safe Cure and in 1888 reported himself sound and well, and he is over 70 years old.

MRS. ANNIE JENNESS-MILLER, editress of Dress, 253 Fifth avenue, New York, eight years ago was cured of nervous prostration, when the best New England physicians could do her no good. She cured herself with Warner Safe Cure, and writes in 1887: "To-day I am a perfectly well woman. It is the only medicine I ever take."

E. B. PRICE, M. D., a gentleman and physician of the highest standing of Hanover C. H., Va., four years ago, after trying every other remedy for bright's disease, including famous mineral waters, cured himself by Warner's Safe Cure, and March 24, 1888, wrote: "I have never had the slightest symptoms of my old and fearful trouble."

HERMAN URBAN, of MacNeale & Urban, safe makers, Cincinnati, O., was broken down by excessive business cares. He was fully restored to health four years ago by Warner's Safe Cure and has since been in robust health.

DR. DIO. LEWIS wrote: "If I found myself afflicted with a serious kidney disorder I would use Warner's Safe Cure."

MRS. E. J. WOLF, Gettysburg, Pa., S. C. Farrington, Gotha, Fla., J. M. Long, 43 East 2d street, Cincinnati, O., and the sister of J. W. Westlake, Mt. Vernon, O., were cured of consumption, (caused by kidney acid in the blood, as over half the cases are,) by Warner's Safe Cure.

We could give many thousands of similar testimonials. Warner's Safe Cure does exactly as represented.

Seventh.—Warner's Safe Remedies were put on the market in obedience to a vow made by H. H. Warner that, if the remedy now known as Warner's safe cure, restored him to health, he would spread its merits before the entire world. In ten years the demand has grown so that laboratories have been established in seven quarters of the globe. Warner's Safe Cure is a scientific specific—it cures when all the doctors fail, thousands of the best physicians prescribe it regularly, its power over disease is permanent and its reputation is of the most exalted character. Can you afford longer to ignore its extraordinary power? Now, in the spring of the year, a few bottles will tone you up and cure all those ill feelings which, unknown to you, are caused by the fatal kidney poison in the blood, which will surely end fatally, if not at once removed. For this no other specific is known.

FARM AND FIRESIDE.

—Where a piece of land is not fit for cultivation, yet produces a growth of some kind, even of weeds, it may be devoted to sheep, as the sheep will eat young weeds readily.

—Horse Radish Sauce: Take stock which has been cooked with a little vinegar, salt, butter, sugar and fine bread crumbs, and mix with it as much grated horse-radish as will be required; the sauce should be quite thick; eat with boiled beef.

—Cocoanut Tarts: Dissolve half a pound of sugar in a pint of water; add a pound of grated cocoanut and boil. Let cool; add the well-beaten yelk of three eggs and the white of one; beat all together and pour in tart tins lined with puff paste.

—Meadows that have ceased to give good crops may be renewed cheaply by turning the sod soon after cutting, then harrow thoroughly at intervals of a fortnight, and before autumn rains reseed with timothy and such other varieties of grass as may be suited to soil and situation.

—Severely cutting back the dead wood on the peach trees will start them into new life. If the tree be dead at the top and the wood near the trunk green, the new buds will soon give a new top. By keeping all the injured old wood cut away the tree will do service much longer than is usually the case with peach trees.

—Apple Snow: Peel and quarter half a dozen apples; stew with a little water, the rind of a lemon and a little sugar. When quite soft, remove the rind and strain the apples through a fine sieve. Beat the whites of four eggs to a stiff froth, with powdered sugar; gradually add the strained apple, and beat till of the consistency of whipped cream. Heap upon a dish in pyramid form, and garnish with lady fingers.

—Apple Dumplings: These are quickly and easily prepared. Slice sour apples into a round pie dish, or pan, until rounded very full; then take one cupful of buttermilk, a tablespoonful of thick cream or other shortening, one teaspoonful of soda, slightly rounded, a little salt; stir in flour to make it quite thick but do not beat it. Stir lightly and spread it over the apples. Put a spoonful of water in the tin. Bake half an hour, not too brown. When they are removed from the oven spread a little butter over the crust.

THOROUGH CULTIVATION.

A Plan That Has Been Tested with Satisfactory Results.

The farmer is under a strong temptation to attempt to do too much. Every spring many farmers plant more ground than they can properly manure, and put in crops which they can not thoroughly cultivate. Every autumn these men have very light yields per acre, and feel that while they have tried to do a great deal they have really accomplished very little.

If these farmers would make a radical change in their methods, they would certainly secure more satisfactory returns. It pays better to do a small business in a thorough manner than to carry on a large one without the means for its successful prosecution.

In France, the land is held in small lots, and farm business is done on what, to the American, seems a very small scale. Yet the farmers of France are quite prosperous, as is demonstrated by the fact that they loan, in the aggregate, large sums of money to the Government. The recuperative power of France, manifested since the close of the war with Germany, has been the wonder of the civilized world. This power is largely due to the prosperity of the land-holders, and this is secured by the concentration of capital, fertilizers, and labor upon small areas of land.

If examples nearer home are desired, they are furnished by market gardens near all our large cities. These men work on small areas. They manure heavily and cultivate thoroughly. They obtain immense yields. There is no secret about their success. It is largely due to concentration. These men do not cultivate two acres if they only have labor and fertilizers enough for one. Wherever they attempt to cultivate, they are liberal with manure and unsparing with labor. With them this course is a necessity. Land is very costly, fertilizers are expensive, and the labor employed represents a large amount of cash. The circumstances of the farmers are very different. Land is abundant and comparatively cheap, his yards furnish a quantity of manure, and he does not have to pay his help as high wages as the gardener who is near a city. Yet the conditions of success in the production of large and profitable crops are the same in both cases. Whether it is close to a city or far out in the country, whether it is a farm or a garden, a little land well manured and thoroughly cultivated pays a great deal better than a large area which is poorly tilled and to which only half enough fertilizing matarial is applied.

In planning for active work, the farmer will do well to study concentration. It will be far better to keep half of a field in grass, if there is only manure enough for half of it, than to plow the whole and spread the fertilizer over the entire area. Such a method will save a good deal of useless labor, and will yield a much larger percentage of profit than can be secured by following the opposite course. The same rule applies to labor. It will not pay to plant a larger area than can be promptly and thoroughly cultivated.

The plan recommended in this article is not put forth as an experiment. It has been thoroughly tested and proved to be entirely satisfactory.—N. Y. Examiner.

WOMAN'S MENTAL STATUS.

Why Dr. Livermore Considers It Superior to That of Man.

Though we were to concede all that is claimed for difference in size of brain between the sexes, still in the home no one discovers any natural inferiority of girls to boys. As a rule, the girls in any community are quite as intelligent as the boys. If we pass from childhood to youth we still fail to discover any mental inferiority of young women to young men. When the two sexes are educated together the female performs her task with the same apparent ease as the male. Young women acquire languages as readily, comprehend abstruse problems as quickly, and are quite as likely to take prizes in mathematics and other studies as male students. In adult age we find the same intellectual equality of the sexes. And yet here we may find an excuse for any deficiency on the part of woman, by remembering that she has not had the same opportunity for mental development that man has enjoyed. The greatest variation of brain-weight is among civilized peoples, where women have never enjoyed equal advantages with men for mental culture, while among the lowest races there is but little, if any, variation in size of brain between the sexes, showing that education has had much to do in the intellectual development of man. Says Maudsley, who is authority on this subject: "Among Europeans the average weight of the brain is greater in educated than in uneducated persons." Now woman has never had equal opportunities with man for intellectual development. The universities and all the best educational institutions of the world have been closed to her, and all the weight of custom and prejudice have been brought to bear upon her, to make her repress all intellectual aspirations as foreign to her sphere of activity, which is popularly interpreted to mean domesticity. If "quality" of brain has no bearing on this question, as Professor Romanes maintains, why, then, should a 37-ounce brain in man involve idiocy, and the same result not follow in woman with a 37-ounce brain? If the brain of both sexes is the same in all respects, why should not idiocy follow in each with the same weight of brain? If the man becomes idiotic with 37 ounces of brain, as we are told, and the woman is in no danger of idiocy with that weight of brain, it is evident enough which has the inferior brain. If the 32-ounce female brain can do better intellectual work than the 37-ounce male brain (the point of idiocy) then the argument from the relative weight of brain falls, or proves the superiority of the female brain. If the 37-ounce male brain goes to wreck and ruin, while the 37-ounce female brain is sound and clear and capable of good mental work, it legitimately follows that the constituent properties of the two brains are in some respects different, or that the female brain is of superior quality, as many scientific writers teach. If both had precisely the same "quality" of brain, both would become idiotic with the same "quantity," viz., 37 ounces. It is because of this higher quality of the female brain that little girls have an excess of refined moral sense over boys, more natural refinement, sweeter natures, and diviner instincts. Of course there are exceptions to all rules, but, generally speaking, the finer qualities of the female nature are apparent in early girlhood, so that the instincts and perceptions in girls are of a higher order than in boys. Girls are more refined in their manners and habits of life and thought, and this indicates a higher degree of moral and spiritual sensibility. Words and actions show the quality of the soul, for out of the heart the mouth speaketh, and the speech betrays the quality of the heart. Woman, as a rule, has a better quality of thought and life than man.—Rev. D. P. Livermore, in Forum.

PORPOISES AT PLAY.

Playfulness and Agility of the Seemingly Lazy Creatures.

Mr. Colbeck, writing of his cruise upon the Black Sea, describes, in an entertaining manner, the antics of the porpoises as he watched them from the steamer's deck. The playfulness and agility of the porpoise in these seas were very conspicuous.

A shoal tumbling in the distance, to port or starboard, and sometimes far astern, would become aware of the presence of a vessel, and, skimming alongside with incredible speed, dart one over another, and finally reach the bows; then a marine game would begin, beautiful and exciting to behold. Turning from side to side, and sometimes completely over, their white bellies a silvery gleam, the porpoises would dart, now rising above the wave to take in a fresh stock of air, and then diving completely under the bows, and appearing on the other side, apparently as full of frolic as fish could be. With delicate precision they would regulate their speed to that of the vessel, allowing the vessel sometimes to touch the tips of their tails, and then, as if their joy was exuberant, too much to contain, dart away at five times the speed of the vessel, and come skimming back again to meet her. When the porpoise is seen breaking the water from a distance it has all the appearance of a very lazy creature. But when seen in clear seas, completely under water, the gracefulness and velocity of its motion, explained partly by the perfect curve of its body, either way, to the tapering nose and tail, can not be surpassed. It reminds one of the sweep of a gannet when it sights the prey.—Youth's Companion.

DRIED HUMAN HEADS.

A Singular Custom of Many South American Tribes.

In the National Museum are two shrunken heads, with nearly perfect features, long, glossy hair, and having the mouth closed by means of a long fringe of cords. There is a double-braided cord fastened to the vortex for suspension, and others hanging downward for the attachment of colored feathers.

There seems to be some confusion in literature about these heads, and I write this note partly to state what I have learned and partly to ask for light.

Dried heads are preserved by many South American tribes. Fletcher and Kidder ("Brazil," 473, illustrated) say:

"The Tamoyos dwelt formerly in the provinces of Rio Janeiro and Minas Geraes, but, being harassed by colonists, were pursuaded by the eloquence of Chief Jappy Assu to emigrate north. They migrated more than three thousand miles to the mouth of the Madeira. Their descendants are now between the Tapajoz and the Madeira, among the lakes and channels of the Tapinambas. They are now called the Mundrucus, the most warlike Indians in South America. They live in villages, in each of which there is a fortress where the men sleep at night. This building is adorned within by the dried heads of their enemies decked with feathers.

But the Jivaros, who dwell on the Napo river, in Ecuador, do more than dry the heads. They remove all the bones, and shrink the heads until they are no larger than a lady's fist, and are as hard and glossy as polished ebony.

There is an account which says that these people, when they have killed a brave enemy, cut off his head, pounded it with clubs until all the bones within were beaten to a jelly, then removed the bones and smoked the head until it shrunk to its present proportions. This has always seemed unreasonable, because the pounding would destroy the skin.

Mr. Charles H. Knight, an American citizen, went to the Napo country, 180 miles east from Quito, in 1871, and spent five years there in business. He procured one of these dried heads, which is now in the United States National Museum, from the Achualas, a band of Jivaros, through an old Indian who had seen the preparation. The heads thus treated are always trophies taken from a slain enemy. An incision is made quite through the skin around the neck, well down toward the shoulders. The skin is then drawn off over the head, just as one would do in flaying an animal, cuttings being made whenever muscular adhesion made it necessary.

The features are thus left intact. The skin is then soaked in an infusion of some kind of herb, which Mr. Knight did not procure. The second step consists in filling the skin with hot pebbles and sand, over and over, until it is quite shrunken and dry. The soaking in the decoction and the shrinking and drying are alternately practiced until the trophy is reduced to the desired proportions. The mouth is then sewed up, a cord is passed through the top of the head and the specimen is hung up in the smoke.—Science.

USE OF DISINFECTANTS.

Some Valuable Hints on the Subject for Housekeepers.

A disinfectant separates the odor into its original elements and makes new combinations, new substances, which are hurtless. Fresh burned lime, called unslacked or quick lime, is the most common disinfectant, dissolved in water until it is thin enough to be sprinkled or used with a brush.

Copperas, called green vitriol or sulphate of iron, is better than lime; a pound, costing half a dime, dissolved in four gallons of boiling water, and thrown into a privy or sink, will remove the odor in ten minutes, to be repeated two or three times a month in warm weather, or as often as any odor is perceptible.

Chloride of lime, sprinkled over damp places, in yards, cellars, etc., cleanses and purifies, but it has an odor of its own, and is supposed by some to be hurtful.

A layer of fresh-burned charcoal in powder, two or three inches in depth, over a heap of decaying offal, absorbs the odor, decomposes it and burns it up.

If this can not be had, a layer of fresh earth, six inches deep, confines the odor of decaying matters, but does not destroy them, and is good for temporary use until better substances can be obtained.

The manganates of soda or potash, dissolved in warm water, are among the best deodorizers and disinfectants.

To disinfect linen, or washing apparel, soak it in a mixture of one ounce of chloride of lime in a gallon of water.

Woolens, beddings, etc., which can not be washed are best disinfected by exposure for three or four hours in a chamber heated to two hundred degrees.

To disinfect rooms, wash the ceilings and walls with quicklime water, and scrub the woodwork with brush, soap, and hot water, and then wash with two ounces of chloride of lime dissolved in a gallon of water.

Glass and stone-ware after being scrubbed with sand and soap are deprived of all ill odor by shaking dry charcoal powder in them.—Chicago Globe.

R. R. and Sterling on the U. P. R'y, at greatly reduced rates. This will afford homeseekers, land buyers and others an excellent opportunity for the inspection of the Government Lands and fertile country of central, northwestern and southwestern Nebraska, northwestern Kansas and northeastern Colorado, reached by the new extensions of the Burlington & Missouri River R. R. in Nebraska. Also, to visit the rich agricultural districts of Dakota and Minnesota reached by the Burlington Route. A great reduction in rates will also be made to Texas, New Mexico, Tennessee, Mississippi, Alabama, Louisiana and Arkansas points on May 8th and 22d, and June 5th, 1888. Tickets good for 30 days to Nebraska, Kansas, Colorado, Minnesota and Dakota points; and to all other States mentioned, 60 days. Liberal stop-over privileges will be accorded passengers beyond terminal points of this line. For tickets, general or further information regarding the above, apply to any ticket agent of its own or connecting lines, or address, PAUL MORTON, General Passenger and Ticket Agent, C. B. & Q. R. Something Worth Reading.

OF INTEREST

TO EVERYBODY.

THALIA THEATRE, New York.

I have been a sufferer from nervousness and nervous prostration for years, and have tried many things, but without the least good. Hearing so much about Dr. Greene's Nervura Nerve Tonic from my friends and others whom it cured, I at last decided to take it. Its effects are really almost magical, for it immediately takes away that nervous, restless and weak feeling or sense of exhaustion, and restores one to a perfect condition of health. It is a great boon and a wonderful blessing to nervous people. LUCIE WERNER.

This wonderful remedy, whose praise is upon everybody's lips, must be the most marvelous in its curative powers of any remedy ever discovered. Wheaar every day of remarkable cures of nervousness, nervous weakness, exhaustion, paralysis or other nervous diseases effected by this great nerve tonic and restorative. Here a person rescued from the grave, as was Mrs. Annie Donovan, of Attawugan, Conn.; there a case saved from that terrible disease, insanity, as was Mr. W. C. Miles, of 6 Bue Hill Avenue, Boston, Mass.; again, cures of paralysis of years' standing, like that of Mr. Alexander Hom, of the Marine Asylum, Philadelphia, who had not been able to walk before for years; or restoration from the severest neuralgia and rheumatism, like in case of Mr. James Bown, of 27 Market Street, New York City. Cures of sleeplessness, with nervous and physical exhaustion, are very frequent, the wonderful cure of Mrs. W. F. Abbe, of 19 Affleck Street, Hartford, Conn., being only one among thousands. Altogether, the remarkable powers of DR. GREENE'S NERVURA NERVE TONIC in curing all forms of nervous diseases like the above and restoring to health sufferers from nervous affections have demonstrated it to be a remedy of wonderful powers and at times of almost miraculous effects in curing disease.

If you are weak, tired, nervous and exhausted, with no ambition to work or do any thing, do not fail to use this marvelous remedy, for it will restore your strength, vigor and energies. It will remove all nervousness and nervous weakness. If you are sleepless, restless and wakeful nights its use will soothe, calm and quiet the nerves and give you sound, natural and refreshing sleep. If you wake tired mornings, with dull head, bad taste in the mouth, no appetite and general dispirited feeling, it will clear your head, give you an appetite, banish that tired feeling and afford you renewed life. It is the best remedy in the world and cures perfectly and completely spring debility, malaria, nervous debility, nervous and physical exhaustion from overwork, strain upon the nerves, or other cause, depression of the mind, neuralgia, paralysis, numbness, trembling, nervous and sick headaches, pain in back and side, hot flashes, palpitation and heart disease, hysteria, dyspepsia, indigestion, opium or chloral habit, etc. It is purely vegetable, and therefore harmless.

Use this remedy and you will be amazed at its wonderful toning, strengthening and invigorating effects upon both nerves and body. It is for sale by all druggists at $1 per bottle. If your druggist does not have it, he will get it for you. The discoverer of this great nerve cure is DR. GREENE, of 35 West 14th Street, New York, and he may be consulted free of charge, personally or by letter.

Spring Medicine

At no other season does the human system so much need the aid of a reliable medicine like Hood's Sarsaparilla, as now. The impoverished condition of the blood, the weakening effects of the long cold winter, the lost appetite, and that tired feeling, all make a good spring medicine absolutely necessary. Hood's Sarsaparilla is peculiarly adapted for this purpose, and increases in popularity every year.

Hood's Sarsaparilla

Is carefully prepared from Sarsaparilla, Dandelion, Mandrake, Dock, Pipsissewa, Juniper Berries, and other well-known vegetable remedies, in such a peculiar manner as to derive the full medicinal value of each. It will cure, when in the power of medicine, scrofula, salt rheum, sores, boils, pimples, all humors, dyspepsia, biliousness, sick headache, indigestion, general debility, catarrh, rheumatism, kidney and liver complaints.

Silk and Satin Ribbons FREE!

LADIES, THIS IS FOR YOU.

A rare gift for the ladies. Save much money and secure the best! Every lady knows and appreciates, the privilege of having a few remnants of ribbon, handy for the thousand and one tasty and useful purposes for which such goods are used, and which they, the ladies, owe to such advantages. To purchase what is wanted at the usual prices such goods are sold for, would create a large bill of expense, and therefore debars a great many from indulging their tastes in this direction. Realizing that there were thousands upon thousands of remnants of ribbons among the large importing houses of America which they would be willing to dispose of in bulk, for a small fraction of their cost, to any one capable of purchasing largely, we instituted a search, resulting in our obtaining the entire stock of Silk and Satin Ribbon Remnants of several of the largest of these houses, who imported the finest goods. These goods may be depended upon as superior to anything to be found, except in the very best stores of America. Yet they are given away free; nothing like it ever known. A grand benefit for all the ladies; beautiful, elegant, choice goods absolutely free. We have expended thousands of dollars in this direction, and can offer an immensely, varied, and most complete assortment of ribbons, in every conceivable shade and width, and all of excellent quality, adapted for neck-wear, bonnet strings, hat trimmings, bows, scarfs, dress trimmings, silk quilt work, etc., etc. Some of these remnants range three yards and upwards in length. Though remnants, all the patterns are new and late styles, and may be depended on as beautiful, refined, fashionable and elegant. How to get a box containing a Complete Assortment of these elegant ribbons Free. The Practical Housekeeper and Ladies' Fireside Companion, published monthly by acknowledged, by those competent to judge, to be the best periodical of the kind in the world. Very large and handsomely illustrated; regular price 75 cts. per year; send 35 cents and we will send it to you for a trial year, and will also send free a box of the ribbons; 2 subscriptions and 2 boxes, 65 cts.; 4 subscriptions and 4 boxes, $1. One-cent postage stamps may be sent for less than $1. Get 3 friends to join you thereby getting 4 subscriptions and 4 boxes for only $1; can do it in a few minutes. The above offer is based on this fact—those who read the periodical referred to, for one year, want it thereafter, and pay us the full price for it; it is in after years, and not now, that we make money. We make this great offer in order to at once secure 250,000 new subscribers, who, not now, but next year, and in years thereafter, shall reward us with a profit, because the majority of them will wish to renew their subscription, and will do so. The money required is but a small fraction of the price you would have to pay at any store for a much smaller assortment of ribbons. Best bargain ever known; you will not fully appreciate it until after you see all. Safe delivery guaranteed. Money refunded to any one not perfectly satisfied. Better cut this out, or send at once, for probably it won't appear again. Address, H. HALLETT & CO., PUBLISHERS, PORTLAND, MAINE.

SATURDAY, MAY 12, 1888.

The Republican Convention for the Sixth Congressional District of Maryland met in Cumberland Wednesday last at 11 o'clock A. M. Mr. Peter Lugenbeel, of Frederick county was Chairman and Mr. F. B. Noyes, of Montgomery, Secretary. Messrs. George L. Wellington, of Allegany, and Benjamin Miller, of Montgomery, were elected delegates to Chicago, and Messrs. F. B. Noyes, of Montgomery, and J. F. Wheaton, of Washington, alternates. Daniel Chisholm of Garrett was elected elector by acclamation.

Mr. McComas on the Tariff.

WASHINGTON, May 2.—Representative McComas made a strong argument to-day in opposition to the Mills Tariff bill. He spoke forcibly and to the point, showing very clearly the damage that would accrue to the manufacturing industries of this country if the measure under discussion should pass. The House was comparatively deserted when he began, but the interest of his address and the sharp passages between him and Roggers and Hemphill attracted general attention, and the members crowded around and applauded the bright sallies and clever repartee of the Marylander. The admission which he wrung from General Hooks that not a Democrat had said or would say a thing for protection, was considered one of the most significant incidents of the tariff debate. Mr. McComas was very frequently applauded and warmly congratulated on his speech.

Mr. McComas began his address as follows: "If any article of common use which our farmers cannot profitably grow, or our miners or workmen produce, is not already on the free list, I will vote to put it on. If any duty on any home product be higher than the conceded higher wages rate of my country I will vote to reduce it to the protective level, because I believe the tariff is simply a question of wages. If it be clear that any clause fosters only monopoly I will vote to strike it out. If you frame a revenue reduction bill with an eye single to the relief of the treasury and the people from a growing surplus I will vote with you. If you, who are the majority, would suffer the Republican minority to deal for one day only with the problem of the surplus I believe we would in that single day reduce our annual revenues seventy millions of dollars by repealing the internal revenue tax on tobacco, a burden on the farms in sixteen hundred counties and fifteen States, by repealing the internal revenue tax on alcohol used in the arts, manufacturing medicines and drugs, and by reducing the tariff on sugar to a minimum yielding revenue, enough to pay bounties to home producers of sugar from cane, sorghum, corn and beets. The reduction of the surplus is the pretext, but not the motive of this bill.

He then discussed the Mills bill, as it injured the farmers, saying that more than one-third of the free list was the products of lumbermen, quarrymen, farmers and miners.

He insisted the problem to-day was not cheapness, but employment, and contrasted home trade and foreign trade, and contended that for us the market of the world was a delusion under free trade with all Europe protectionists. And proceeded to say: "It amazes me to hear Mr. Mills, who hails from Texas, claim that the tariff has nothing to do with wages, because wages are higher in some States than in others. The tariff wrought its best fruit in New England, and the enterprising North and West. Wages are lower in Arkansas and Louisiana and South Carolina, because slavery condemned the black and poor white people to ignorance, and after the war, under the inherited system, it was too long disgraceful to labor.

"The wages of her men and women are not much more than half the wages paid in New England. It is amazing to hear representatives from the Southern States unite to denounce the tariff when the South most needs protection. New England and Pennsylvania, rich with the fruits of a general system of manufactures, may well smile at the folly of these Southern leaders blinded by prejudice. The war cry of the old South was slave labor and free trade. Slavery has gone, but these leaders of the old South here on the floor fight for the English alliance and free trade once more. Free trade is still the dream of the old South, whose corner-stone was the plantation idea, wide lands, an accomplished few enriched by the ignorant many toiling for bare subsistence. The old South whose old master class can forget, with magnanimity, the bitterness of the war, but cannot forgive the enfranchisement of their slaves. The old South, which appalled at the rule of the ignorant majority, resorts in turn to violence or fraud, convinced that if ever the small white minority yields at the ballot box to the growing black majority, then will be the doom in the cotton States of public and private rights. The old South, which, bewildered by the gravest problem of civilization, blindly keeps solid the black vote by outside pressure, by the denial of full citizenship, which excuses the fraudulent denial of a fair poll or count in communities where there is a black majority by reason of color, ignorance and poverty; convinced that fraud affords the only escape from the supremacy of the poor and ignorant mass. The old South, which passionately forbids massed black ignorance to be counted against its own intelligent white minority, but with shameless inconsistency believes it right to count this uncounted black vote wherever the South needs an offset to as many intelligent workingmen's votes actually cast in the North and West, believes it right to thus quadruple the power of the white minority of the cotton States at an election for President and Congress. This old South, whose old Confederate leaders on this floor now seek by free trade and the English alliance to readjust the old plantation idea to raw products of mines and fields with cheap peasant labor.

"There is hope in the new South with her exultation in her new-found treasures, her inexhaustible mines of coal and iron, her mountains of iron and salt, her copper, lead, her granite, her fire clay, her cement and lime rock, all imperiled by this bill. The new South, with its nascent industrial fire, its gleams of wealth through whirling spindles and looms and molten glass.

"The new South, with its growing impatience with the plantation idea, the growing belief that the Northern township system will not sustain 'Southern booms.' The new South, by slow degrees learning that the healthful growth of Southern towns and cities must be grounded upon the education of the whole mass of the people, by the free consent of all under a local self-government with equal civil rights as citizens. The new South, conscious of the value of its free black labor, beginning dimly to see that this labor, robbed of its dues for two centuries, must be educated if the South would rival the Northern labor, if it wants the factory to raise the value of the farms, and around the shops to grow a village.

"The new South, which believes it must lift its labor above the level of Europe, and that, like the North, it must eventually pay its skilled workers in metal, glass, wool and cotton fifty per cent. more than the old world, if it would transform its towns into cities and diffuse prosperity over countless small farms.

"Upon this new South, thrilling with mighty enterprises, developing her mines, founding her cities, Mr. Cleveland's message against a protective tariff fell like some unwelcome bell knelling a departed friend. This cry of free raw materials is the device whereby to drive the new South back to free trade before the transformation weds her to the tariff which made New England great. John Randolph said he would go a mile out of his way to kick a sheep. He hated the animal which made the farmers protectionists. Like another Tannhauser, the new South has just broken away from the toils of slavery. It has awakened to the industries of the earth, just when it is exploring the seams of earth to extract its ores, just as it stands by the mouths of its new made coal pits, the President's message and Mills' bill summon the new South again to slumber, that the vines may cumber the forests, that bats and owls may inhabit the shafts of deserted mines, that spiders may weave their webs over the mouths of the coal pits, that the grass may grow again in the village streets. Like another Tannhauser, this last cry will break the illusion of free trade that so long has blinded the South. Instead of Cleveland'r curfew, we will set the morning school bells ringing in the South. Coming from seven old slave States, I find on this side of the House seventeen friends of the American industrial system.

"These three things affright the old Bourbon Regime—organized labor, the Blair bill and a protective tariff. Organized labor, which, in the freer lands, by manifold endeavors through blunder and defeat, still is always groping upward toward the light, and destined, under liberty and law, to grandly help the uplifting of all mankind in this favored land; organized labor, so blindly battled with by the leaders of the old South on this floor, will yet prevail, as in this modern world the strength of numbers ever ultimately prevails. If these free trade leaders are statesmen, they should beware lest the black labor of the South, robbed of two centuries of education, self-help, standing with eyes blinded, may not take hold of the middle pillars of our house while our Philistines are making merry with our Southern people, and pull down our house upon us to avenge its two eyes.

"The clamor of the Southern people, the stern protest from the mines and the towns, disconcerted the plan to put coal and iron ore on the free list, but these free traders were not to be foiled. Anthracite coal is on the free list and bituminous coal is not mentioned. They have put on the free list 'all mineral substances in a crude state and metals unwrought not specially enumerated or provided for.' They do not specifically enumerate bituminous coal, which is a mineral substance in a crude state, nor iron which is metal unwrought, and the last section of the Mills bill repeals all laws or parts of laws in conflict herewith. The simple device of omitting to specify bituminous coal repealing the law which did specify it and putting iron on the free list as 'mineral substance in a crude state,' will not long be hidden from the new South conceived for its coal and iron.

"I now charge that since this bill was introduced her our free trade treasury chiefs have by a mere ruling repealed the tariff law which protected coal. For a hundred years since George Washington signed the first tariff act, bituminous and semi-bituminous coal of commerce have been protected. All the semi-bituminous coal of the Atlantic slope, the coal of Maryland, Virginia, West Virginia, mud of the coal of Pennsylvania, has been protected. Suddenly, in March, our Secretary declared that all coal with less than 20 per cent. of volatile combustible matter is anthracite, and therefore free For the first time the Cumberland coal of my own State and the Pocahontas coal of Virginia are declared to be anthracite by the Treasury, though still called semi-bituminous by all mankind. The bituminous coal of Swansea, Wales, and the bituminous coal of Canada is already coming into our ports, and will not be shipped unless this House shall declare that a free trade Secretary cannot legislate and thus enlarge the free list at will, to give the railroads, the gas and steamship monopolies free trade in coal before the Mills bill has passed. And I would vote to impeach the Secretary of the Treasury who has dared to usurp the functions of Congress, who has boldly put bituminous coal on the free list in defiance of the law.

"I have listened to the lamentations of the other side, who forgot that for eleven years they have controlled this House, and for three years past ruled this country. If the working people of my country can be diverted by these querulous complaints from the greatness of the American protective system and the splendor of its developement, as fashioned by the National Republican party during the recent twenty-five years, then, indeed, are our people 'like the people,' to borrow from an old philosopher, 'who, when they went to Olympia, could only perceive that they were scorched by the sun, and pressed by the crowd, and wetted by the rain, and that life full of disagreeable and troublesome things, and so they almost forgot the great colossus of ivory and gold, Phidias' statue of Zeus, which they had come to see, and which stood in all its glory and power before their perturbed and foolish vision.'

"I believe rather that the vast majority of our people will, with our formest statesmen, again declare for "that policy which inspires labor with hope and crowns it with dignity; which gives safety to capital and protects its increase; which secures political power to every citizen; culture and comfort to every home."

"Gentlemen say this is not an issue between free trade and protection. I take my watch in my hand, and will give a half minute to any member on the other side of the House who will cite one sentence from any one of the supporters of the Mills bill in favor of a tariff to protect American labor."

Mr. Hooker—The gentlemen has not heard, and will not hear, any Democrat utter a sentence in favor of protection.

After Mr. McCamas had been contrasting the old South with another new South, Mr. Rogers, of Arkansas, retorted that the gentleman still had his head in the cupboard.

Mr. McComas—The member from Arkansas has but little head to put in a cupboard, since, in a speech here, he proclaimed that he represents a district which had more convictions of its innabitants for theft, murder, rape and arson than any other State in the Union. I am proud to represent a district of law-abiding peaceful people. [Applause.]

Mr. Hemphill—Was the gentleman ever in the South?

Mr. McComas—Yes. I was born in the South, expect to live and die in the South, and represent a Southern district on this floor.

Mr. Hemphill — The gentleman was never in South Carolina.

Mr. McComas—No; but I would like to go there, to see how one hundred per cent. duty on rice retained there in this bill prospers South Carolina. And I would be especially glad to go there on election day, to see how, with eight ballot boxes, you delude the illiterate black majority. [Applause.]

Mr. Hemphill — The gentleman's eloquence about the South is only equaled by his ignorance. His State does not belong to the South.

Mr. McComas—The gentleman is ignorant of the needs of the South, as he is of the history of his State. In 1861 commissioners from South Carolina appealed to Maryland as a Southern State to come and go with South Carolina on the road to secession, bankruptcy and ruin. Perhaps because Maryland sent 46,000 soldiers to follow yonder flag over the Speaker's chair, with the battle cry of protection to white labor and freedom to slave labor, against South Carolina's cry for free trade and slave laborers, the gentleman has put Maryland further north. [Great applause.] I rejoice that on this side of the house sit seventeen friends of the new South and her industrial interests, who will vote against the Mills bill, and they are all natives of the States they represented—aye, natives, and the peers on this floor, as at home, of any member on that side of the House from the South. And these seventeen men will not, like you, be recreant to their industries, the mines, the forests and mills of the new South. [Applause.]

OUR WASHINGTON LETTER.

(From our Regular Correspondent.)

WASHINGTON, May 7th, 1888.—Senator Ingalls has been tendered a public reception by the Republican National League of this city. It is in recognition of the service to the Republican party which he performed last Tuesday in the Senate Chamber by showing up the hypocrisy of such copperheads as Senator Voorhees, of Indiana, who, during the rebellion devoted all their energies to putting obstacles in the way of the Government.

So well did the Kansas Senator do his work that Mr. Voorhees completely disgraced himself in the eyes of all respectable people by using language unbecoming a gentleman, such as "liar, scoundrel, dirty dog," &c. Truth very often hurts, but Senator Ingalls has the courage to tell it when occasion demands it, no matter who is hit thereby.

A delegation representing the maimed Soldier's League was before the House Committee on Pensions Friday to urge the early consideration of the bill making an increase in the pensions now paid to persons who lost an eye, arm or leg in the service. Another delegation favored the per diem pension bill.

The Senate committee on Labor have made a favorable report on the House bill to prohibit the employment of alien labor on public works.

The House was the scene of a disgraceful squabble on Saturday last. Mr. Woodburn had just finished his tariff sheech in which he taxed the Democrats with being members of the Cobden club, and stated that the resolution introduced in the interest of American citizens confined in British jails had been suppressed by Mr. Hewitt in the Forty-eighth Congress, and that Mr. Hewitt had gone to the British Minister and apologized for the resolution. When Mr. Woodburn concluded, Mr. Bryce, of New York, got up and said the statement was false. This caused some excitement and brought a dozen Republican members to their feet, and every one of them re-affirmed Mr. Woodburn's statement, Mr. Brumm of Pennsylvania, the author of the resolution referred to, reasserted Mr. Woodburn's statement and added that Mr. Bryce uttered a falsehood if he denied it. Then Messrs. Brumm and Bryce advanced towards each other in a threatening manner, each giving the other the lie direct, while the Chairman had difficulty in securing order.

Two such scenes as this in one week in our National Legislature is entirely beyond all question. If the first had not occurred in the Senate in the case of Mr. Voorhees, the chances are that this would not have taken place in the House, Our lower House of lawmakers is much too easily infected by the example of the upper for the latter to be careless regarding parliamentary rules.

Senator Stewart has introduced a bill to carry out the provisions of the Chinese treaty.

The nomination of Melville Weston Fuller, of Chicago, as Chief Justice has been very well received by the Republicans, but as much cannot be truthfully said of the Democrats. Mr. Fuller was born and educated in Maine, but has been a resident of Chicago for about 30 years. He is in no sense a man of national reputation, but all that is known of him is good. It is said that both the Republican Senators from Illinois are heartily in favor of Mr. Fuller. He has not yet accepted, but he will.

Two new pension bills were introduced last week, one by Mr. Edmunds in the Senate, to increase the pensions paid persons who contracted heart disease in the service, and one by Mr. Burrows in the House, to pension all persons who served 90 days or longer in the army or navy at the rate of one cent per month for each day of actual service.

Representative McKinley, of Ohio, is understood to be at work on a tariff bill which will represent the views of the Republicans. It will be offered as a substitute for the Mills tariff bill.

We Rule the World.

LONDON, April 29.—The Economist says: We expect to hear little of American treasury accumulations if the American government maintains the present rate of purchasing bonds.

There will be difficulty, however, which is likely to increase, as the supply of bonds diminish. It is easy to skin the market of bonds loosely held, but it is difficult to reach those held for investment, which will only be surrendered on distinctly advantageous terms.

Commenting on the Presidential election in America, the Economist says: "Vast business, financial and railway schemes hang upon the result of the election. Even English business waits. Europe has hardly realized that the growth of America has advanced the President's position to one of immense power and responsibility, so that it is now one of the first importance on earth. American diplomacy is guided by the President's decisions, and affects all countries, The President is now revolving the fisheries question with England, the Sami question with Germany, the emigration question with China, and the consular rights question with Morocco. He may next week decide whether America shall produce financial ruin in Paris, and shake the French Republic by its treatment of De Lessep's Panama canal.

The market was quiet and prices firm under influence of news of the German Emperor's improved condition and absence of any further developement of the Boulanger movement. There was a strong demand for American railroad securities, both for the home and foreign account. A comparatively small amount of American stocks and bonds is now held in Europe, but a large amount of European capital would be attracted to American investments on perceiving satisfactory indication of an improvement in American trade, which would be reflected in an advance in the value of railroad securities.

Bloomington's Boom.

The Piedmont Herald's Bloomington correspondent gives the following additional facts regarding the boom at that place: "The faintest zephyr of a boom noted in a former letter has increased to a very stiff breeze. Col. Crawford is still pushing the work of developing the small vein coal with all the energy and vim that characterizes him as a first-class, thoroughgoing business gentleman. Messrs. Barrick and Ellwood have been employed as miners, and through their exertions the mine is now about 100 feet from the mouth, the red coal is fast disappearing, and about 4 feet of solid black coal presenting. Men have also been put to work in the old mine, the Empire proper, to clear it of faces, etc., which accumulated since it was last worked, some years ago. The outlook is entirely satisfactory to the gentlemen who have the matter in hand, and they do not hesitate to express the opinion, that the investment has turned out more valuable than they anticipated. The Empire Mill, under the same management, has been placed in thorough and complete repair, and is said to be in a better condition now than for many years past. The company own some two million feet of No. 1 oak timber, and are only waiting for a satisfactory adjustment of some perliminary arrangements before they start to saw.

Henry J. Spencer Sentenced to Death.

CUMBERLAND, MD., May 8,—Henry J. Spencer, convicted at the October term of the Circuit Court of murder in the first degree in shooting W. Scott Dawson at Rawlings July 28, 1887, was sentenced to death by Judge Hoffman to-day. Spencer went to Dawson's house, called him out and, after a few minutes' talk, shot him, death resulting immediately. Spencer always admitted the shooting, and on several occasions detailed just how it was done. He gives as a motives the desire for revenge for a criminal assault made by Dawson over eight years ago upon his cousin, Rachel Dawson, who afterwards became Spencer's wife, and who died four years ago.

Leg Broken.

Thomas O'Boyle, an unmarried man about 30 years of age, residing with his brother in Deer Park, and employed on the B. & O. R. R., had his left leg broken Friday of last week, by being struck by a cross-tie which fell from a car that was being loaded, It was a compound fracture and the bones were forced out through the flesh. Drs. H. W. McComas, of Oakland, and J. W. Laughlin, of Deer Park, reduced the fracture, and the patient is now doing well.

D. I. TOTTEN,
JAS. A. BROWN,

Wilson's Mills, W. Va.

MAY 5th, 1888.

MR. H. H. VAN METER—Dear Sir: Yours in this week's REPUBLICAN is before me, and furnishes another example of the adage that it is the unexpected that happens.

You seem to possess all the attributes of a first-class fault-finder, with scant inclination to praise, even where credit is due.

It certainly was foreign to my purpose or expectation to be drawn into a controversy on the Local Option question, especially with so staunch a friend of the measure as you profess to be; and the astonishing part of it is, that I, who did all in my power to protect the law in question, should be the recipient of your displeasure, while others, in equally responsible positions, using their influence in the opposite direction, go scot free.

Gratitude has, not inaptly, been defined as a sense of favors—expected.

Now the truth of the matter is, I was left alone, for a long time, in a most trying and difficult situation, without a word of council or encouragement from the Local Option champions of the county, and when I finally succeeded in saving the law, you published your circular, sending it broadcast over the county, claiming for yourself and the dear ones who laboriously signed the paper, praises and honors, but for me who stood in the breach, nothing but a cold-blooded reprimand.

My position on the temperance question is too well understood to be successfully misrepresented by one so recently coming into the county.

The liquor people all know that I am no friend to their business, and with this knowledge in full view they have acted.

I believe the saloon is an unmitigated, unqualified curse, that blights and degrades, and demoralizes wherever its influence extends; and I have taken no pains to conceal this opinion; but there are other men, perhaps, as worthy and as intelligent as myself, who think differently, and I can differ with a man's honest opinions without blackguarding or misrepresenting him before the public.

When you mailed me your hallelujah circular, you wrote me at the same time that you knew I could explain my position satisfactorily. I therefore concluded that your strictures, though personal to an unseemly degree, was not really meant for me, and had a mind to pass it by unnoticed; but now, when you follow it up with an open letter, with hints and inuendoes which you know to be dishonest, and misleading, it is time to speak out in plain English.

In my capacity as delegate from my county, I have never forgotten that I was servant, and not master; that I was to represent the will of the people, and not my own will. Whatever the people of the county or a majority of them desired, that I felt under obligation to advocate.

When Mr. Friend introduced his bill to repeal the Local Option Law for Garrett county, there had been a number of petitions forwarded to him containing, I believe, some 600 or 700 names.

His bill not only repealed the present law, but it went back and repealed every vestige of legislation that had ever been enacted for Garrett county since its organization, on the liquor question. The provisions requiring liquor dealers to be recommended by twelve freeholders, to bond, and making them responsible, &c., were all swept away. The present law was to be repealed, and the sale of liquor under the State law was authorized after the first of May, 1888. The bill was to be voted on at the general election this fall, and, if adopted, was to go into effect the first of May, 1889.

Realizing the gravity of the situation, I wrote home explaining the character of the bill, and saying I should need all the moral support they could send me. The Local Option people had not, as yet, shown any sign of action. One of the best and most sensible temperance men of the county wrote me that a great many Local Option people refused to sign petitions, as they considered the question settled at the special election held for that purpose, and it looked for a time as though I was to be left alone, to my own devices, entirely unsupported by any temperance sentiment from the county.

Under the then existing circumstances, I had very little hope of being able to prevent the pasage of the bill, and accordingly did what seemed the only thing possible, which was to so amend it as to eliminate some of its most objectionable features.

One of my amendments provided that the present law should remain in force until the bill was voted on. Another restored some of the repealed restrictions, and provided that the fee for a license should be $500 if for Oakland or Deer Park, and $300 if for any other place in the county. This was extra of the State license and was to be paid over to the school commissioners of the county.

But, stimulated, allow me to presume, by my "appeal for moral support, the temperance people began to perceive that they had a duty to perform in the premises, and I began to receive letters from different sections of the county every day, showing that after the efforts of the liquor people had subsided, the temperance cause had gathered itself up, and with a rush and roar, had rolled across the county like a great tidal wave, and the report came in that over a thousand signatures had been obtained, and only for the want of time it looked as though as many more might easily have been secured. Mr. C. S. Otto wrote that with another day he could have gotten a hundred more names. Hon. Geo. L. Michaels wrote that he could obtain 75 signatures in his section, only it was so near the end of the session it seemed useless.

This began to look like public sentiment was becoming aroused in the county, but too late! The bill had passed the House, and had gone to the Senate where it would encounter no opposition.

But by some means, and for some purpose, the bill was amended in the Senate and came back with two amendments; one of which was adopted, and the other rejected.

I was informed also that several hundred dollars had been raised by the liquor men in the county to secure the repeal of the Local Option law, and began to canvass the sentiment of the House more thoroughly, and found that the bill as amended could be defeatd, which accordingly was done as stated in my dispatch.

The letter I sent you on the 3d was a private dispatch written hurriedly in the confusion of packing up to leave a place of which I had grown heartily tired. But it was not the publication of the letter to which I so much objected, but the unfriendly comments which accompanied it.

Now, a word in reguard to my supposed tardiness in presenting the petitions and I have done.

The first intimation I had of any petitions being sent me, was the presentation by messenger of a special delivery package just about the time the House was to be called on the last day of the session. I was compelled to use the time of prayer and also of the roll call, putting the proper endorsements on the petitions, as I knew they would be first in order and it would be difficult to get the rules suspended at that stage of the session.

You will observe there was not much neglect or tardiness here, as within 25 minutes after they arrived in the mail the petitions had become the property of the house.

When I had time I read your letter directing attention to the registered package forwarded some days before and without a minutes hesitation or delay I went to the postoffice and inquired for them and also why I had not been notified. The postmaster said he had sent me the notice which some how escaped me.

Finally as the "reasons" of my absence from Annapolis at the time the first petitions went, is "but known to myself"—though not unknown to you—and as it is not especially or particularly anybody's business, I pass it by without further comment.

And now, having explained the situation as I see it and understand it, and having no inclination to bother or be bother any further about it, "Let us have peace."

Yours truly,
GEO. W. WILSON.

To repeal section two of sub-chapter two and sections one and eight of sub-chapter four and section seven of sub-chapter eleven of an act passed at January Session, eighteen hundred and seventy-two, chapter three hundred and seventy-seven entitled an act to repeal an act passed at January Session eighteen hundred and seventy entitled an act to repeal an act passed at January Session eighteen hundred and sixty-eight entitled "Public Education" providing a general system of free Public Schools for the State of Maryland so far as said sections apply to Garrett county and to repeal all laws inconsistent with the provisions of this act and to enact the following sections in lieu thereof so far as they apply to Garrett county, and to provide for the appointment of School Commissioners for Garrett county.

SECTION 1. Be it enacted by the General Assembly of Maryland, That section two of sub-chapter two, sections one and eight of sub-chapter four and section seven of sub-chapter eleven of an act passed at January Session eighteen hundred and seventy-two chapter three hundred and seventy-seven entitled an act to repeal an act passed at January Session eighteen hundred and seventy entitled an act to repeal an act passed at January Session eighteen hundred and sixty-eight entitled "Public Education" providing a general system of free Public Schools for the State of Maryland, be and the same are hereby repealed so far as said sections apply to Garrett county, and that the following sections be enacted in lieu thereof so far as said sections apply to Garrett county.

SEC. 2. And be it enacted, That the Governor shall by and with the advice and consent of the Senate at each regular session of the General Assembly appoint three competent persons, residents of Garrett county who shall continue in office for two years from the time of their appointment and until their successors are appointed and qualified who shall be designated "School Commissioners" and who shall when organized be and constitute the Board of County School Commissioners for Garrett county, and shall have control of all educational matters affecting said county.

SEC. 3. And be it enacted, That the School Commissioners appointed under the preceding section shall meet in Oakland for organization on the first Monday in July next succeeding their appointment or as soon thereafter as may be, and elect a person not a member of the Board who shall serve as Secretary, Treasurer and Examiner, and notice of such election signed by the President of the Board shall be transmitted to the Comptroller of the State Treasury. The Board shall meet whenever the School interests of the county require a meeting and shall receive for their services when occupied by the duties of their office, the sum of three dollars per day; provided that no School Commissioner in said county shall be paid for his services more than one hundred dollars in any one year.

SEC. 4. And be it enacted, That in case a vacancy shall occur in the office of School Commissioners of said county by resignation death, removal from the county or otherwise the Governor shall appoint a competent person to fill the vacancy during the remainder of the unexpired time.

SEC. 5. And be it enacted, That the Secretary, Treasurer and Examiner appointed under the provisions of this act shall perform all the duties required of him by law and shall receive such compensation as the Board of County School Commissioners shall direct not to exceed the sum of eight hundred dollars in any year.

SEC. 6. And be it enacted, That the Board of County School Commissioners and the Secretary, Treasurer and Examiner who shall be in office in Garrett county on the last day day of June in the year eighteen hundred and eighty-eight, shall turn over to the School Commissioners and the Secretary, Treasurer and Examiner appointed under the provisions of this act, immediately after they organize and qualify according to law, all books, papers, money, effects, goods, chattels and property belonging to the Board of County School Commissioners of Garrett county under existing laws.

SEC. 7. And be it enacted, That all acts and parts of acts inconsistent with the provisions of this act are hereby repealed so far as the same applies to Garrett county, and that the School Commissioners of said county be governed by the Public General School Laws of the State, except so far as said laws are modified by this act.

SEC. 8. And be it enacted, That this act shall take effect from the date of its passage.

Approved March 7th, 1888.

I hereby certify the foregoing to be a correct copy of an act of the General Assembly of Maryland passed at January Session 1888.

TWILIGHT THOUGHTS.

There are so many days! We scarce can bear
The ceaseless, dreary round of care and pain;
There is so much we lose, and can not keep,
And it is hard to smile when we would weep.
The hours are often dark with cloud and rain.
We find at eve our hearts are weary,
There are so many days.

There are so many months! Swift o'er the waves
Of life's great changeful sea they countless creep.
Whether we laugh and sing, or toil and pray.
The nights are long from June to the next May.
We clasp their mem'ries in our restless sleep.
'Tis sad to find our hopes are fading,
There are so many months.

There are so many years! Ah, yes, they seem
Each time an echo of the one before.
We strew our daisies, white and gold, in waves
Of sunny glory, over new-made graves.
We greet a friend or bid farewell once more;
And bear our grief in helpless silence.
There are so many years.

The days, the months, the years! When all are told,
And we have reached, at last, our Father's home,
Where His dear hand shall wipe away all tears,
And give us rest from pain, and loss, and fears,
We shall forget the rough road we have come,
And smile to think we ever murmured
At days, or months, or years.

NIMBLE-FINGERED MEN.

How the Artful Dodgers Get Their Start in Life.

A Talk With a Detective About Professional Pickpockets—The Various Degrees of Expertness—Tricks to Which They Resort.

"How do professional pickpockets make a start?" asked a Star reporter of a detective the other day.

"He begins," answered the detective, "by robbing small stores or candy shops; by sneaking into the stores and robbing, or attempting to rob, the till. Before he becomes an expert he is usually picked up by the officers for petty offenses. The first time he is arrested he probably gets off by paying a small fine. The next time he is sent to jail, and then he becomes hardened, While in prison his associates, or many of them, are old offenders, and from them he receives advice and learns a great deal about professional work. When he is released from jail he thinks he knows as much as any of the older members of the profession, and he then makes a start toward the penitentiary. Then he will follow ladies about. He will pick out those who carelessly carry their purses in their outer pockets or on their arms.

"In a short time," the detective went on, "he joins a 'gang' or 'mob.' Those 'gangs' usually are composed of four or five men known as 'stalls' and 'wires' or 'tools.' The 'stall' is the man who gets the 'mark' or victim in position. He is usually the heaviest man in the 'gang.' When his work is finished and the victim is in position the 'wire' comes along and works from behind the victim or the 'stall.' In ninety-nine cases out of every hundred where the victim discovers that he has been robbed he seizes the 'stall' and hands him over to the police. Of course when the 'stall' is searched nothing is found on him, for he has never had the 'swag' in his possession. The victim grabs the 'stall' because he can not see the 'wire.' After the robbery is committed the proceeds are turned over to a confederate, who goes to a convenient place, cleans or empties the purse and then disposes of it, keeping only such portions of its contents as can not be easily identified. A favorite thing with the pickpockets is to take a gang of five or six and start out on the day of some celebration to go through street cars. Two of them will enter a car at a designated point and pick out a 'mark.' Then as the car passes along the street the others enter it, and the first two give the signal and step off the car. When the 'mark' attempts to get off the car he is hustled at the door by members of the gang while the 'wire' goes through him. If they have a chance several pocket-books are secured before they leave the car, and in this way they frequently make a good haul.

"Another favorite place for a mob to work," continued the detective, "is at a railroad junction. A swell mob of first-class men will meet, lay their plans and then go to the junction. Each will go alone and take his position. When the car arrives a rush is made, and passengers are prevented for a minute or two from getting off the car. While pressing past each other the 'wire' gets in his work, and when the car on the crossing road moves off one or more of its passengers discover the loss of a pocket-book. The man who got it is on a car going in another direction, and the chances for catching him are very slim. Some first-class workers prefer to travel alone, and work with a newspaper or light overcoat. They will carry an overcoat on their left arm, and, when doing a job, will throw it across their right arm, hiding their hand. These fellows can easily take a 'prop,' as a pin is sometimes called. Such a job takes but an instant, and in very few cases are the thieves caught.

"The pickpocket," continued the detective, "is in his glory at the country fair. There is usually a large crowd at such places. A member of the 'mob' will get into the crowd and cry: 'Look out for your pocket-books!' In an instant every countryman has his hand on his pocket-book. This gives the mob a chance to locate the pocket-books, and saves them the time and trouble of 'fanning' or feeling about to locate them. If an attempt is made to get the pocket-book and the pocket, as countrymen have them, is too deep, one of the gang will either accidentally knock the intended victim's hat off or pull it down over his ears. In either case he is surprised, and while recovering himself his money is taken. He calls thief, but not being able to pick out the right man from the crowd, and fearing that he will pick the wrong one, he walks quietly away, and afterward looks to the Fair Committee for his money.

"I remember, continued" the detective, "that at a country fair a countryman was seen putting his hand on his hip-pocket every few minutes. The thieves thought he had something, and one of them knocked his hat off. The countryman stooped over to pick it up, and while stooping over two of the gang found it convenient to shake hands across his back. When the countryman started to get up he was held down until his pocket-book was taken out of his hip-pocket.

"Some years ago at a country fair in West Virginia the thieves reaped a harvest, but found no convenient place to throw the empty pocket-books, There was a politician speaking from a small stand, in front of which stood a countryman with a green cotton umbrella. One by one the empty books were dropped into the old man's umbrella. Finally a shower came up, and when the old man hoisted his umbrella there was a shower of pocket-books. Through the fair ground was a gully, and after the rain had continued some time it was almost impossible to cross the small stream. One of the thieves procured a plank, which they placed across the gully. While one of them assisted persons across the others robbed as many as they could, and many persons who crossed the stream were relieved of all the money they had and were unable to make any more purchases.

A good mob will never let business get dull while working a city, for they are always ready to raise some excitement and cause a rush, which will enable them to go through the crowd. They usually reap a harvest after some celebration is over and persons are making a rush for the cars. They are always ready to misinform persons as to where the different cars take them. Then, when the train is ready to start, one of them will enter a car and inform the passengers of the mistake. Then there is a rush to get on the right train. During the rush and excitement persons are unable to take care of their pocket-books, and the pickpocket takes advantage of the opportunity.

"I remember several years ago," continued the detective, "when McGlade and Collyer fought at Goldsborough, Pa. They stopped at different hotels, and the friends of the principals in the fight followed them. Early in the morning a farmer drove up in front of one of the hotels in a sleigh. Several young men ran out and kindly covered the horses with blankets and arranged matters generally for the visitor, and while so doing relieved him of his pocket-book. Then they invited him into the hotel to take a drink. Several treats were passed around, and when it came the farmer's turn he found he had lost his pocket-book, but instead of accusing any one of the theft he went out to his sled and searched it thoroughly. Not finding it, he started to return to the hotel. A smile came upon his face as he saw his pocket-book on the cellar-door. A moment later his countenance fell again, for when he picked up the lost book it was empty. It is wonderful how expert these fellows become. They can rob a man in broad daylight so neatly and quickly that the victim sometimes knows nothing of it for an hour or more afterward. It makes no difference in what pocket a man carries his pocket-book to the thief; it is only a matter of getting an opportunity to get at it.

"After they have acquired the knack of taking pocket-books," said the detective, "they go a step higher in, and become members of the gang who only wring or steal watches, which are known to the profession as white and red 'supers.' The chain they call 'slang.' These watch experts pay no attention to pocket-books, and they are too high in their profession to tap store-tills. They devote their entire attention to taking watches, White supers are seldom taken now, because there are so many cheap and nickel-plated ones that it does not pay to run the risk.

"The older members of the profession usually pick up young converts and make them do the work, while they watch and give instructions, and then hold the property. There was once a fellow known as 'Johnny, the Greek.' He was a good worker, and never had any trouble in securing confederates. He once went to a country fair, and, being alone, he employed a couple of countrymen to assist him, paying them $2 each. All they had to do was stand in some passageway and prevent persons from passing. The countrymen thought they were having lots of fun, but when they tumbled to their employer's racket they demanded an increase of pay. Instead of increasing their pay he got rid of his 'swag' and discharged them. In taking watches all a thief has to do is to snap the chain in two or break the ring, which can be done in an instant. An expert finds no difficulty whatever in taking a watch.

"What effect does it have on one of these professionals to send him to the penitentiary?" inquired the reporter.

"It usually has the effect of making him a better thief," replied the detective, "for while he is in prison he does nothing but concoct new schemes. When released he imagines that there is no such thing as getting caught again, and will be back to his old habits before he is outside the prison walls twenty-four hours.

"Crime," said the detective, "has always appeared to me as a disease, because there are many young men having all the luxuries of life at their command who prefer to follow the life of a thief and travel with thieves rather than associate with respectable persons. There was once a man who lived in one of our large cities whose relatives spent thousands of dollars to reclaim him. He had plenty of money and never wanted for any thing, but still he preferred stealing to living honestly. At the death of one of his relatives he fell heir to an immense brown stone building worth more than $100,000, which he deeded over to his sister, as he had no use for it, because he could get all the money he wanted by following his profession. There is another man who was well-to-do. He is now serving a long sentence in the penitentiary for attempting to rob a collector of about $8,000. The collector was on a street car when the man entered and knocked him over with a piece of gas-pipe. He was arrested before he could get the money, and now he is paying the penalty. There are many men now in prison who have no excuse in the world for leading dishonest lives, but who have been brought there through keeping bad company. When behind the bars they will make good promises but when released the promises are soon broken and they fall back into their old habits."—N. Y. Star.

ST. FRANCIS' FRIENDS.

A Saint Possessed of That "Perfect Love Which Casteth out Fear'

In a walk through Rome we saw a monk in the robe of a Franciscan seated at the open window of a convent with a little bird perched on his finger. Observing our attention was attracted by his favorite, the good father placed some seeds on his lips, which the bird fearlessly pecked. It seemed a picture of St. Francis six hundred years old, and recalled many legends of the tenderness of that wonderful man for the animal creation.

St. Francis had the power of that "perfect love which casteth out fear" over the furry and feathery inhabitants of woods and fields, and he called them his brothers and sisters. According to tradition, they understood his language, and on one occasion, when a large number of swallows disturbed his congregation on the hillside by their twittering, he said: "My sister, it is now time for me to speak, for you have had your say; now, be silent until the sermon is ended." It is needless too add he was obeyed. At another time a live leveret was brought to him with other provisions. The sight of the trembling creature touched him. "Come to me, little brother leveret," said he; "why hast thou let thyself be taken?" The small creature hid himself near the great heart; and when St. Francis at last took him from under his robe and set him free, the leveret returned to the shelter of the brown robe. We could repeat many other legends which connect St. Francis with these his trusting friends. But he was not the only saint whom animals loved. It is recorded that when St. Columba drew towards the close of his remarkable career, and he knew his last hour on earth was at hand, he sat down to rest on a stone near his monastery at Iona. An ancient and faithful servant, the old white horse which had been employed to carry milk daily to the monastery, approached and laid his head on his master's shoulder as if to take leave of him. The eyes of the old horse had an expression so pathetic that they seemed bathed in tears. The attendant of St. Columba would have sent the animal away, but Columba forbade him. "The horse loves me," said he; "the Creator has revealed by this poor animal what he has hidden from thee, a reasonable man," upon which, still caressing the faithful creature, he gave him his last blessing. That night a company of angels bore away the soul of Columba.—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

Crows in Nebraska.

An Omaha letter says that the chief features of Nebraska, next to blizzards and heroic schoolma'ams, is crows. These crow colonies are well organized and evidently know what they are about. The wonder is that their instinct, which in crows and ravens borders close upon intelligence, does not send them farther south during the cold season. With the regularity of the sun they come across the river from Council Bluffs, filling the air with their hoarse calls. They are tame and feed with the poultry in private premises, and try titles with the dogs for the bones, in which contest they are usually victorious. They are the street scavengers of the city, and as numerous as the children in populous districts. They gather like committees on public improvements in unoccupied districts, and with their crow pantomime look as though they were staking out corner lots. In the late afternoons their preparation for returning to their night haunts is evidently no haphazard operation. Some winged sentinel that evidently takes notes of time sends down from the upper air his hoarse signal as the Mussulman from his turret, and in a twinkle all heads are turned toward the east, the black mass moves and flies off, and, as far as the eye can see stretches in flapping clots across the sky.—Albany Journal.

LITTLE JACK HORE.

The Only White Boy Who Has Ever Seen the Lakes of Central Africa.

Little Jack Hore was an English baby and he was three months old when he landed on the east coast of Africa. His father was a missionary and Jack and his mother were on the way to the home that had been prepared for them in Central Africa. Thejourney was eight hundred miles long, up hill and down, through jungle, forest and plain, and it was a serious question how little Jack could be carried comfortably over the rude native paths to Lake Tanganyika. His father thought that a wheelbarrow was likely to be the best vehicle for Jack, and so arrangements had been made in England to have Jack trundled in a barrow all the way from the coast to the big lake where he was to live.

A deep and commodious basket was provided for the baby. On the bottom of the basket was as soft a little bed as could be made, and the entire inside was padded so that Jack could not easily hurt himself. The basket was placed in a steel wheelbarrow frame. An awning above the basket was supported by iron rods, and, when required, mosquito curtains could be let down. This was to be Jack's carriage on the march, and when in camp at night the basket was to be placed in Mrs. Hore's tent to serve Jack as a bed.

Jack was asleep in his father's arms when he landed on the coast of Africa at Saadani, near Zanzibar. He was tucked away in his little basket, and one of the porters trundled him along in his wheelbarrow near the head of the caravan. Close behind him rode Jack's mother on a donkey. Once in a while the baby was lifted out of the wheelbarrow for a change and carried a mile or two in his mother's arms. Usually Jack rode along in the little vehicle very quietly, and he seemed to take as kindly to his wheelbarrow as other babies do to the most comfortable of cradles. Even when the road was hummocky Jack did not seem to mind it, and the jouncing he got only seemed to put him in good humor for a nap. It happened, however, that Jack was not destined to travel all the way to Central Africa in a wheelbarrow. After they had climbed the coast mountains and were a hundred and fifty miles on their way it was found inexpedient on account of unexpected difficulties on the road for Mrs. Hore and the baby to go any further that year. So Jack was wheeled back to the coast again and before long he turned up in England none the worse for his jaunt of three hundred miles in a wheelbarrow.

Early in 1884, when Jack was a little over two years old, he landed again at Saadani. There were stories from up country of widespread drought and famine, but nothing daunted Mr. Hore, who had come all the way from Central Africa to meet his family, decided to set out with them at once on the long journey to the beautiful lake, which, though narrow, is one of the longest fresh-water lakes in the world. This time the wheelbarrow was discarded. The willow body of a baby carriage was turned into a tiny palanquin for Jack's accommodation. It was suspended by stout ropes from a couple of bamboos. Along the bamboos was stretched a canvas awning, impervious alike to sun or rain, with movable sides, that could be fastened up or down at pleasure. Four natives were assigned to the task of carrying Master Jack in his unique little conveyance. The bamboos were supple, and as the carriers trudged along there was a delightful springiness about the rig that greatly pleased Jack. His mother was carried in a bath chair rigged up in a similar fashion.

Jack got along famously until he was stricken with fever, and then he insisted much of the time upon traveling in his mother's lap. When the long caravan halted for the noontime lunch the first duty of the men was to pitch a tent in which to shelter Jack and his mother from the scorching sun. The little fellow's great delight was in crossing rivers in the big canoes the natives keep for ferrying caravans. He usually sat in state in his little armchair, and sometimes used a string and a bent pin to fish for crocodiles, with invariably poor success. One day a porter ran away with a canvas bag containing a large part of Jack's wardrobe. In a land where caravans use a great deal of cotton cloth to pay their way there was of course plenty of material at hand to repair Jack's loss, which he bore with more equanimity than the rest of his family. Sometimes they traveled for hours through grass that was high above their heads, and in the early morning Jack liked to listen to the dew drops as they fell like rain upon the top of his palanquin, while the carriers plodded along through the luxuriant growth of grass. Many of the marches were very wearisome, and Mrs. Hore wrote that she and Jack often presented a very draggled appearance when the halt was made for the day.

The journey lasted ninety days. At last the beautiful waters of Lake Tanganyika came into view, and little Jack was delighted when his family embarked in a big boat for the long journey to the island of Kavala. He thought the songs of the crew as they bent to their oars were particularly jolly. He is now living on Kavala Island, and, though he is the only little white boy in Central Africa, he seems to be thoroughly enjoying his boyhood. Friends in England have sent him many toys, which he shares with his Waguha playmates, and he does not now remember that he ever had any other home than Africa.—N. Y. Sun.

TEMPERANCE READING.

ALCOHOL'S DEADLY WORK.

How It Affects the Nervous System—Some Original Experiments by Dr. Hammond—The Stages of Intoxication—How the Brain May Be Impregnated with the Poison.

Several years ago I undertook a series of experiments for the purpose of arriving at conclusions, as nearly exact as possible, relative to the direct effect of alcohol upon the nervous system. These were performed upon dogs and rabbits, and consisted of two series. One series, performed upon dogs, to which alcohol, in quantities of from one to three ounces, diluted with equal amounts of water, was administered by the stomach, gave these results:

1. Period of excitation—Uncertainty in the movements of the limbs, acceleration of pulse and respiration, contraction of the pupils.

2. Period of perversion—Muscular paralysis beginning in the posterior extremities, irregularity of pulse and of respiration, dilatation of the pupils.

3. Period of collapse—Complete paralysis of motion, anæsthesia, feebleness of the pulse and of respiration, stoppage of respiration and of the heart's action, death.

Now, I was desirous of knowing how much of each of these conditions was due to the presence of alcohol in the blood circulating through the brain, and how much to disturbance in the quantity of blood normally present in this organ. I therefore made an opening in the skull of a dog, and secured in it an instrument, by means of which any increase or diminution of the amount of blood contained in the brain could be exactly determined. I then gave the animal an ounce of alcohol diluted with an equal quantity of water. In fifty seconds I detected alcohol in the air expired from the lungs. In four and a half minutes the respiration was accelerated, the action of the heart became more rapid and strong, and the pupils were beginning to contract. Still there was no increase in the intracranial pressure, and I therefore knew that, up to this time, the amount of blood in the brain had not been augmented. In six minutes and a half the dog's gait was staggering, and, though its movements were uncertain, as if from vertigo, there was no paralysis. The intracranial pressure was still unaltered.

The fluid remained stationary in the tube of the instrument for seventeen minutes. Then it began to rise slowly, and with this increase in the intracranial pressure paralysis of the posterior extremities supervened. As the amount of blood contained in the cranium became greater the paralysis extended, the pupils dilated and stupor ensued. I repeated this experimented twice with similar results.

The deductions to be made are that the first symptoms which results from the taking of alcohol into the system are due to the circulation of this substance through the blood vessels of the brain, while the later phenomna are, in part at least, the results of cerebral congestion. In man a like sequence is observed. A single glass of wine induces an exhilaration and activity of mind before there is any evidence of an increase in the amount of blood circulating in the cerebral blood vessels. Thus we have as the immediate effects of alcohol upon the nervous system a certain degree of poisoning of the brain from the direct action of alcohol upon its substance, and in the next place an increase in the amount of blood circulating through this organ.

We are hence able to study with a considerable degree of exactness the phenomena of alcoholic intoxication so far as they relate to the nervous system. We have, in the first place, the stage of excitement which is characterized by a sensation of heat in the skin of the whole body and by redness in the face. The eyes appear to be larger and more brilliant, the ideas flow more readily and are of better quality than are natural to the individual. The tendency to talk is generally increased, but the articulation is usually not so distinct and exact as is natural. The disposition becomes more generous, and there is, perhaps, more recklessness as to consequences, although the bounds of propriety relative to conduct and conversation are not exceeded. Occasionally a different set of symptoms results. The individual, from being naturally talkative, becomes taciturn and stolid, and a generous disposition is changed to one of which churlishness, selfishness and a tendency to quarrel are the chief features. If the quantity of alcohol taken has been small, or if the individual now ceases to drink it, the subsequent stages of intoxication do not supervene and the equilibrium is soon restored without the occurrence of any abnormal condition. But if the amount imbibed has been large, or if the potations are continued, the second stage, that of perturbation, ensues.

There are now vertigo, disturbances of sight such as result from paralysis of one or more of the muscles of the eyeballs and giving rise to double vision, contraction of the pupils, noises in the ears and increased redness of the face. The sense of taste becomes weakened, the voice loses its natural inflections and is rough and monotonous, and the articulation is indistinct from partial paralysis and defective co-ordination of the muscles of speech. The gait, from like paralysis of the muscles of the lower limbs, becomes weak and uncertain, and hence, if the individual attempts to walk, he staggers. The movements of the upper limbs are irregular and often exhibit marked tremor like that which constitutes so prominent a feature of paralysis agitans, or shaking palsy, as it is called in the vernacular.

Still greater alterations from the normal standard are shown in the mind. The most striking change occurs with the emotions which generally assume an undue prominence and dominate over other of the mental faculties. And it not infrequently happens that the feeling which is most conspicuous is the very opposite of that which is natural to the person affected. Thus the brave man becomes cowardly, the timid courageous, the peaceable quarrelsome, the modest shameless, etc. Usually, however, the emotions which the subject in his normal condition is able to control and to keep in proper subordination to the intellect and will become exaggerated and are no longer held in subjection. It therefore happens that when this stage of alcoholic intoxication is reached the person who, while in his natural state, is high-toned and spirited, is now ready to take offense and to engage in quarrels upon the slightest provocation, and often when no cause for his emotion and conduct exists. It is in this stage that outrages against the law are most apt to occur.

The more purely intellectual part of the mind does not escape. The judgment is weakend, the memory impaired, the imagination exalted or perverted and delusions, often having their origin in disordered sensations and often arising in the mind without any accompanying illusion or hallucination, may assume the government of the thoughts and actions. The ability to grasp the details of a subject and to comprehend them is greatly impaired or even altogether destroyed, and hence study or continuous and systematic thought is no longer possible.

In the third stage the full action of the alcohol is attained. The mind, the special senses and the power of motion are more or less completely abolished; the heart and other important organs of the body are greatly disturbed in their action, and death, generally the direct result of suspension of the respiratory movements, may ensue. When this degree of alcoholic intoxication is at its height the person is dead to all external expressions. Boiling water may be poured on his body or his legs may be burned off in a lime kiln, but he feels nothing; speech is impossible; the pupils are largely dilated; the breathing is slow, heavy and stertorous; the face is swollen and purple from the circulation of non-oxygenized blood through the vessels, and the power of thought is extinct. Should the poisoning process go a little farther, so as to involve the nerve centers which preside over the action of the heart and lungs to a slightly greater extent, life is very soon abolished.

Such are the immediate effects which follow the taking of large quantities of alcohol into the human stomach. No one can fail to observe that most of the remarkable phenomena mentioned are connected directly or indirectly with the nervous system. Indeed, experiments performed upon animals with reference to this point, as well as careful observation of the effects of alcohol on the human system, show that the substance has a signal affinity for the nervous tissue, and that it is even capable of acting powerfully on the brain, the spinal cord and the sympathetic system, before there has been time for it to be absorbed from the stomach and to act through the medium of the blood. Instances are on record, and I have myself witnessed one such, in which a large quantity of alcohol taken into the stomach has produced death in a few minutes. Orfila cites a case in which a man died immediately from the effects of an overdose of brandy. In the instance that came under my own notice, a man drank somewhat over a pint of whisky without stopping. He immediately became deathly pale, staggered a few steps and fell dead. I have several times killed rabbits in less than a minute by introducing an ounce of pure alcohol into the stomach. In such cases the action is not excited through the medium of the blood, but directly on the sympathetic system. Indeed, if, as I have frequently observed, a like amount of alcohol be injected into a vein, death does not ensue with as great rapidity.

I have not the space to do more than mention the conditions known as delirium tremens and chronic acoholic intoxication. The first of these is an acute form of alcoholic poisoning, the last, as its name implies, is a more chronic manifestation. Both are especially the result of the absorption by the brain and other parts of the nervous system of the alcohol which has been taken into the stomach. I have shown, by many experiments, that the nervous substance of animals poisoned with alcohol, if cut up into small pieces, soaked in a little water and then distilled, yields alcohol in very considerable amount. The brains of habitual drunkards treated in this manner give like evidence of the actual presence of alcohol. It is impossible for this substance to be in such intimate contact with the nervous tissues without effecting radical changes in their structure. Experiments upon animals, as well as post-mortem examinations of the bodies of habitual drunkards, show this without the possibility of a doubt to be a fact. It is not strange, therefore, that at least twenty diseases of the nervous system, as well as every variety of insanity, may be produced by the excessive use of alcohol. The crime, the mental and physical degredation, the social misery and the destruction of life that result more or less immediately from the abuse of this powerful agent are simply incalculable.—William A. Hammond, in N. Y. Mail and Express.

They Are Responsible.

We believe it has been heretofore considered as a mere matter of course that the keeper of a saloon is not to be held legally responsible for any outrages committed on his premises in which he does not personally have a share. Time out of mind, it has been a common-place incident for the saloon-keeper or low tavern-keeper to make men drunk and then throw them out into the street or permit outrages upon them by others present who might be only on the road to a like stage of intoxication. One is gratified to find evidence that such brutality is beginning to have attention on the part of those whose business it is to see that the laws of the country are not set at naught by those for the due constraint of whose scoundrelism such laws are especially made. The Pennsylvania Supreme Court has decided that "where one enters a saloon or tavern, opened for the entertainment of the public, the proprietor is bound to see that he is properly protected from the assaults or insults of those who are in his employ, as well as of the drunken or vicious men whom he may choose to harbor." This "puts the saloon-keeper in exactly the same category as the hotel-man." The announcement of such a decision is almost like the proclamation of a new era; so much of the saloon-keeper's "occupation" will be "gone" when he begins to find himself responsible for murders and other outrages committed by those whom he makes it his business to turn from men into brutes.—Chicago Standard.

TEMPERANCE ITEMS.

DR. MOIR, of the British Medical Temperance Association, has found the mortality of small-pox reduced from eighteen to thirteen per cent. without alcohol.

THE Legislatures of Nova Scotia and New Brunswick have provided for the introduction of Scientific Temperance instruction into the public schools of those provinces.

KING LEOPOLD II., of Belgium, has ordered that all dealers in intoxicants above the Iukissi, a branch of the Lower Congo, must pay a license of five hundred dollars, evidently hoping by high license to undo the evil of "free rum on the Congo."

A FEW drinks of bad whisky can do more deviltry than any other decoction invented by man. It only took a moderate amount of this stimulant and a few moments for a drunken teamster to mount a Northwestern locomotive Sunday evening and start it wildly spinning through the city, only to stop when it went to pieces against an opposing engine and result in a damage bill of $15,000. Two drinks for fifteen cents can accomplish great things in the way of damages.—Chicago Inter Ocean.

READING FOR THE YOUNG.

A GRANDMOTHER WANTED.

I've the dearest of papas and the sweetest of mammas,
And a darling little birdie that the finest songs can sing,
And a cunning dog and cat; but I've wanted something else
Ever since the time I knew enough to wish for any thing.

And that's a silver-haired dear old lady, who to all
The children, whether rich or poor, says pleasantly: "My dear,"
Who can lots of stories tell, and a lot of rhymes repeat,
And never is too busy all the news I bring to hear.

Oh, how lovely it would be in the summer time to see
Her sitting in the garden when the sky was bright and blue,
Or in winter by the fire, humming hymn tunes very softly
While knitting scarlet stockings for—I guess you can guess who!

It really don't seem right that I never should have one,
When almost all the girls I know have two, and some have three;
So if there should be any dear old grandmother a-wanting
A loving little granddaughter, why, let her come to me.

TEDDY'S GARDENING.

Why He Planted Canary-Bird Seeds, and How He Got His Wish.

Last spring Teddy was as busy as a beaver helping grandpa make the garden. He helped grandma sort over the little packages in the seed-box, too; and he asked a good many questions while he was about it.

"What're these, gramma?" he asked once; "these funny black ones?"

Grandma put on her spectacles. May be Teddy bothered her more than he helped, but she wouldn't have said so for any thing.

"Those are watermelon seeds," she answered. "We'll plant them and raise some melons, dearie."

Pretty soon Teddy came to another little packet he didn't know about. The seeds were not a bit like any he had found before.

"Oh, what are these ones?" he cried, holding out the tiny package.

"Why," said grandma, after she had looked a minute, "that is some of your Aunt Ellen's canary-bird seed. I don't know how it came in here, I'm sure; but I guess we won't plant any of it."

Grandma laughed, but Teddy looked down seriously at the small handful of shiny seeds. He thought of Robbie Gray's pretty yellow canary. In a minute his eyes began to sparkle.

"May—may I have 'em, gramma?" he asked, eagerly.

"I don't care," said grandma, kindly; and she thought no more about it until, by and by, five o'clock came, and she called Teddy in to eat his supper.

"What has my little man been up to all this afternoon?" she asked, smiling down at him. "You mustn't work too hard, dear."

"No'm, I won't," answered Teddy, his happy blue eyes shining. "O gramma, I—I've been planting my canary-bird seeds, and—and I just hope there will be one yellow one, like Robbie Gray's, gramma!"

"What do you mean?" asked grandma; and then, all in a minute, she knew. She couldn't quite hide the twinkling smile in her eyes, though she tried, because she knew, too, that Teddy didn't like to be laughed at. "Dear child," said she, taking the small gardener on her lap, "I didn't mean that you could raise canaries from the seed. It was what your Aunt Ellen used to give her birds to eat."

"O-oh!" said Teddy, hanging his head. He felt the least bit ashamed, but there were tears in his eyes all the same. "I—I wanted one like Robbie's," he said, "and you said 'bout the watermelon seed, you know, gramma, and the canary-bird seed, and I didn't think—I thought—I"—

"Well, never mind," said grandma, kissing him. "We won't think any more about it, anyway."

But she did think more about it, for the very next week, when grandpa went to town with butter and eggs, he brought back a pretty cage, with a yellow canary in it which looked so much like Robbie Gray's that you couldn't tell them apart, unless you knew. And grandma wasn't a bit surprised.—Youth's Companion.

RAIN CLOUDS.

The Phenomena of Evaporation and Condensation—How Water Is Drawn into the Air and Why It Descends.

Did you ever stop to think, when you looked out of the window and saw dull, gray clouds from which the rain was so steadily pouring, and which seemed to shut in the world all around, that, in reality, they extended over a very small part of the country; that somewhere else, perhaps only twenty or thirty or a hundred miles away, the sun was shining, and all was bright and beautiful? This is really the case. For storms, however long and dreary, do not extend over many miles; and though it always is raining at some place in the world, yet always and at the same time it is pleasant somewhere else. Now, let us see why this is.

Suppose that on a warm summer afternoon we were to bring a pitcher of clear, cool water, fresh from the well, and to place it on the table in the dining-room. Now, no matter how carefully we may have dried the pitcher before bringing it in, we shall discover, if we watch closely, that the outside soon becomes wet or misty; and that the mist grows heavier and gathers into drops and perhaps even runs down the pitcher to the table.

Now, where does this water come from? Not through the sides of the pitcher, that is impossible; but from the air. We can not see it, perhaps, but still it is there in the state of vapor. How came it there? Did you ever notice, after a rain, how in a short time the puddles became dry, and how the moisture disappeared from the grass and leaves, as soon as the sun shone out and the wind blew? Or, did you ever notice that if you left a pan of water out-of-doors the water each day grew less and less, until all was gone and the pan dry?

All the water that was in the puddles, on the grass and leaves (except that which soaked into the ground) and in the pan, was taken up as vapor into the air—has "evaporated," as we say. The same thing happens when water boils, only it then evaporates more rapidly, and we can see the vapor arising as steam. If you live near a river, or in a country where there are brooks, perhaps you can see this evaporation actually taking place. Get up early some morning, before the sun rises, and look out toward the river. You may see a long line of mist or fog, like a big, white cloud, hanging over the water. Now, this mist is only the water evaporating from the river and is just now visible as fog because the air is cool. And the sun has shone, the air becomes warmed and the fog disappears, but the evaporation goes on, nevertheless. Indeed, it is going on continually, and all over the earth; so that if the water were not returned to us as rain, snow and dew, all the oceans, lakes and rivers would in time dry up and disappear. All the trees, grass and plants would then wither, and our beautiful land would become as dry and parched as the great desert Sahara. * * * * *

Having learned how the water is drawn into the air, let us see how and why it comes down again as rain or snow or dew.

There is a singular thing about this moisture, which is this: the air will hold only a certain quantity of it, and that quantity depends upon the temperature of the air. But warm air always holds more than cold; so, however warm the air may be, or however much moisture it may contain as invisible vapor, we have only to cool it enough and the vapor condenses, as we say; that is, it becomes visible, first as fog or mist, and then as drops of water, such as we see on the pitcher. And the reason we see a white fog rising at night, after the sun goes down, is only because the water, which has been evaporating all day and going up into the air as invisible vapor, becomes condensed to fog by the cooling of the air when the sun's heat is withdrawn. When the sun rises, the fog disappears; but the vapor still ascends, and when it reaches the altitude where the air is always cool, it becomes condensed again as fog, only it is then called "clouds." And if it becomes condensed enough to form in drops of water, they fall, and it "rains;" or, perhaps, it snows, for snow is but frozen rain.—George P. Merrill, in St. Nicholas.

A NEW CURE.

Carrie's Fright and Her Promise—A Successful Remedy.

Carrie had a very bad habit of crying. Not a bright, quick flood of tears, such as leave baby faces shiny and sunny as wood anemones after an April shower. It was a long, howling, November storm—wailing and whining about the house till we were all unhappy and indignant by turns.

Expostulation was in vain until grandma came for a visit and tried the New Cure. Now Carrie loved grandma dearly, but stood somewhat in awe of her. She had been known to withdraw promises of rides or stories, and to recapture sweetmeats when children had been very bad, indeed. So it was two whole days before Carrie had a cry in grandma's hearing. When she did have one, however, poor grandma could hear nothing else.

"Carrie," said she, "if you don't stop I shall pull all the hair off my head." Carrie looked amazed, but was not seriously alarmed, and kept on howling. "Carrie," said grandma again, "I shall surely tear my hair all out by the roots if you don't stop that distressing noise. You know they tore their hair in Bible days when any thing very dreadful happened that they could neither help nor get rid of."

Carrie was crying to go out in the rain. She gave a little longer, louder h-o-w-l, and took a peep from under her hat-brim to see what grandma would do.

The old lady looked desperate. In an instant she raised her hand—thin and feeble from a long attack of fever—to her pretty lace-cap. In another instant she sat straight in her chair with a head as bald and shiny as the baby's!

You ought to have seen Carrie's face! "O Grandma! Grandma!" she screamed. "Sew on your hair! I'll never cry so any mo-o-o-re if you only will!"

Grandma made sure that the promise was a serious one. Then she carefully readjusted her wig and cap. The wig remained a mystery to Carrie; but after that grandma had only to raise her hand to her head to check the loudest cry. Carrie never forgot her fright and her promise.—Mrs. Frances Smith, in Our Little Ones.

How to Clear Wood Land.

It is not enough to go into the woods with an ax to clear woodland as it should be. Long ago the practice of burning and logging ceased, and since then forests have only been thinned by the annual removal of wood as it was needed. The disadvantage of this was that the best was always taken, leaving only the less valuable kinds of timber. Thus the value of the wood lot constantly decreased until in many places it consists only of scrubby and gnarled trees not worth the cost of working up. The far better way is to make an entire clearing each year, and then either replant with valuable timber or use the cleared land for other purposes. In this way much more valuable wood can be grown on a smaller area than now.—American Cultivator.

MOISTURE IN AIR.

Why Rain Does Not Fall Equally in All Parts of the Country.

We have learned that rain is caused by the cooling and condensation of the moisture in the air. Bearing this in mind, let us study the surface of our country and see why the rain does not fall equally on all parts of it, instead of falling very abundantly in some places, as in New England and some of the Gulf States, and very sparingly in many parts of the West, as in New Mexico and Arizona.

The winds which blow to this country from the south and the east, being warm tropical winds, can hold much moisture, and are full of this invisible vapor of water which they have taken up from the Gulf of Mexico and the ocean. Coming to the cooler land, they gradually become cooled. Their moisture, therefore, falls as rain, while they pass over the land, till, by the time they reach Western Kansas and Colorado, the moisture being gone, no more rain can fall. But the winds which come to this country from the north and west are colder than the land, and, as they sweep over it, toward the south and east, they gradually become warmer; so that instead of giving up their moisture in the form of rain, they are constantly taking up moisture from the earth. It is for this reason that our north and west winds are dry winds, and mean fair weather; while the south and east winds bring rain. For this reason, also, the Eastern and Southern States have an abundance of rain; while the Central and Western States are often very dry.

And there is still another point to be considered. We already have noted the fact that at great heights the air is cooler. Hence, when a warm wind full of moisture comes blowing across the country and strikes a mountain range, it leads upward and rises high in the air to pass over. In so doing it becomes cooled, giving up its moisture, and passes over to the other side a dry wind. It is for this reason that some islands, like the Hawaiian Islands in the Pacific Ocean, where the winds blow almost always from the same direction, are subject to almost continuous rain on one side, while on the other rain is exceedingly rare. This also shows why California, west of the Sierra Nevada mountains, receives sufficient rain to make the soil fit for cultivation; while Nevada, on the east, is nearly rainless and barren. The moisture coming from the south and east is all condensed by the Allegheny, the Rocky and the Wahsatch ranges; while that from the west is cut off by the Sierras. Hence, the great extent of country known to geologists as the Great Basin—which reaches from Oregon on the north to Mexico on the south, and from Colorado on the east to the Sierras on the west, comprising an area of not less than 200,500 square miles, which is nearly equal to the whole of France—receives over a great part of its surface an annual raintall of not over four inches, and is therefore a desert.—George P. Merrill, in St. Nicholas.

COURTSHIP IN ZULULAND.

How the Kaffir Girls Put Suitors on Their Mettle.

When a young Zulu gains his "gum ring" (which is a ring worn upon the crown of the head, and is obtained by performing some deed of valor, or by special gift of the King, and which stamps him a man as distinguished from a "boy"), his first duty is to get married, and if he has not the necessary cows to purchase a wife, he must raid some enemies' kraal and steal them. When he has chosen the lady, he makes his intentions known to the family, and they commence operations by praising him when she is present as he never was praised before—and never will be again until he wants another wife. The girl, after some coquetry, consents to see him and he, washing and oiling himself, dons his lightest, finest dancing dress, and sending a messenger to announce his coming, presents himself with shield and assagai to the family, who will be squatting in a circle near the house of the lady. He squats amongst them, and presently the lady of his dreams appears, attended by two or three female friends about her own age.

She looks him over for some time and finally requests him, through her brother (it not being etiquette to speak to him direct), to rise and turn round and round, displaying his proportions under a running fire of mischievous comments from the girl friends of the fiancee elect; she, keeping a discreet silence, awards him permission to squat again and retires. The family rush to hear her decision, but she is not inclined to be hasty or seem too easily won. "I have not seen him walk; he may jump!" she says, and so the poor fellow has to come again next morning, when he will probably be accepted.

The idea that the Zulu or Kaffir girl has no voice in the matter of choosing a husband is a mistaken one, and, although powerful moral reasons may be brought to bear, no conscientious Zulu would dream of raising his hand to beat a woman or girl into submission; he may kill his wife, for she is his, he bought her, but he will not ill-treat her. Of course there are exceptions, but such a husband would find a difficulty in procuring more wives.—W. F. Pond, in Woman.

THE WEST AND EAST.

Two Pictures From Real Life Which Need no Explanation.

A passenger train was snow-bound in the West. The weary and hungry passengers, having hushed the songs and jests which follow such misfortunes, settled down in silence and brooded over the cheerless prospect of having to remain there for days without food.

"Don't you hear voices outside?" said a man addressing an acquaintance.

"I thought so just now. Look—lights flashing. Hello! a number of people are coming to our relief."

Rough-looking farmers, carrying baskets, boarded the train.

"Here, folks, come up all han's an' git a bite to eat. We'll put the coffee-pots on the stoves an' sorter wa'm up the occasion. Here, Miss, you shall have the first cup. Don't look like you are so mighty stout, nohow. Look at that little boy, will you? Hungry as a wolf, I bet. Bless his little heart, we'll fix him. Fetch that bread and butter this way. We was mightily afraid that we wouldn't reach you before old man Hungry got in a good many pinches. Under a big drift here, you see. What did you say, sir? What, pay your share! Why, darn your hide, do you think we want pay? Do you take us for a lot of wolves? Here, help yourself, but don't let me hear you say any thing else about pay."

* * * * *

A passenger train was snow-bound in the East. "If we only had something to eat," some one said, "I wouldn't mind it so much. To hear those little children cry for bread sends a pang through me. Hello! here come a lot of men."

"Sandwiches, sandwiches fifty cents apiece. Want a sandwich, mister? Only fifty cents apiece. Nice fresh bread and excellent beef. We are farmers in this neighborhood and wouldn't take advantage of people in your perilous position. Madam, your little girl seems to be hungry. You'd better buy her one of these fine sandwiches. You never would regret it, I assure you. No money, eh? So goes the world. Some people have money and some haven't. As the old fellow in Shakespeare—forget his name—said: 'Put money in thy purse.'"

"My dear sir," said a miserable-looking man, "won't you please give me a sandwich? I am almost famished and haven't got a cent of money."

"Give you one! Why, I don't know you."

"But," said the famishing man, "in this case acquaintanceship is not necessary. I was hungry before I got on the train, and now I am positively starving. Can you not summon the pity of a Christian and relieve my awful distress?"

"You do look bad, for a fact," the honest farmer replied, "and while no doubt you brought misfortune upon yourself, I will not wave your folly in your face, but will help you out. Haven't a cent, you say. Well, here's a damaged sandwich you may have for a quarter. What, can't trade? Well, now, I warrant you here's a lady that will buy it for her little boy. Damaged sandwich, madam—misfit sandwich for half price. You will take it? Thank you."—Arkansaw Traveler.

THE NEW BOOTBLACK.

How He Was Received and Honored by His Colleagues.

A new kid came on the street yesterday and took up his stand at the post-office corner. He was from Toledo, and a bootblack. He hadn't yelled "shine 'em up" over four times, before the gang was on to him. No one knew him and no one had given him permission to set up in business. The small boys walked around him and criticised his kit, and the big boys drew off to hold a caucus. In about five minutes they came to:

Whereas, We don't know him, and he is an interloper; now, therefore

Resolved, That one of our number be delegated to punch his head."

The big frog in the puddle was accordingly deputized, and he gave his box in charge and sauntered up and walked around the stranger.

Stranger was very cool.

Delegate jumped at him to see if he would scare.

Stranger didn't scare.

Delegate knocked his hat off.

Stranger picked it up and put his back to the building.

Cries of "Sick him, Jack!" from the gang, and a few side-bets made among the smaller boys that the Toledo chap would fight.

Jack rolled up his sleeves, spit on his hands and made a rush. Stranger received him with two heavy thumps, and they clinched and went down, with Toledo on top.

"Lemme-up!"

"Don't have to!"

"Lemme up, I say!"

"Will you give up?"

"Yaas!"

"All right."

Jack was licked. He acknowledged it, but had something to say about a lame back, a sore thumb, a sprained ankle and loss of sleep. Convention convened again, and

Whereas, He's got grit and kin lick any of us; now, therefore

Resolved, That he's all right and shall be received as one of us."—Detroit Free Press.

SCIENCE AND INDUSTRY.

—The manufacture of orange wine is becoming an established industry in Florida. The factory at Clay Springs has just closed its season, having made 1,000 barrels. For this quantity a million and a half of oranges were pressed. The price paid for oranges delivered at the factory was $8 a thousand.

—Prof. Poel, of St. Petersburg, has found fifty per cent. of petroleum in the cod liver oil sold by one druggist, the adulterated article having the taste, smell and appearance of the genuine. Mineral oil is also frequently found in olive oil.

—A Paterson, (N. J.) machineit has completed a silk loom which occupies less space than a typewriter, and weaves silk handkerchiefs of a pretty pattern, four inches square. A child can operate it. Silk manufacturers of Paterson it is the smallest working loom ever made.

—In the early forms of electric incandescent lamps the filament was of platinum, and it was noticed that a thin film of the metal soon formed on the inside of the glass bulb. In recent investigations Dr. Alfred Berliner has found the phenomenon to be due to the tearing away of solid particles by the violent emission of gases the platinum had absorbed.

—Curious effects are known to be often produced by colors on persons and animals. The sight of an obnoxious color may induce an attack of hysterics, nausea, or a headache, or it may cause a violent fit of ill temper. The offending color is sometimes blue, sometimes yellow, but oftener red or scarlet. Scientific attention is being directed to these phenomena.

—Fifteen years ago there were only two shoe manufactories in Portland, Me., where now are several, employing 775 persons. For the current year these factories have turned out 841,000 pairs of boots, doing a business estimated at $3,580,000. There have been no threatened strikes, and only once or twice in the history of the trade has there arisen disagreement between employer and operatives.

—According to various practical tests, the gradual loss of elasticity frequently observed in articles made of vulcanized India rubber is due to the slow formation of sulphuric acid by the action of atmospheric moisture on sulphur present in the rubber. This action of the acid may be prevented by occasional prolonged washing of the article with water, or with water rendered slightly alkaline. In this way drainage tubes may be maintained in a supple condition for a considerable time.

—A very good quality of artificial ivory can be manufactured from the bones and hides of animals. The bones are macerated and bleached in chloride of lime for two weeks; then heated by steam, together with the hides, until a fluid mass is formed, and to this a small quantity of alum is added. After filtering and drying in the air it is hardened in an alum bath, and yields white, rough plates, which closely resemble ivory and are more easily worked than the natural product.

—An effort was recently made in France to prove to a number of peasants that a piece of "solid iron" is not in fact perfectly solid, but only relatively so. The iron was hammered in the presence of spectators until it became of perceptibly less dimensions than it contained before the hammering began. The experimenters considered this a triumphant proof of the elasticity and condensability of the iron; but the peasants explained the lessening of the iron's dimensions by saying that "some of the substance had been hammered out of it," and would not believe that it was a bit more solid after the hammering than it was before.

THE JEWELRY TRADE.

A Large Retailer Tells Why He Does Not Employ Women.

"You wonder why jewelers don't employ women as saleswomen more than they do? Well, there is a variety of reasons why they shouldn't.

"In the first place, customers won't rely upon a woman's judgment in the matter of gems. Suppose, for instance, you came into my store to buy your wife a $500 pair of earrings. Behind one counter is a pretty young woman—for, of course, if we employed women they would have to be pretty—and behind the other is a young man. Now, which of the two would you go to? Why, the young man, of course. When making such a purchase you would naturally prefer to be guided by his judgment than by that of a woman.

"Then another and very serious objection to the employment of women is that, as a rule, they wont stay with us long enough. We value our employes for the length of time they have been with us. All of our salesmen have been in our employ for a long time, some of them for over a quarter of a century. How many women would have stayed with us that long? Very few. Most women employed in stores marry after a few years' service.

"No, women are not suited to the jewelry business. It is true that they take a great interest in gems and jewelry, but the popular idea that they have a better knowledge of them than men is a mistaken one, and I do not know of any cases where they have been successfully employed as either buyers or saleswomen.

"One might suppose that the manufacture of jewelry was work in which women would succeed, but experience shows that such is not the case. In the factories the women perform what may be described as almost menial work, such as polishing and burnishing, and no matter how long they remain at the trade they rarely make any progress toward the higher branches, nor indeed do they show any inclination to do so."—Jewelers' Weekly.

CHAPTER 548.

AN ACT

To provide for the appointment of two superintendents to supervise and control the repairs and improvements of a public county road in Garrett county, known as the Legislative road leading from the West end of the covered bridge over Youghiogheny river, at Friendsville, in Garrett county, along the West side of said Youghiogheny river to Selbysport, as now traveled, and thence with said county road by Guard's store to the Pennsylvania line, and to authorize the County Commissioners of Garrett county to make a levy for the repairs and improvements of said road.

SECTION 1. Be it enacted by the General Assembly of Maryland, That the repairs and improvement and supervision of the public county road known as the Legislative road leading from the West end of the covered bridge over Youghiogheny river at Friendsville, in Garrett county, along the West side of said Youghiogheny river to Selbysport, as now traveled, and thence with said county road by Guard's store to the Pennsylvania line, be and the same is hereby placed under the charge and care of Joshua M. Friend and George Dunham.

SEC. 2 And be it enacted, That the County Commissioners of Garrett county be, and the same are hereby authorized and required at the time of making the annual levy in the year eighteen hundred and eighty eight, to levy the sum of eight hundred dollars in the hands of said superintendents, provided for by this act for the repair of said road hereinbefore designated and to be expended equally by said superintendent upon said road.

SEC. 3 And be it enacted, That said superintendents shall before entering upon their duties, execute a bond in the same manner that road supervisors in Garrett county are required to bond.

SEC. 4. And be it enacted, That George Dunham shall have charge of that part of said road which passes through lands supposed to be owned by George H. Williams, that Joshua M. Friend shall have charge of the remainder of said road, and that each shall on or before the first day of September, A. D. eighteen hundred and eighty-nine, render a specific account to the County Commissioners of their expenditures upon said road, and shall return their vouchers for such expenditures, and said superintendents shall each be allowed as an item of said expense, the sum of two dollars per day for their services whilst engaged upon said road.

SEC. 5. And be it enacted, That should either of said superintendents fail to qualify as required or should either resign or die, his duties shall devolve upon the other, and should both fail to qualify, resign, or die, the County Commissioners shall appoint two superintendents to take their places with powers obligatory.

SEC. 6. And be it enacted, That all labor employed upon said road by said superintendents shall be paid at the rate allowed by road supervisors on other county roads in said county.

SEC. 7. And be it enacted, That this Act shall take effect from the date of its passage.

I hereby certify that the foregoing is a true copy of An Act of the General Assembly of Maryland, passed January Session, 1888.

How to Iron Shirts.

You will need two rough-faced polishing irons, which can be procured for you by your hardware dealer. With these in your posession proceed to dampen your starched clothes. For collars and cuffs have about one yard of muslin, dip this in clean water and wring out as dry as you can by hand. Place the collars in alternate layers, two thick across the cloth, fold over and continue placing them until they are all in. Have only one thickness of cloth between each layer, as more than this will make them too damp. Now roll up tight and place under a weight of about twenty-five pounds for thirty-five minutes, take out of the fold and put them in lawers together, roll again in the cloth and put under the weight for several hours. They will then be ready for ironing. Have a little common wax for the irons to make them smooth and have them hot, not too hot so as they will scorch.

Should the irons have a tendency to stick, place some table salt on a smooth board and rub the face of the iron over it until smooth. The shirts should be dampened like the collars. Instead of using muslin use the lowest part of shirt, which fold over the bosom and interfold the wristbands. Let the neckband be covered in the fold, now lay them one on the other in a pile for several hours with no weight, and when you are nearly ready to iron them, roll up tight seperately; let them remain thus for about an hour and they will be in fine condition for ironing. To do good work use plenty of pressure—the more the better—as one of the first requisites of a good ironer is strength. Now, with these instructions and practice you can get your shirts, collars and cuffs just as stiff and glossy as the finest new work.—Detroit Free Press.

Mr. Pettifer, an intelligent English worker in electric plating and secretary of the Workmen's Association for Defense of British Industry, after experiencing the evil effects of free trade in his own country and observing at length the benefits of the American tariff system says:

"Any person who has to earn a living in America as a producer must first become crazy before he becomes a free trader, and the farmers must be the craziest of the whole lot to think of such a thing. Before any of your workingmen (either engaged in manufacturing or agriculture) talk about free trade, let them send one of their number over here to see what it is doing for this country; let him walk about for six months looking for a job, until his coat gets ragged and his shoes get thin, and he gets the thinnest of all, and everywhere he asks for work he will be told that the Germans and Belgians are doing the work cheaper than he can do it; then let them send for him home again and hear what he says about free trade. If it is the surplus revenue that is causing the trouble, send it to some free trade country. You never knew them to have a surplus; or if you don't like to do that, take it out to sea and sink it, or bury it, or do anything, in fact, rather than adopt free trade; that is to say, if you do not want foreign competition to ruin your manufacturing industries, and by so doing ruin your farmers by robbing them of their home market."

Wise Words.

Hope is a good breakfast but a bad supper.

Time and adversity are two powerful destroyers.

The first step in debt is like the first step in falsehood.

Vice stings us even in our pleasuses, but virtue consoles us even in our pains.

Cheerfulness or joyfulness is the atmosphere under which all things thrive.

A life spent worthily should be measured by a nobler line, by deeds, not years.

Any one who has any one of the virtues strongly developed has a coloring of them all in his character.

There is many a heart that dwells in its soul, like a hermit in his cell, its own sad and sorrowing confessor.

A jest is often a weak and silly thing; a witticism, a cold and cruel thing; but a joke is ever the fun of humor.

History is a mighty drama, enacted upon the theatre of Time, with suns for lamps, and Eternity for a background.

Success don't impose itself on any one. Those who win must reach for things, and at the same time cultivate their grip.

All the real wits and humorists are a sedate people; their wit and humor is worked out soberly with line and plummet.

He who decides in any case, without hearing the other side of the question, though he may determine justly, is not therefore just.

Those who excel in strength are not most likely to show contempt for weakness. A man does not despise the weakness of a child.

All that we posess of truth and wisdom is a borrowed good. You will be always poor, if you do not posess the only true riches.

The living get credit for what they might be quite as much as for what they are. Posterity judges a man by the best rather than the average of his attainments.

Repose and cheerfulness are the badge of the gentleman—repose in energy. The Greek battle pieces are calm; the heroes, in whatever violent actions engaged, retain a serene aspect.

To be a good critic, a man must have all the intrinsic elements of a good author, and yet while we have but few good authors, even the solitudes and waste places teem with critics.

We seem to have four kinds of people—those who are moving forward, those who are on the move backward, those who are standing still and those who are going to start in some direction soon.

Life consists not of a series of illustrious actions or elegant enjoyments the greater part of our time passes in compliance with necessities in the performance of daily duties, in the removal of small inconveniences, in the procurement of petty pleasures, and we are well or ill at ease as the main stream of life glides on smoothly, or is ruffled by small obstacles and frequently observations.

"How glad you must be that your husband has quit visiting saloons!"

"Yes, indeed. He promised me when he went into business for himself that he would never go inside a saloon again, and he has kept his word. It must be a struggle for poor George, but he bears up heroically."

"What is his business now?"

"He keeps a drug store."—Chicago Tribune.

HOMŒOPATHY.—32,655 cases in European hospitals receiving Homœopathic treatment showed a death rate of 4.4 per cent., while 119,630 cases under old treatment had a death rate of 10.5. (See Sharps' Tracts.)

Official figures in Bavaria give Homœopathy a death rate in Cholera of 6.75 against 48.50 of old treatments. (Dr. Rath)

These figures, whose accuracy has never been refuted, should make every one give the matter a more than passing thought, and it would be well to write for a copy of our Book Catalogue, and "Medical Index," also, if interested in live stock, of our "Veterinary Index." Historical Facts.

[From the Cumberland Courier.]

CUMBERLAND, MD., May 3, 1888.

In recent years there has been considerable written and published in the newspapers and periodicals in reference to the old Braddock's road, and its successor, the National road, but such writings have been rather of a sketchy than historic character. They did not appear to be sufficiently strong in research and authenticity to have made them valuable to readers in search of real information. There would seem to be room, and even necessity for something more on the subject, if carefully abstracted and collected from reliable sources, which have been and now are rapidly disappearing so far as any human recollections and traditions are concerned. It shall be the purpose of this paper to contribute something, however small, to history; perhaps more accurately speaking, material for history; and if the general reader should find additionally something of a retinisic and entertaining character, so much more accomplished.

Braddck, or Braddock's road, takes its name from Gen. Edward Braddock a veteran officer of the British army—a man of more faults than virtue, but he was a thorough and successful sodier in European tactics, and that was sufficient for military reputation in that part of the world. He disembarked his little army of two crack regiments at Alexandria, Va., early in the spring of 1755. This royal force, with some Virginia, Maryand and North Carolina levies took up its line of march from this base (Alexandria) in the latter part of April for some distance over the same road the Union army gallantly marched to the now historic field of Bull Run with the same disastrous and humiliating results. As to the first campaign three years were needed to repair and become ready for the successful one of 1758, and in the latter four long bloody years such as history knew not of before. From this scene over the subsequent route of Gen. J. E. Jackson's army, reversed to Fort Loudon (now Winchester) then bearing North to the Upper Potomac, with or close to it till the great Cacapon was reached, then over to Maryland, and up by way of "Skipton" the fortified abode of Col. Thomas Cresap, in after times greatly rated as a frontiersman of the defensive and offensive kind. Fort Cumberland at the confluence of Wills creek and Potomac was reached 19th of May. This fort was built in 1754 upon the site of an earlier and weaker work then known as Mount Pleasant, upon a stragetic hill in the basin in which the city of Cumberland was subsequently built. It was named in honor of the Duke of Cumberland, the Capt. Gen. of the British army, a very popular man in his day, as shown by the many places in this country that still bear his entitled name.

On the 10th of June Braddock, with his army of 1,400 men, started upon his ill-fated, or rather ill-conducted, expedition from Cumberland to capture the annoying and menacing Fort Duquesne, now the great city of Pittsburg. In the start from Cumberland the natural and best route up Wills Creek was ignored, and a more Westerly deflection, by way of Sandy Gap in Wills mountain, adapted, or rather followed. Up Jennings Run through a gap in Dan's mountain, onward to the "Savages," "The Shades of Death," "Little Meadows," a place already familiar to Washington, now one of the most charming in all the Alleghanies; next the "Little Crossings" were reached, then "Bear Camps" in the mountain heights, then downward to "Squaws Fort," next "Big Crossings," "Great Meadows," "Rock Fort," "Gests," "Yohogheny," "Great Swamp," "Jacob's Cabin," "Salt Lick," "Thickety Run" and "Monongahela camp." Only so much of the route as lay beyond Fort Necessity was his own choice and engineering. All, or nearly so, the line from Alexandria to Cumberland had been gone over by Washington and was familiar to him. Only a year before he had raised and led a military expedition in the nature of a daring recognizance, with artilery and wagons in the direction of Fort Duquesne, and lost all but honor and youthful reputation. So in reality there was not much after all in what has been known as Braddock's route, or road of his own original choice, or engineering such as was practiced and understood in those days. It has been said by eminent authority that trained engineers in traversing mountain ranges, scientifically follow the depressions and gaps, instinctively found and pursued by the wild beasts. No doubt such was the origin of the route of Braddock's road, at least mainly so westward of Fort Cumberland.

For some reason not now understood this route as a military road, though open and passible, fell into military disfavor after Braddock's disaster, as Gen. Forbs in his movement in the autumn of 1758 upon Duquesne, selected a new route by way of Raystown, Bedford and Loyal Hannan, at the expense of loss in time and treasure. This way not having been opened before. But the former road, especially in later years, grew in public favor for civil use; and was also the natural and best way from Fort Cumberland for expeditions to check Indian forays, notwithstanding the fall of Fort Duquesne, continued for a number of years to annoy the hardy people living on the belt between partial civilization and savagery pure. After the close of the Revolutionary war and the establishment of a national government, the more densely populated districts east of the mountains began to send their surplus, or migratory people, to the new and rich lands beyond. Most of the early migrations from the Middle States passed over this road. The cry then was, ho for "the Ohio" and "Kentuck." However many emigrants from Maryland, Northern Virginia and Eastern Pennsylvania settled upon the fertile lands of Southwestern Pennsylvania.

The Iron Chancellor.

Bismarck as an orator has been compared to Cromwell. Though he makes no pretense to being a speaker yet his practice does not always comport with his theories, as is shown by the fact that on important occasions he holds the floor for several hours at a time. Bismarck, however, would in all probability prove his consistency by claiming that what he says is not mere idle words. It is more interesting to watch Bismarck when making one of his great speeches than to listen to him. His words are far stronger and make more impression in cold type than when they fall from his lips. This shows their inherent force and weight. His delivery slow; he always uses the exact word he wants and his facts are marshaled in clear and lucid order. When he first rises to speak a great silence falls upon the Reichstag; not even a whisper is heard, and the deputies of all shades of political opinion crowd as closely as possible around him, fearful lest they might lose a single syllable of what he says. Bismarck has little or no rhetorical action. His motions are not graceful, his voice is husky and unmusical, and some of his sentences are as long as those of our own Evarts. During a debate he makes notes in a coarse, scrawling hand. When attacked by some keen opponents he grows nervous, shifts in his seat, his pen shakes between his fingers and very often his hand goes menacingly to his sword-hilt, for Bismarck, while he is the first civil officer in the Empire, is at the same time a General of cavalry, and always wears the undress uniform in the Reichstag.

When aroused his ebullitions of passion are frequently terrible. His great frame quivers with emotion, and his gray-blue eyes flash fire as he turns toward the benches of his adversaries and demands to know who it was that hissed him. Scenes of this character, however, are of rare occurrence in recent years. He is merciless in retort, unsparing of persons, no matter their age, their personal services to himself or to the Empire. He posesses a caustic humor which he uses with great effect. A master of invective, his coarseness of speech very often defeats his own object. One of his countrymen, speaking on this point, has described him as "an Achilles in courage, he is a Thersites in debate as often as the candid censure of friends or the vicious taunts of foes goad him into the loss of his temper." Bismarck has in an extraordinary degree the art of facility of embodying in a terse phrase some great national aspiration which throws his immediate audience into raptures of enthusiasm, and thenceforth becomes a battle-cry from one end of Germany to the other. "God is with me," will, in all probability, outlive the Empire, as Seward's "higher law', and "irrepressible conflict" survive the great anti-slavery agitation and the civil war.

Prince Bismarck is seen to best advantage in his celebrated informal receptions and in his home life. He is a man of striking personal appearance. He is six feet two inches in height and of splendid proportions in every respect. His head is very large, of great breadth, well shaped, and rests on a great neck, which rises firmly above his giant frame. The forehead is large and bold, the lower half seamed and furrowed; the upper portion smooth and shiny. The eyes are full, steel blue in color, and protrude far out from the brows, which are covered with great bunches of hair. The nose is large and aristocratic looking; the mouth firm, covered by a heavy grizzly moustache; the jaws which appear to have the solidity of iron converge in a massive, finely cut chin. The expression of the face is solemn, earnest, inexorable, implacable. Paul Lindau once visited the studio of Prof. Shaper, and saw there the busts of Bismarck, Moltke and Richard Wagner, which he described as "three of the most marvelous heads that one can see anywhere, and beside which all others look more or less insignificant." Mr. Lowe, Bismarck's biographer, made inquiries afterward of Prof. Shaper, and says that of the three heads Wagner had much the largest; that Moltke's is remarkable for its beautifully symmetrical and perfect poise, while Bismarck's is remarkable for its rugged bulk and strength, and for its abnormal breadth above the ears, which, according to phrenologists, would indicate cambativeness. At any rate, a Berlin hatter says, as the result of his cranialogical examinations, that of all German tribes the Mecklenburgers have the broadest heads, but that no Mecklenburger wears so large a hat as the hero of Varzin.

Didn't go Dry.

A man who had gone to Tennessee to buy a stock farm, after looking at a place which seemed to suit him, said:

"Does this spring go dry?"

"No, sir," said the owner of the place. "I have been living in this neighborhood for thirty years and have never known that spring to go dry."

The prospector bought the farm. Six months afterwards he sought the man who had sold it to him, and asked:

"I want to tell you that you are an old liar."

"I bought a stock farm from you about six months ago."

"Yes, sir, that's a fact."

"I asked you if a certain spring ever went dry?"

"Yes, I believe you did."

"And you told me that it did not?"

"Yes, I remember."

"But, sir, it is as dry as a powder horn."

"Wait a minute. I told you that the spring didn't go dry?"

"Yes, you did."

"And you say there's no water there?"

"Not a drop."

"Well, then, it's not a spring. When any thing goes dry it's not a spring, but simply a hole in the ground. Webster tells us that a spring is a stream of water flowing out of the ground, and if there is not water flowing out of the ground at the place which you designated, why, it is not a spring. If you had asked me if the water gave out I might have told you yes, but as it was I was compelled to yield to an impulse of truth and say that the spring did not go dry. Sorry you are dissatisfied with the farm. You ought to be a little more explicit."—Arkansaw Traveler.

HOMOEOPATHY.—A good Homœopathic book—a "domestic physician"—is a medical missionary in many families and a trusty adviser in all; to one of these add a case of Homœopathic medicines and the family is as well prepared to meet sudden emergencies and sickness as human foresight can provide. The cost is not great, and when compared with the advantages sinks out of sight. Catalogue and price list mailed free on request. WE DON'T KEEP THEM LONG.

While others sing of the coming spring,
Mine is a sadder song.
Of the children sweet around our feet—
O, we don't keep the children long!

Not far the day till they'll fly away,
Away from this home of ours,
Just as the snow in spring will go,
Just as in fall, the flowers.
The babies we bless, with fond caress,
And love still deeper, fonder,
Like birds will sing, like birds will wing,
Like birds the wide world wander.

The laddie wee, upon my knee,
A man shall meet my vision,
While other feet as swift, as sweet,
May tread the field elysian.
The little girl whose hair you curl,
Her sweet rose-mouth soft kissing,
Away will trip, away will slip,
And you shall do the missing.

We'll still be near and still be dear,
But oh, with eyes grown clearer,
We'll surely see that there must be
Another nearer, dearer.
We know that best is God's behest
And thank Him for the giving
Of each soft dove, whose nestling love
Makes life more worth the living.

For if I could name sound most good
And cheeriest to a mother,
'Twould be the shout when boys rush out
And rush back with another.
Though sweeter than this and deeper bliss
Is to dream when day is dying,
And on your breast in sleepy rest,
A tired little head is lying.

O, men we shall see, oh, women to be!
Some day we shall love you duly.
But now when you're small and our all in all
Most tenderly and most truly.
So while you stay we'll thrust away
Silence, sorrow, sadness,
And fill to the brim from dawning dim
Every day with gladness.

Let others sing of the joys of spring,
Mine is a gladder song.
Of the children who meet around our feet,
Their laughter loud, their kisses sweet,
Their love which makes all life complete—
Though we don't keep the children long!

TWO WAYS OF ASKING.

Miss Dolly's Lesson in Love and How to Manage.

"Tears, idle tears! Niobe dissolved! My dear child, what on earth is the matter?"

Time: Four of a summer afternoon. Place: A pretty boudoir, furnished in the fashion of to-day, modeled on the style of Louis Quinze, with a dash of "Liberty" thrown in, and modern accessories, such as crystal flower vases, three-volume novels, and photograph-stands, juxtaposed with Queen Anne silver and knicknacks ancient and modern. Dramatis Personae: a graceful figure in white, flung with an air of desolation on the floor beside a sofa, her charming neck visible beneath delicious little rows of golden curls, her frame shaken by sobs; an older woman standing a few yards distant, dark, beautifully dressed, "good-looking enough for any thing" without being distinctly handsome, aged somewhere within the right side of thirty, and wearing an expression half compassionate, half amused. There is a suspicion of raillery in her voice, which is felt and deeply resented by the fair sorrower. Anger is often akin to sorrow as pity is to love, and the voice which responds to the question when reiterated is decidedly petulant.

"I wish you would go away and leave me alone."

"I shall not do any thing of the sort," returns the other. "I am going to talk to you and I do not care in the least whether you are angry or not, although I had much rather you would take my remarks in good part."

"O," responds the voice, still smothered in the sofa-cushions, but losing nothing of its resentful quality. "I know how clever you are, and that you think that you can manage every one's affairs a great deal better than themselves."

She intends this to be a "nasty one," and, as a matter of fact, it does not fall very pleasantly on the ears of her interlocutor; but she sits down on the sofa, and replies with good humor: "Well, my love, I may confidently say that I could manage your affairs a great deal better than you manage them yourself, and that if I were you, I would have Mr. Clement Lascelles at my feet in a very short time."

"Perhaps you have him there now!" says the prostrate one, ceasing to sob and trying to sneer instead.

"Well, Dolly dear, to tell you the truth, I fall myself to recognize in that young man the charm which I observe he has for—for some people; indeed, I do consider him a poser, with an exasperatingly good opinion of himself. If you ask my candid opinion, I think that he would be all the better for being kic—"

Dorothy flounces up in a moment. "I will trouble you not to insult my friends," she cries, with flaming cheeks. "And it is not very easy to believe your sincerity when he was sitting in your pocket all last night, and you were out walking with him for two hours this morning."

"In any case," replies Mrs. Dalton coolly, "your remarks prove that I have had time and opportunity to form an opinion of his qualities. I don't deny that he is good-looking, but it is intolerable that he should be so conscious of it. I admit that he is not without a certain amount of cleverness, and has been fairly well educated; but I violently object to his thinking himself able to sit in judgment on people a good deal older and cleverer than himself."

"On you, for instance!" cries Dolly.

"No, I was not thinking of myself, though I admit the soft impeachment (the one regarding my age, at least); and what I dislike most of all is his placing himself on a pedestal to be looked at and longed for by—by pretty, silly little girls, who ought to know better."

Dolly stiffens her back, and says, with an assumption of dignity which sits indifferently well upon her: "If you will excuse me, I should prefer not discussing Mr. Lascelles with you. You are perfectly welcome to your opinion of him, and I claim the liberty of retaining mine." Then, her majesty, suddenly, toppling over, she says vindictively, in quite a different tone of voice: "Perhaps you think I am such a fool that I don't see through your mean abuse of him!"

"That I may win and wear him myself?" suggests Mrs. Dalton, quite good-humoredly. "No, my dear and acute child, believe me, you have not fathomed and unmasked my baseness this time. I know your dear and sensitive little heart is set upon this fascinating young man. I don't think there is really any harm in him, and I am magnanimous enough to be ready to show you how to obtain his affections, and to make him the suppliant instead of you."

"Suppliant!" cries Dolly, with fresh flames from her burning heart ascending to her cheeks.

"Yes, suppliant. Every one, my love, can see—he most of all—how you hang upon his smiles, and despair when he is indifferent or capricious."

Wrath makes Dolly absolutely speechless. If looks, etc., etc., Mrs. Dalton would, etc., etc.

"Don't be a goose, Dolly," resumes her friend, not having suffered any visible injury from the lightning glances to which she had been subjected. "Keep your temper, and reap the advantages of my superior age and experience."

"Keep them to yourself!" retorts Dolly, tartly.

"The first I must, whether or no, but the latter shall be yours. Come, dear child, you know I am fond of you; believe me when I say I would not have your enchanter as a gift, and also that I am desirous so see him subjugated by you. He shall be yours, I promise, and I will only make one condition."

Dolly seats herself on the sofa and allows Mrs. Dalton to take her hand, though she looks rather sulky. Still, she does, poor little girl, regard Mr. Clement Lascelles as the first prize in the marriage lottery, and is willing to take upon herself his part of the contract; to worship him with her body, and endow him with all her worldly goods. For in a small way she is an heiress, though he is not destitute of money, and has an excellent position. Truth to tell, the young man is not what is called "a bad sort;" he has good looks, good brains, and good manners, when he is not egged on to taking liberties by the silly flatteries of the other sex. Poor Dolly loves him madly, and has innocently shown her pleasure in his notice and her sufferings at his neglect. Mrs. Dalton having paused to give due effect to her words, Dolly, after a moment, is constrained to say rather sulkily, "Well?"

"You must take the vow first."

"What vow?" with latent irritation.

"The vow never to tell any human being—Mr. Lascelles least of all—that I, or, for the matter of that, any one, advised you how to act toward him."

"O, of course, I promise."

"Promises are like pie-crust," replies Mrs. Dalton; then, with an air of great solemnity, she goes to a small bookcase at the end of the room, and comes back with a Bible. "You must kiss the book," she says.

"O, no," cried Dolly, frightened. For she knows that she never kept a secret in her life, and is terrified at being put on an oath which she may break in spite of herself, a few hours later.

"Well," says Mrs. Dalton, firmly, "do you want him or do you not?"

"Yes," cries Dolly, with tears in her eyes, "I do."

"Then kiss the book."

"But how do I know there is any thing in what you are going to tell me?" says doubting Dolly.

"Because I say so. Do I not know the world and men?"

Dolly takes the book, trembling. "What am I to say?" she falters.

"Say: 'I swear not to tell Clement Lascelles or any other person that Marian Dalton advised me how to win his affections.'"

With a sudden desperate gesture Dolly kisses the book and repeats the formula. "Now then!" she cries, excitedly.

Mrs. Dalton takes up her parable. "Clement is really fond of you—he would be exceedingly fond of you, if you only allowed him."

"If I allowed him!" gasps Dolly.

"Yes," repeats her adviser. "By allowing him. I don't mean throwing yourself at his head, and showing him that you adore him; but by making him doubt your love and his own capacity for pleasing you. Different men want different treatment. There is nothing so delightful to some as to see and know that a woman cares for them—it adds ten-fold to their devotion for her; but I am bound to say these men are in the minority. Most of them are far more stimulated by doubts and fears—the woman becomes more dear as she seems more distant, and, as a rule, when a man is literally crazy about one of our sex, it is because she has worried and tormented and kept him on a perpetual balance between hope and fear. Now you, and others like you, have so hung upon Clement Lascelles' looks and words, have so positively shown him that he is a great being, a lofty intellect, a rival to Apollo, that it is not likely that he is coming off his pedestal to worship his worshipers. Your only chance, my dear, is to abandon your worship; to counterfeit indifference as best you may, and to let a gradual and startling conviction come over him that you were not really in earnest, after all."

"It is very easy to talk," pouts Dolly.

"It is very easy to act, too," returns Marian, "if you are positively certain that your plan of campaign is going to be successful."

"How do I know that it will be?"

"Try it for twenty-four hours and see how it works."

"But I don't know what I am to do."

"You must be absolutely guided by me, and not act for one moment on your own responsibility."

"I dare say it will turn out all wrong," says Dolly, ungraciously, and that I shall lose him altogether."

"All right," replies Mrs. Dalton, losing patience and rising from her seat. "Do as you like. After all, what on earth does it matter to me whether you are happy or miserable? Go your own way."

Dolly springs up and catches her by the arm. "No, no, Marian, don't go; don't be angry. I will do whatever you tell me."

"Then hearken and obey. Dick Wyndham is coming to-night. You know he is rather fond of you. Talk to him, and to him only, all the evening. Do not glance in Mr. Lascelles' direction; I will keep my eye on him and report to you how he takes it, if he approaches you in the evening, look bored and distraite, and reply to him by monosyllables."

"I shall never be able to do it," groans Dolly.

"Not with such a big stake to win?" (a little sarcastically.)

"Ah! you don't know what it is to love!" cries Dolly.

"Not as you do, certainly," retorts Marian, with an inflection of voice which Dolly is not acute enough to catch.

Dick Wyndham arrives in time for dinner. He is rather fond of Dolly—he is exceedingly hard up, and wants her money even more than her sweet self. He is bright and amusing, has a considerable fund of small talk, is devoted to sport, and has not Mr. Lascelles' aesthetic taste or lofty manner of showing superiority. He has a genuine contempt for a man who talks art and plays classical music as Mr. Lascelles has for one who thinks of nothing but hunting, lawn-tennis and polo, though he rides fairly straight and is an average shot himself.

Not a little disgusted is Lascelles, therefore, when Dolly, whose sorrowfulness and its cause have greatly soothed his complacency for the last twenty-four hours, seems to have eyes and ears for no one but this half-witted soldier at dinner. She is looking charming in a dress of a delicious apricot tint, which he has not seen before, (he is a great connoisseur of dress;) if he could only catch her eye, he would beam on her one of those glances which would have intoxicated her maiden soul. But whereas it has been his wont to meet her tender pleading glances every two minutes heretofore, to-night he might be Banquo's ghost, and she one of Macbeth's guests, for all she seems to see him. His memory serves him up various sneering and savage quotations on the theme of souvent femme varie. He is so little congenial to his neighbor at dinner that she expresses the most unfavorable sentiments regarding him in the drawing-room later on, causing Dolly to halt between the desire to defend him hotly, and a sense of pleasure that some one besides herself has suffered from his coldness. Mrs. Dalton makes a pretext for calling Dolly aside.

"Excellent, my love!" she cries, in high, good humor, pressing the girl's arm. "He is enraged beyond measure. He scarcely took his eyes off you. Go on and prosper!"

Thus stimulated, Dolly does go on, and prospers exceedingly. When Mr. Lascelles and Dick approach simultaneously she devotes her whole attention to the latter, and has scarcely a word for the former, who presently retires in tragic dudgeon, and leans against the wall looking like Hamlet, Lord Byron, or any other blighted being in the sulks.

In reality, Dick is the person most to be pitied, although his face is alight with smiles, and his heart aglow with anticipations of possessing a lovely woman, and satisfying the debtors who, metaphorically speaking, take him by the throat, crying: "Pay me what thou owest." Innocent creature that he is, he suspects no treachery, nor dreams that milk-white bosom palpitates for the "infernal young prig" over the way. Dolly will play billiards and lawn-tennis with him on the morrow; in the afternoon they are to ride together; and, as he sits smoking after the ladies have retired, he reflects on the most approved method of asking a certain question.

Up to this moment Clement Lascelles has not seen any necessity for putting his fate to the touch, because he had been absolutely certain of winning; but now this is the first time he has a rival—a rival that is progressing by leaps and bounds in the lady's favor—he sees that something must be done. He can not have been befooled. She loves him or—or he, the adept at reading the secrets of souls, must for once have been deluded. Perish the thought!

With gloomy brow and stately step he retires from the smoking-room and seeks the solitude of his chamber, but not his couch. The dawn has long broken ere he courts repose.

"Marian!" cries Dolly, a few hours later, bursting into her friend's room while that lady—no early riser at the best of times—still nestles among her pillows, "read this!" and she seats herself on the bed in a state of great excitement, whilst Mrs. Dalton languidly peruses the letter thrust into her hands.

"I call it great impertinence," she remarks, returning it to Dolly.

"Impertinence!" with wide-open eyes.

"Certainly!" and Mrs. Dalton, taking it back, quotes from it:

"'Though I can not pretend to offer you the one great passion of a life—sad passages beyond the ken of other mortals have tarnished the pure luster which once surrounded my soul as with a halo—yet, if you will take a heart weary with the sorrows of the ages, dimmed by the darkling doubts with which an intimate knowledge of humanity clouds the spirit, take me to your tender breast and let me find shelter there from life's griefs and disappointments. What recompense a heart blighted as mine has been can bestow I will strive to make to your angelic sympathy and goodness.'"

"Is it not beautiful!" cries Dolly, in an ecstasy. "I wonder what he means! I suppose some horrid woman threw him over once!"

"I think it is exceedingly impertinent, and I hope you will resent it."

"Resent it!" almost shrieks Dolly. "Why, it is a declaration!"

"Get me my blotting-book off that table," commands Mrs. Dalton, resolutely. "Now," she says, beginning to write, "you will answer it in this way, or I wash my hands of you, and to-morrow he will have reduced you to abject misery again."

She writes hurriedly for a few minutes, and then, with heightened color, reads the draft aloud:

"Dear Mr. Lascelles—I have received your melancholy letter, and am truly sorry for all you seem to have suffered. But, for my part, I look upon the world as a very pleasant place, and have made up my mind to enjoy myself as much as possible; so as I could not console you, and you, with the ideas you express, would make me miserable, I think you had much better look for somebody whose temperament is more like your own. I suppose you mean me to understand that you have been much more in love with some one else than you are with me, which, to say the least, is not very flattering. No! I must have an undivided heart, or none at all. Your sincere friend, D. S."

There is a desperate fight between Mrs. Dalton and Dolly before the latter can be persuaded to copy and forward what she considers a heartless and flippant missive. In the end Marian triumphs, Mr. Lascelles does not appear to breakfast, and Dolly, though her soul quakes within her, laughs and talks to Dick.

Later in the morning, when they are playing lawn-tennis, Clement Lascelles, feeling much smaller than he has ever done in his life, seeks counsel from Mrs. Dalton. With an angelic smile she alternately pricks him with daggers and makes him gulp down bowls of poison; but she does him an excellent turn by taking a good deal of the nonsense out of him. He confesses that he adores Dolly. How, oh how, is he to win her! Has he the ghost of a chance?

Mrs. Dalton, looking solemn, declares her inability to reply to this. She hints, too, at Dolly's youth and love of amusement. She hints, too, at Dick's unflagging good spirits and temper. And the upshot of it is that when Dick returns crestfallen, from his afternoon ride with Dolly, having spoken and received his answer, Clement Lascelles carries off the young lady to her boudoir on pretence of wanting to be shown something, and, replacing the melancholy of Hamlet by the conquering airs of young Lovelace, takes her in her arms, swears he has been a fool, and has never really loved any one but her sweet self, and that if she accepts him her life shall be one round of pleasure.

Twenty minutes later, Dolly has passed on all his embraces and more to Marian.

"How clever you are, darling!" she says, admiringly.

To which Mrs. Dalton replies: "Now you know how to manage him, make good use of your knowledge."—London World.

A Moving Dialogue.

Tenant—This house to rent?

Landlord—Yes'm. Don't it say so in the window?

Tenant—Humph! Any sewer gas?

Landlord—I don't understand you, ma'am.

Tenant—Is the plumbing good?

Landlord—You can see for yourself, ma'am (insinuatingly). You look as if you could appreciate a good job of plumbing when you see it.

Tenant—Thank you. Did anybody ever die in any of the rooms?

Landlord—I don't understand you, ma'am. Mrs. DeSmith Jones has just moved out.

Tenant—Oh! did she live here?

Landlord—Yes, ma'am; those marks on the walls are where she hung her extra dresses.

Tenant—I'll take the house.—Detroit Free Press.

WINNING SUCCESS.

How Any Healthy Man Can Hew Out a Fortune on a Farm.

There are thousands of mechanics, laborers and farmers who are poor, and many of them suffering for some of the necessaries of life, who are so from their own fault, not for want of opportunity or the frowns of Providence. It is not luck. It is because they will not work, and economize and save. In every township and in nearly every neighborhood in Iowa can be found men and families in good circumstances who a few ago years had nothing, except an honest determination to win success. The writer can count up any time a dozen men who are worth from $10,000 to $25,000 who came to him years ago with empty hands to work by the month on the farm. They were inspired with the true ideas of living and prospering, and some of them now are taunted by their shiftless neighbors as oppressive capitalists. We care not how cruel some may consider the remark, but when you see men with families starving themselves on a rented farm for a score of years, it is safe to class them as poor white trash, who deserve no better fate. There are better things for them if they will only win them. And any person can do so. But not by spending more than they earn, not by loafing in town, in fishing and hunting—in idle visiting—not in selling a calf when it should be raised to a noble beef.

Our patience is frequently aroused when we reflect how many thousands all about us are in poverty and who probably imagine Providence is against them and that they are the unfortunate subjects of bad luck, when in fact it is their own perversity. It is not luck, but unthrift and laziness. Any man with health can hew out a fortune by hard working, vigorous enterprise. Look at this taken from an exchange:

Nelson Crane, Jr., of Union township, this county, or "Little Dick," as he is familiarly called, commenced farming nine years ago. He was in debt for his land, had no horse and no money, but he bought on credit two old mares for $120. He has sold at different times $1,000 worth of horses, has paid the debt on his land, has a good house, stables, etc., and at his sale on the 21st sold over $1,200 worth of property, of which $986 was horses to-wit: one six-year-old-mare, $210; one eight-year-old-mare, $239.50; one four-year-old mare, $247; one two-year-old-mare, $96.50; one yearling filly, $93; one yearling filly, $100.

This is not luck, but industry, economy, with an unwavering determination to win, and all can win who deserve it.—Des Moines Register.

PALESTINE'S FLORA.

Bible Plants Whose Beauty Lies Chiefly in their Hallowed Association.

It must not be supposed that the flora of the Holy Land is meager. On the contrary, it is strikingly rich and diversified. There are twice as many species of plants native to Palestine as there are in the very much wider area of the British Isles. But it is only on account of their economic utility, or because of their suitability for moral and spiritual illustrations, that they are mentioned by the inspired writers. The geographical conditions of Palestine are so varied and its climate is so favorable to vegetable growth that no botanist will feel astonished at the richness of its flora. Of Oriental types there are the splendid acacias, and their brightly colored parasite, the loranthus; the denizens of the mountain include the oak, the maple, the magnificent cedar and the pretty oxyria; among the trees are the carob, the terebinth, the olive and pistachio, the bay, the myrtle and the oleander; crowds of orchids and anemones, lillies and pinks, cyclamens and echiums, and many other snowy flowers occur in such profusion as to lead Canon Tristram to compare the scene with the Garden of Eden; while everywhere are seen most of the blossoms that ornament the English wayside and hedgerow—the buttercup and daisy, the campion and corn-poppy, the dog-rose and bryony, the willow-herb and germander speedwell, the herbrobret and stitchwort, the wild mint and selfheal, the groundsel and dandelion, and others familiar to us. The chief attraction, however, of the Palestinian flora does not lie in its profusion, nor even in its beauty, but in its hallowed associations. We can not help feeling impressed even by the simple daisy and buttercup of those pastures over which Abraham walked when, by Divine direction, he pitched his tent in the land of Promise. The beautiful tulips and orchards shine with added charms when we reflect that it was flowers like these, and growing where they now flourish, that David, the ruddy-faced shepherd lad, plucked while guarding his father's flocks. These charming anemones and tinted or spotless lilies that transfigure the plains and ponds of Judea seem to speak to our very soul as they re-echo the sweet and oft-needed lessons of trust and contentment which the Saviour drew from them.—The Quiver.

Let Your Motives be Good.

It is the motive that, more than any thing else, renders an action good or bad. However fair the look of an action may be, if the right motive be wanting, the action is hollow; if the motive be a bad one, the action is rotten at the core. Who cares for an outward seeming, or show of friendship or affection, unless the heart be also on the same terms? Who does not prize a rough outside, when it covers an honest inside, more than the most fawning fondness from a heart that is cold and false? Thus it is right to insist on the principles for their own sake, because the principles give their value to the actions, not the actions to the principles, for they are but dross. The principles are the gold on which is to be placed the stamp, and if the gold is not good, the stamp, though it often deceives the people, gives it no real worth.—N. Y. Ledger.

SCIENCE AND INDUSTRY.

—Paper is now used in the construction of chimneys. It is made into blocks, which are joined with cement.

—One of the new industries in Maine which are springing up over the State is the extraction of oil from cedar boughs.

—A German paper says that a company has been formed to manufacture watches to be run by electricity instead of a spring.

—Vermont derives a large income from her sugar maples. One hundred trees will on an average yield twenty-five gallons of syrup.

—A new attachment to the microscope has been devised, the object of which is to observe the melting points of minerals while under the process of examination.

—Chinese firms doing business in New York City during the last year paid the government $250,000 in customs duties. The celestial merchants complain because there is no one in the custom house who can talk with them properly either in "pigeon English" or Chinese.

—Chloride of zinc, so much used in soldering iron, has the drawback of being unwholesome when employed for soldering the iron tins for canning fruit, vegetables, etc. A soldering mixture, free from such defects is now made by mixing one pound of lactic acid with one pound of glycerine and eight pounds of water.

—An Austrian has patented a process for getting a thread that can be spun and bleached from wood, which is cut in long lengths and boiled till it will cleave apart in fibrous bunches by shaking in water. It is then shredded by hand or by machinery, and spun like hemp. This gives a very fine thread, and less boiling gives a coarser one.

—The remarkable finish of American papers places them ahead of any made elsewhere in the world. The excellent properties of the paper are imparted by the addition of a mineral called agalith. It is a silicate of magnesia, and is fibrous, resembling in this respect asbestos. Large amounts of it are found in the United States. This substance does not seem to be found as yet in other countries.

—It is estimated that the amount of petroleum produced in Pennsylvania since Drake's well was drilled in 1859 to the year 1887 was 330,000,000 barrels of forty-two gallons each. This amount of oil would be sufficient to make a good-sized river or lake if collected in one body. It would make a stream ten feet deep, 100 feet wide and about 350 miles long, or a lake or rectangular pond about three miles long, two miles wide and ten feet deep. Still the supply is not exhausted.

—By means of a high box attached to the wall of a house, the outside of the box being made of slate or corrugated iron to absorb the heat, and so connected with openings in the wall as to act as a flue, the heat of the sun can be called in to assist in warming a room. A heater forty-two feet long and six feet wide was formerly attached to the Athenæum in Boston, the work done by it being estimated to be equal to that obtained from the consumption of fifty pounds of coal a day.

—A paper that resists the action of both fire and water has, it is said, been recently invented in Germany by a Herr Ladewigg. The manufacture is accomplished by mixing twenty-five parts of asbestos fiber with from twenty-five to thirty parts of aluminum sulphate, and the mixture is moistened with chloride of zinc and thoroughly washed in water. It is then treated with a solution of one part of resin soap in eight to ten parts of a solution of pure aluminum sulphate, after which it is manufactured into paper like ordinary pulp.

The Ways of Nature.

In the universe every thing is changing and every thing is in motion, for motion itself is the first condition of vitality. The firm ground, long thought to be immovable, is subject to incessant motion; the very mountains rise or sink; not only do the winds and ocean currents circulate round the planet, but the continents themselves, with their summits and valleys, are changing their places and slowly traveling round the circle of the globe. In order to explain all these geological phenomena it is no longer necessary to imagine alterations in the earth's axis, ruptures of the solid crust, or gigantic subterranean downfalls. This is not the mode in which nature generally proceeds; she is more calm and regular in her operations, and, chary of her right, brings about changes of the grandest character without even the knowledge of the beings that she nourishes. She upheaves mountains and dries up seas without disturbing the flight of the gnat. Some revolution which appears to us to have been produced by a mighty cataclysm has, perhaps, taken thousands of years to accomplish.—Science.

SLAUGHTER OF TRAMPS.

A Brakeman Tells How the Gentry of the Road Steal Rides.

Statistics of the number of tramps killed annually in railroad accidents are appalling, but no attention is paid to this wholesale slaughter of an undesirable element of society. However, for the amount of traveling done by the worthless gentry of the road, the accident rate is very small. Scarcely a passenger or freight train makes a trip but one or more tramps ride on the trucks or "blind baggage." Should an accident occur they are very liable to be injured, but the number of marvelous escapes they make causes one to imagine they lead charmed lives. I was on a train two weeks ago when I saw a tramp escape in a way that was simply marvelous. Our train ran on a switch and into a freight. The two engines were badly smashed, and the first passenger car was piled on top of the freight engine. The engineer of the former and both firemen were killed. When everybody had rushed out and the true state of affairs was discovered, there emerged from under the cars piled on the engine, a badly-scared tramp who was not injured at all. He walked away very calmly after shaking himself, and no doubt left on the trucks of the next train. These fellows become very expert at riding in difficult places. As the cars are examined at most stations, they have to hide between the trucks or get off. In the latter case they run under the car and resume their place while the train is moving. "Blind baggage" is another method of stealing a ride. This is a technical phrase to designate the platform of the baggage-car that is coupled to the engine. There is no entrance to the car, and hence when the train starts at night the tramp runs and jumps to the platform, where he can remain unseen until the next station, where he jumps off as the train slows up. He is safe from the conductor and brakeman, and is only in danger of discovery from the engine. The fireman and engineer if tender-hearted will not disturb him, but otherwise they pelt him with coal and threw water upon him until he is glad to leave when the train stops. If he has luck he can ride all night more safely than on the truck, but he gets a dose of cinders and smoke from the engine.—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

FOR OUR YOUNG FOLKS.

THE KIND WANTED.

There's a junior partner wanted
By Will Succeed & Co.,
Who do a rushing business
'Way up on Fortune Row.

I've seen their advertisement—
"No capital required;"
But boys with pluck and courage
Are just the kind desired.

They want a boy who has no fear
Of steady, plodding work,
Who does not wait for luck or fate
Who scorns a task to shirk.

Who slowly, surely digs his way
Through problems hard a score,
And still has grit and courage left
To try as many more.

Who can view a two-foot column
Of figures undismayed,
And through a tough analysis
Or conjugation wade.

Who takes each schooltime lesson
And makes it all his own,
Thus laying up his future
On good foundation stone.

Who does not wait for help to come
From fairy, witch or elf,
But laying hold on "fortune's wheel,"
Turns it around himself.

And if it grinds and will not move,
With all his care and toil,
He rubs each shaft and gearing well
With 'perseverance oil."

Who knows that luck is but a myth,
And faith is but a name,
That plod and push and patience
At last will win the game.

And lads like this are just the kind
For Will Succeed & Co.,
We are wanting junior partners
'Way up on Fortune Row.

WINNIE'S ADVENTURE.

How She Was "Losted," and How She Was Found—A Good Lesson.

Little Winnie was full of importance. She was going to the city for the first time in her life, and she naturally felt happy. It was the day before they were going to start, and mamma was packing. Winnie was trying to help, but I am afraid her help was not very acceptable, for she wanted to take all her toys, and when mamma wasn't looking would run and throw a broken doll or some other old plaything into the trunk, and then mamma would have to send her away, she bothered her so.

At length the next morning came, and then they were fairly in the train and on their way to the city. Winnie was a very active little girl, and so full of mischief that mamma had to watch her pretty closely. She would persist in walking up and down the aisle between the seats, vainly trying to keep her balance, much to the amusement of the passengers.

Arrived at the city, all was bustle and noise, and great crowds at the depot, so that Winnie was almost frightened and kept tight hold of mamma's hand. They took a hack and went to Uncle Fred's. Winnie was very much pleased with the city and wanted to go out sight-seeing almost as soon as they got into the house. Mamma was too tired to go with her then, but she gave her leave to go out on the lawn and watch the people go by.

Winnie watched them some little time, standing out by the gate, and then she thought she must take a little walk herself. She said to herself: "I dess mamma won't tare, 'sides, she won't know I'm doing', an' I tan det bat, and her not know, at all." So she opened the gate and went out. She walked along a little way, until she came to a cross street, down which a procession of soldiers were marching. The band was playing, the soldiers were all dressed in uniform and the plumes in their hats were nodding in time to the music.

Winnie thought she had never seen any thing so pretty in all her life, and in her excitement forgot every thing but how she wanted to see more of the pretty soldiers, and followed them for a long time, trying to keep step with the music, and spatting her little hands together in great glee.

She was so taken up with watching them that she did not notice how many street corners she had turned, till she happened to think if it was time to go home. Then she turned around, going, as she supposed, the same way she had come. She walked and walked a long time, trying to find the great white church she remembered passing, but she could not find it. At last she could not stand it any longer, and bursting into tears, she sobbed, "Oh dear! O mamma! I'se losted!" So she wandered about the streets, hungry and tired, and sobbing very pitifully.

At Uncle Fred's they had just discovered Winnie's absence. Mamma was nearly frantic. Aunt Sue sent messengers in all directions, and told the policeman to look for her.

In the meantime Winnie, so tired and frightened she could go no further, sat down on some steps that led to a large public building. Pretty soon a gentleman came along, and seeing her sitting there and crying, stopped and spoke to her.

"What is the matter, my little girl, why are you crying?"

"I'se losted, and I can't find my way home," answered Winnie, crying all the harder.

"Well, well, don't cry! We'll find home if you'll tell me where it is," said Uncle Fred, for it was he. Winnie had never seen her uncle to remember him, so she didn't know who it was. "I don't know," was her reply; "I'se comed to see my Untle Fred an' Aunt Sue, an' my name is Winnie Earle."

"Why, bless me!" said Uncle Fred, "it's my little niece, Winnie, as true as I'm alive. How in the world did she come here?" And he took Winnie up in his arms and carried her home.

Such joy as there was in the house when he came! Mamma and Aunt Sue nearly kissed her to death, while Uncle Fred was explaining how he had found her when he was coming from his office. It was a good lesson for Winnie, for while she staid in the city, not once more did she go out alone. She always wanted mamma to go with her, and take close hold of her hand. "'Tause," she says, "I'se 'f aid I s'al det losted adain."—Lewiston Journal.

KITTY AS A COOK.

She Tries Her Hand at Making a Custard —Not a Complete Success.

"Everybody's talking about cooking. Mamma reads books and things all about Miss Parloa and Miss Corson, and says I'm to be a good cook when I'm older. Papa wants me to be a useful woman, and says every girl ought to learn to cook.

"I think I'm old enough now. I'm eight years old. I can cook some already. Bridget gave me some dough the other day, and I made lovely little biscuits with it. They were as light as could be.

"And I helped her make a custard for tea. I mean I was going to beat the eggs for her, but I broke the bowl they were in, and she thought she'd better finished it up herself.

"It was a beautiful custard; yellow down in the glass dish, and foamy on top, just like snow heaped up.

"Susy Pratt came to spend the day with me, and in the afternoon we thought we'd go to the kitchen and help Bridget. We went, but it was Bridget's afternoon out, and the blinds were all shut, and the floor was scrubbed up clean.

"I said: 'Let's make a custard all by ourselves!' But Susy laughed, and said I couldn't. As if she knew any thing about it! Of course I knew I could, and I knew papa'd be very much pleased if I made a custard for tea.

"I found a pan of milk, and set it on the stove. Bridget had shut all the dampers, but there was plenty of coal in, so I opened them to make the stove hot. I got some eggs.

"They didn't seem to be the same kind of eggs Bridget takes, for they splashed about like every thing when I broke them. They went on the floor and on the table and on my apron when I broke them, and I know Bridget's eggs didn't do like that.

"I couldn't find the egg-beater, but there was a thing that looked very much like it, so I took that. I let Susy beat the eggs, and they splashed just as bad as when I broke them.

"Then I went to get the other things. I got sugar and butter and cream tartar and molasses, for I meant to have it good.

"I asked Susy if they put vinegar in custards, but she didn't know, but she knew their Kate put vinegar in a good many things. I heard papa say he don't like things too sweet, so I put a little—not more than half a teacup. We put all the things in milk, and me and Susy watched. It didn't seem to look like Bridget's custards. Susy said their Kate stirred hers. I said, 'Oh, yes, so does Bridget.'

"I put in a spoon, but it wouldn't stir nicely at all. It was all hard and sticky on the bottom, and when I tried hard it splashed on the stove. And the stove was red-hot, and it went spht and sizzzz, and made a most dreadful smell.

"Then Susy said: 'Stop; it's getting foamy now.' It was. It bubbled and foamed beautifully, but the next minutes that custard went right up to the top of the pan and ran all over the stove. It sizzzed worse than ever, and hopped about and sputtered, and a great black smoke went up to the ceiling.

"I heard a great noise on the stairs, and mamma saying: 'Is the house on fire?' And grandma saying: 'Bless us! What's the matter? what's is the matter?' And sister Lucy saying: 'Phe-e-ew, what a smell!' Then they rushed into the kitchen, and Lucy opened all the windows, and mamma pushed the custard onto the back of the stove. It had been running over all the time, but when she did that it went right down in the pan and there was hardly any custard left.

"Then mamma took a cloth and took the pan and went to the door. I said, 'You're not going to throw it out, are you, mamma?' She said, 'You can have it if you want it, Kitty.'

"I got a spoon and tasted it. Susy tasted it, too. Then we didn't want any more custard, but we both went and got a drink of water. And I didn't care a bit when mamma threw the custard out.

"Lucy said it was the lamp-chimney cleaner I took to beat the eggs. But she said it wasn't a bit of difference."

—Every morally reprehensible action involves an infinite series of fatal consequences, partly through the relaxation of the strength and purity of the sinner's own soul, partly through the influence of the bad examples on others, and the breaking of the spell which knits the uncorrupted by a strong bond, all to each; nor can any thing be of avail in such a case except a genuine penitence accompanied by a complete removal of the cause of the offense.—Heinrich Ewald.

FARM AND FIRESIDE.

—Farmers' Cake: Take one cup of sugar, one cup of sour cream, two small cups of flour, one egg and one teaspoon of soda dissolved in warm water and stirred in last very briskly. Flavor with nutmeg.

—Oatmeal Cookies: One cup of sugar, two eggs, one cup of flour, one cup of cold boiled oatmeal, one teaspoon of soda, two teaspoons of cream tartar, one tablespoon of butter; roll thin and bake in a quick oven.

—Meat Salad: Chop fine one or two pounds of corned beef, then take two-thirds of a cup of vinegar, one tablespoonful of sugar and one egg. Beat all together and pour into a frying-pan and let boil; then pour into a dish to mold. Serve in slices when cold.

—Pruning when dormant tends to impart vigor; but if done when growing or in leaf it checks growth, and therefore a feeble tree should never be pruned after growth commences in the spring. But healthy, strong growers may be lightly pruned at either season.

—Chocolate Meringue: Boil one pint of rich milk, add half a teacup of butter, one teacup of sugar and three ounces of grated chocolate; let it boil, and when cool add the whites of four eggs; pour this in a pudding, dish lined with slices of sponge cake and bake; cover with meringue and let it brown. Eat with lemon sauce.

—Sheep should be assorted into a sufficient number of flocks to enable the keeping of each grade separate—that is, the lambs, the old and weak sheep, the breeding ewes and the big wethers should be kept in separate flocks. This would give each grade an equal chance, and the sheep would do better in consequence.

—Lemon Tarts: Line pans with paste. Squeeze the juice from four lemons, grate the rind of two; add the yelks of six eggs and the whites of two; add a pound of granulated sugar; place in a small pan or a kettle of boiling water; stir until a thick paste is formed. Fill the shells and bake in a quick oven. Cover with meringue and set in the stove three minutes.

—Farmers must realize that they can not expect to reap a rich harvest unless the crop is supplied with feeding material from the soil in which the seed is planted. How each one's particular soil is to be fed in the best and most economical manner is a question for individual determination. Farm manures are always reliable and should be the main dependence, supplementary with special fertilizers.

—Do not put even the knife blades into boiling water, as the heat of the metal may cause the shank to expand and crack the handle. Set the knife blades down in a little pitcher with warm water until you are ready to wash and dry them. Merely wipe the handles with a damp cloth. After drying the blades rub on a little powdered rotten stone, moistened to a paste with a few drops of water, and polish with a clean, soft cloth. In this way they will not want cleaning every day on a board or in a machine, both of which processes wear the blades very much.

CROPS AND PROFITS.

Decrease the Average and Increase the Yield the Secret of Success.

There is but little question that in raising small crops farmers lose the larger part of the profits that might be secured. The raising of a crop of wheat that only yields ten bushels, can hardly be made to pay expenses, if indeed it does not prove a loss, while if the yield is increased to twenty bushels per acre a fair profit may be realized. This holds good with nearly all kinds of farm products. To this may be added the fact that small yields almost invariably imply low quality, and this in turn generally means low prices that still further cut down the profits. If a certain number of bushels are necessary to pay running expenses in raising the crop for market, the difference of a comparatively small quantity in the yield and quality will make the difference between raising the crop at a profit or suffering a loss.

In a majority of cases a better result can be secured if we are more careful to make the soil richer; to properly prepare in a good tillable condition; to use the best quality of seed and to give more thorough cultivation. Each of these effect the yield and the quality more or less, and if all are given in a thorough manner, it will only be in exceptional cases, when a sufficiently larger yield will not be secured to make the crop profitable.

In very many cases the work of preparing the land, securing the seed, planting and cultivating, is very little less when a small yield is secured than it is with a good crop, and often a small amount of additional work will very materially increase the yield.

A little more time spent in harrowing, or an additional working with the cultivator, will often make a considerable difference in the yield; better a less acreage of almost any crop, with a thorough preparation of the soil, careful seeding in good season, and with thorough cultivation given at the right time and in a proper manner, than a larger acreage less thoroughly prepared and less care taken in the selection and planting of the seed, and with the cultivation less thorough. It is an important item with all crops to have the seed sown in good season. But when you are attempting to plant a larger acreage than you can be able to properly manage, there is considerable risk of at least a portion not being planted as it should be. Decrease the acreage and increase the yield, will in a great majority of cases increase the profit.—Farm, Field and Stockman.

SATURDAY, MAY 19, 1888.

Doubtless the impression prevails generally that the race of the red man is fast dwindling away and will in a few decades quite disappear, but according to Gen. Crrok this is a false impression. He says that the Indian population in this country is steadily increasing.

The great Presidential battle of 1888 will be fought on the tariff issue. All other points of difference between the two great parties will be subsidiary to the great question, whether our economic system shall be changed and this country be made a mere producer of raw material for Europe, or whether the policy which has made her a great nation, industrially independent of the world, wealthy and prosperous, shall be continued.

Following is the comment of the Herald, a Democratic newspaper published at Hinton, Summers county, W. Va., on the Dependent Pension Bill:

The grand free-for-all, go-as-you-please, sweepstakes Pension Grab Bill passed the Lower House of Congress last Friday. This bill brings joy to the hearts of tens of thousands of bomb-proof patriots, who never saw the white of a rebel's eye or listened to the gentle sighing of the festive minnie ball. At the same time the average American citizen stands aghast when he contemplates the enormity of this grab. Just thing of it! $80,280,000 of the people's hard earnings to support only one class of American paupers. Enormity, thou art put to the blush, and thy name is Dependent Pension Bill.

Cannot Carry New York.

The New York Sun publishes an interview with Washington politicians in which it is asserted that Cleveland cannot carry New York, and intimates that Whitney could were he the nominee, because he is not in sympathy with the President's ultra tariff ideas. One man is made to say that there is some unwritten history back of that which is bound to come out before long. "The relations between Vilas and Whitney," says he, "are not similar to those which existed between David and Jonathan or Damon and Pythias. I believe the President himself has doubts of his ability to carry New York, but believes that by his tariff ideas he can make inroads on the Republican column in the Northwest that will offset the loss of the Empire State. He is so stubborn that it would be ridiculous to say that he was under any man's influence but his own, but it is certain that he leans towards Vilas' idea. His selection of a Democrat from Illinois as his choice for Chief Justice of the Supreme Court was a part of his bid for Northwestern support. Vilas believes that the Republican Northwestern column is not impregnable. The idea is delightful to the President's mind.

He would be pleased beyond measure if his Administration could receive the indorsement that would be given it by his re-election. He would be delirious with joy if that indorsement could be obtained, notwithstanding the objections of New York. There is no sentimentality in his composition. He does not value old friendships. He has changed his friends about as often as he has changed his suit of clothes. Those who were most eager for him to be made Sheriff of Erie county were not his most enthusiastic supporters when he was a candidate for Mayor of Buffalo; and those who hotly desired him to be the Chief Magistrate of that city were rather lukewarm when he was a candidate for Governor of that State. Men who furnished the sinews of war to make the fight in Ohio and in New York in his behalf when he ran for the Presidency, with possibly two exceptions—one in Western Pennsylvania and the other in New York City—would see him as far in shoel this time as a pigeon could fly in a week before they would put up a dollar to help him. No one knows this better than Cleveland. He has made sure of the South by giving it all that it has asked for and by offering free-trade doctrines to its delighted theorists. He would like to punish his old State because it has not, in his estimation, given him the enthusiastic support he thinks he is entitled to. If he cannot have the crown of Cæsar, then welcome the example of Samson. I fear that in his defeat will fall the pillars of the Democratic temple. No party can afford to have its fate so indissolubly bound up with the fortunes of any one man, and the Democratic party can least afford it of all."—Wheeling Intelligencer.

OUR WASHINGTON LETTER.

(From our Regular Correspondent.)

WASHINGTON, May 14th, 1888.—"Dictator Cleveland" will be his title, if by a chain of accidents similar to those which elected him in 1884, he should be re-elected this year. He is already the autocrat of the Democratic party. The Democrat who refuses to obey his slightest nod is sent to the rear at once, no matter how high he may have stood with his party.

Samuel J. Randall, who has more than once saved the Democratic party from going to pieces, incurred the ill will of the Democratic boss, because he would not support the Mills tariff bill. Cleveland sent out orders that Randall was to be deposed from the leadership of the Democratic party in Pennsylvania. With the assistance of the Federal officials in that State the orders were carried out to the letter.

But Cleveland is not yet satisfied. He wants to have Randalll defeated for renomination to the House. Cleveland's nearest friends openly boast of this sort of work, and say that he intends to snub every man who refuses to vote for the Mills tariff bill and that he also proposes to use the entire power of the administration to defeat their renomination for Congress.

Last week the President vetoed a public building bill for Allentown, Pennsylvania, because, (it is stated) Mr. Snowden, who represents that district in the House, had refused to vote for the Mills bill, and now his friends say that he has Mr.Snowden's defeat for renomination to Congress assured. These are not merely Republican charges against Mr. Cleveland, they are the openly made boasts of his nearest friends and advisers. This country never before had but one President who descended to such politics, and that was Andrew Johnson. Let Cleveland beware of his fate.

Senator Ingalls is to be given a public reception this week by the Republican National League of this city.

The Democrats of the House are in a terrible muss over this same Mills tariff bill. They have caucused several times without being able to determine just what they will do. The last caucus decided that all who desired to offer amendments to the bill should first submit them to the Democratic members of the Ways and Means Committee for consideration and report to another caucus. The result has been a deluge of amendments. The average member is willing to take away the last vestige of protection from some other member's district, but he wants all he can get for his own.

How they will settle the thing is hard to say, but one thing is now quite sure, it would be absolutely impossible to pass the bill as reported from the committee, and it is doubtful if it can be tinkered up sufficiently to get the Democratic vote of the House. The general debate on the bill has, by mutual consent, been extended to next Saturday,

The House committee on Military Affairs haye made a favorable report on the bill authorizing the President to nominate for retirement with the rank and pay of Major-General such ex-Army officers now in civil life as were promoted for gallantry or good conduct to the grade of Major-General and commauded departments or divisions. The list of those affected by the bill is very small,and includes Gens. Rosecrans, Schenck, McCauley, Palmer and Buell.

A bill has been introduced in the House to prevent convict labor from competing with organized labor. It provides that all convicts employed within the jurisdiction of the United States shall be employed at such labor as they may be best suited to perform and semi-monthly shall be paid the same rate of compensation as is paid to organized labor in the locality where the convict is confined. No convict is to be required to work more than eight hours a day. The bill carries with it an appropriation of $1,000,000, to be expended by the Secretary of the Department of Labor in giving it effect.

The Senate has passed the bill forfeiting all unearned railroad land grants; also the International Copyright bill, and quite a number of bills for public buildings. It has also ratified the Chinese treaty.

The $20,000,000 River and Harbor bill passed the House by more than a two-thirds majority.

Senator Voorhees finally concluded that he was indebted to the dignity of the Senate to the extent of an unqualified apology for his recent bad language, and paid the debt.

The nomination of Mr. Fuller to be Chief Justice of the United States is now in the hands of a sub-committee of the Senate committe on the Judiciary, for investigation. Their report will probably be made inside of two weeks.

There will be special memorial services held on Decoration Day at the tomb of Gen. John A. Logan, under the auspices of the G. A. R. Gen. Logan was the originator of Decoration Day.

Wrought Iron Ranges.

Every thrifty city is constantly adding new and important industries to those already in operation. One of the recent additions, as well as one of the most important, is the manufacture of wrought-iron ranges for domestic and hotel service. Before 1881 there had been various small establishments, but their work was only of limited extent and had not assumed proportions sufficient to warrant any extended notice. In 1883, however, the Wrought-Iron Range Company, of St. Louis, assumed such proportions as to make it one of the most important business enterprises of the city, and the most extensive of its kind in the entire country.

The success achieved by his company is something phenomenal in the manufacturing industries. They now employ a capital of $800,000, and give directly and indirectly, employment through their own and various other concerns which are engaged in making its special castings and patterns for constantly new-devised improvements to nearly 1,500 people. In 1883 the sales of the company exceeded $800,000, and the year 1884 will show totalsales of $1,400,000. All the city trade is done through the Simmons Hadware Company, and the trade for the rest of the country remains in the hands of the manufacturers.

The advantage posessed by the range manufactured by this company arise from two principal causes; the quality of the material used in construction, and the arrangement of the completed work, in its relation to heat and draught. Every one is of course aware of the superior advantage posessed by wrought over cast iron, in its power of resisting the destructive effect of fire. In constructing these ranges nothing is used but the very best quality of refined charcoal iron, either wrought or malleable, and in 1883 there were used by them 1,500,000 pounds of wrought and an equal quantity of malleable iron, together with cast-iron for non-exposed parts, nickel-plated work, and rivets and bolts in proportion.

In 1884 the weight of material used will be doubled. In the manufacture of the wrought-iron, before it is delivered to the factory for use in making the various parts of the range, the utmost advantage is taken of the best scientific and practical knowledge in producing a material of close fibre, thoroughly annealed and tempered by various processes, so as to make it perfectly homogeneous and practically indestructible; but, beyond this, all the parts of the range, which are exposed to the direct action of fire, are lined with asbestos, and thus made still more unassailable to the action of great heat, or its opposite sudden cold. The fire boxes are, moreover, lined with adjustable iron tiles in sections, and the draught is so arranged that there is a constant flow of fresh pure air from the outside of the tiles, and thus combustion is kept up to the maximum without any possibility of injury to the structure of the range.

These being the facts, it is not surprising that the public at large have shown their appreciation of the wonderful improved ranges placed at their disposal, and it cannot fail to be the fact that the business will grow in proportion much greater than in the last two years, and thus make St Louis the great center of the United States for the supply of the best wrought-iron ranges the world has ever known.—St. Louis Globe-Democrat, June 15, '84.

The above company will canvass this neighbornood for the sale of their ranges, commencing next week. They have rented a wareroom in the REPUALICAN building and will run teams in every direction for the delivery of ranges sold by traveling salesmen. These men come here from Fairmont, W. Va., where they have been stationed for the past five months, and where they are highly spoken of as perfect gentlemen.

Explosion on the Track.

RAWLINGS, MD., May 13.—A most distressing accident happened at Rawlings' Station, Md., this morning. As freight engine No. 497 was coming east from Keyser, the boiler exploded with a terrific report, blowing the boiler to pieces and killing the engineer, S. A. Woodruff, and fireman, Harry Kitzmiller. Woodruff was literally blown to pieces, part of his body being found 300 yards distant. He lived in Martinsburg, and leaves a family. Kitzmiller lived in Cumberland, and was unmarried. The force of the explosion tore the engine all to pieces, wrecking almost half of the train. The brakeman made a narrow escape, being buried in a car of bran. The road was blocked for eight or nine hours. Passenger trains used the track of the West Virginia Central Railroad.

CHAPTER 8.
AN ACT.

To repeal section ten of chapter two hundred and one, of the acts of eighteen hundred and eighty-six, entitled An act to incorporate the town of Deer Park, in Garrett county, and to re-enact the same with amendments, and to add additional sections thereto to be known as sub-sections one and two, respectively.

SECTION 1. Be it enacted by the General Assembly of Maryland, That section ten of chapter two hundred and one, of the acts of eighteen hundred and eighty-six, entitled "An act to incorporate the town of Deer Park, Garrett county," be and the same is hereby repealed and re-enacted to read as follows:

SECTION 10. And be it enacted, That the Mayor and Common Council may provide by ordinance to preserve the health of the town; to prevent and remove nuisances; to prevent, restrain, and regulate the running at large of horses, cattle, swine and geese, within the limits of said town; to prohibit and disperse the tumultuous or disorderly meetings of idle, dissolute or drunken persons; to provide for working and mending the public streets and alleys of said town; to provide for the making and repairing of sidewalks and gutters; and generally to provide for the regulation, good government and improvement of said town, and may enforce the observance thereof under such penalties, fines and forfeitures as they shall deem proper, not exceeding ten dollars for any one offense; and all fines, penalties and forfeitures may be recovered before a Justice of the Peace by warrant and judgment, and in case of failure or refusal to pay the same, the party so fined shall be committed for a period not exceeding ten days, to the Jail of Garrett county, in the same manner that commitments are made for fines imposed by the Circuit Courts of this State on conviction of misdemeanor, provided that all the expenses of such commitment and imprisonment shall be paid by the Mayor and Common Council of Deer Park; but said Mayor and Common Council, or a majority of them, shall have power at all times to remit or release the fines, penalties and forfeitures or any part thereof, at their discretion; but any party fined, or subject to any fine or forfeiture, may within five days after the same shall be imposed and judgment recovered, supersede and stay the same for thirty days, by giving ample personal security to the Justice of the Peace, and the fines and forfeitures imposed and collected by any of the provisions of this act may be paid by the Mayor and Common Council to the Bailiff as compensation for his services, or the said Mayor and Common Council may make such other disposition of said fines and forfeitures as they may deem best.

SUB-SECTION 1. And be it enacted, That the Mayor and Common Council shall have power to provide by ordinance for the laying out, opening, widening, straightening, extending or closing of any street, alley or lane in said town, or of any proposed street, alley or lane in said town, which in their judgment the public welfare or convenience may require, to provide for ascertaining whether any and what amount in value in damage will be caused thereby, for which the owner or possessor of any property through which said street, alley or lane may pass ought to be compensated, by the appointment of commissioners, the manner of whom to be determined by said Mayor and Common Council, to assess the same; to provide for assessing and levying either, generally or the whole assessable property within the town, or specially on the property of persons benefited, of whole or any part of the damages and expenses which will be incurred in laying out, opening, widening, straightening, extending or closing of any street, alley, or lane, or grading the same, to provide for collecting and paying the compensation awarded to any person before any street shall be opened, laid out, widened, straightened, extended, or closed, and to enact all ordinances from time to time necessary or proper to the exercises of the powers granted in this section; provided that before they shall proceed to execute any of the powers vested in them by this section, at least thirty days notice shall be given of any application which may be made for the passage of any such ordinance by advertisement in two newspapers printed in Garrett county; and provided further that upon the return of any assessment of damages or benefits or both, made under any ordinance passed under this section, the clerk of said town shall cause a copy thereof to be published once a week, for four successive weeks, in at least two newspapers printed in said county; and provided further that whenever the said Mayor and Common Council open, lay out, widen or extend any street, lane, or alley, they shall establish the grade thereof, and if in their judgment proper so to do, they shall grade the same.

SUB-SECTION 2. And be it enacted, That if any person shall feel aggrieved by the decision of the commissioners appointed to lay out such streets, alleys, or lanes, as to the amount of damages allowed him or benefits assessed against him, may appeal therefrom at any time within thirty days after said commissioners shall have made their return to the Circuit Court for Garrett county, which said appeal shall be taken by filing written notice thereof with the clerk of said Common Council, who shall thereupon without unnecessary delay, transmit to said Circuit Court a record of the proceedings of said Mayor and Common Council, and of said street commissioners in said matter, and said appeal shall be docketed upon the trial docket of the next succeeding term of said court, the party taking said appeal to be docketed as plaintiff, and said Mayor and Common Council as defendant, and said party appellant shall thereupon be entitled to a jury trial to assess the amount of damages payable to, or amount of benefits chargable against him as the case may be, and the amount assessed as such damages or benefits by said jury shall stand in the place and stead of the assessment thereof by said commissioners, and upon said appeal it shall be competent for the Court to quash the proceedings upon the motion of the appellant, for errors or omissions rendering the same fatally defective; and upon the trial of said cause in said Circuit Court either party may take bills of exception to any rulings of said Court upon matters of law arising in the progress of such trial, and either party appeal to the Court of Appeals of this State from any such ruling, or from the action of said court in quashing or refusing to quash such proceedings.

SEC. 2. And be it enacted, That this Act shall take effect from the date of its passage.

Approved February 3d, 1888.

I hereby certify the foregoing to be a correct copy of An Act of the General Assembly of Maryland, passed January Session, 1888.

—An entertainment will be given in West's Hall, Swanton, next Wednesday evening, for the benefit of Anderson Chapel.

—The greenest grocers in town. White & Co. "Plain case."

—Mr. John Shartzer desires us to say that the reports that members of his family are unwell are without foundation. He has removed to 217 Sixth street.

—At a meeting of the Town Council Monday night the Mayor nominated Mr. James Painter for Bailiff and Collector and the nomination was promptly confirmed by the Council.

—We keep the finest line of canned goods in town. A trial will establish the assertion. White & Co.

—Married, at the M. E. Parsonage, in Oakland, by Rev. J. W. Sharpes, Tuesday, 15th inst., Mr. Spencer K. White and Miss Laura L. Loar, both of Grafton, W. Va.

—Dr. D. T. E. Casteel has removed to Buckanan, where he will practice his profession. The Doctor is a clever gentleman and will no doubt build up a good practice. He has our earnest wish for his success.

—Messrs. Offutt and Alderson have commenced the manufacture of brick at Lake View, two miles east of Oakland. They expect to burn 200,000 this summer, for general sale. They expect to sell at a much lower figure than has been prevailing in the past.

State vs. —— Simmons. Violating Local Option law. Guilty. Fined $50.00 and costs.

The following is the report of the Grand Jury:

To the Honorable the Judges of the Circuit Court for Garrett county:

The duties devolving upon us the Grand Inquest of the State of Maryland, in and for Garrett county, have been performed to the best of our knowledge and ability.

We have carefully and impartially examined each witness who came before us, and after carefully and impartially weighing the testimony of witnesses in each case, have found presentments or failed to do so according to our judgment, without malice, hatred, love or affection. We have also examined the Jail and Court House and would recommend as follows:

That a building be erected on the Jail-house lot for the purpose of storing away grain, &c.; also that the lower ceiling in the lower story of the Jail be repaired, and that the lower and upper stories have a coat of alabastine.

We also find that the roof on the Court House is in a bad condition, liable to be blown off at any time, and would recommend that it be attended to at once. We would suggest that the roof be fastened by iron rods from the roof fastened to the foundation of the building; we also find that the wall of the Jail is giving away and should be attended to at once.

All of which is respectfully submitted Believing that we have discharged the duties devolving upon us, we ask now to be discharged.

JOHN E. GNAGEY,
Foreman.

COURT NOTES.

The Grand Jury adjourned Saturday, after finding a very large number of indictments, principally for violating the local option law.

Judge Hoffman came up Monday and took his seat on the bench. Judge Syester left Tuesday morning for Hagerstown.

The petit Jury was discharged Thursday.

A number of persons indicted for violating the local option law have gone to parts unknown. It is to be hoped that they will never return.

Accidently Killed.

On Friday of last week, in a struggle between Patrick Foley and John Bohan, his father-in-law, a short distance above Bloomington, on the B. & O. R. R., Bohan went over the bank, and fell a distance of about 100 feet into Savage river, sustaining injuries which resulted in his death on Saturday. Foley immediately made the fact known, and gave himself up to Squire Moody, of Bloomington, who committed him to the Oakland jail. Foley states that they were struggling and that both came near going over the bank; that Bohan got loose and went over, seizing the branch of a tree as he fell; that he (Foley) told him to give him his hand intending to help him up, and that the old man tried to reach up the hand with which he held the tree, thus, of course, losing his support and falling down the precipice. Foley was discharged from custody on Monday and returned to his home, the unfortunate circumstance appearing to be purely accidental.

Fruit and Vegetable Store.

The Oakland Fruit and Vegetable Store, of Felty & Co., on Railroad street, is now supplied with a full stock in their line, consisting of seed potatoes, seed corn, garden and flower seeds, fruits, fresh fish, canned goods, vegetables from H. Weber's garden, and also a full stock of flower's. Everything in season at the most reasonable prices. 5 5 3

Two tenant houses and five acres adjoins the above. Cottage of ten rooms and half acre of ground near the Court House. For terms apply at this office.

California Letter.

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL., May 1, 1888.

MR. EDITOR:—Will you please give me room in your paper for the following letter, which I wish to have published in fulfillment of a promise I made my friends in Garrett county. In this letter I wish to give them a description of our journey, and of this land of sunshine. I would have written sooner, but I wanted to know something about the country more than I could gather in a few days, and, even now, after spending one month here, I am not prepared to say whether people in Maryland ought to come here or not; but I am going to tell the plain truths as far as I know, and then my friends can form some better idea of California. I do not desire to do this country any injustice, nor to mislead any one by any statement I make.

After our parting at the depot at Oakland, a parting I shall never forget, we started feeling sad to leave so many warm and dear friends. Next morning we reached Cincinnati, O., and we all felt quite well and bright. The evening of the same day we arrived in St. Louis, where we got a good warm supper. On Wednesday morning we were in Kansas City, where we had a splendid breakfast and felt quite well. Here we spent three hours, which gave us time to see much of this great city. I took my family, and boarding the cable cars, we saw some of the best streets, went up some of the great inclines, and had a grand view of the city. On returning to our train I found our friend Mr. E. Boyer writing a letter, which he went away to mail, but before he returned, our train pulled out, and left Mr. Boyer behind. I suppose she was very glad to receive the letter, but we were very sorry to loose our companion, and it cast a gloom over our party to think that he was left behind. On telegraphing we were informed that he would be one day behind us for the remainder of the way. Our friend Cheap John (Jno. O. Michael) became a cripple at this place, and had to buy a cane to assist him in his moving about. On Thursday morning we reached Denver, Colorado, and having some time to stay there we started out to find our old Oakland friend Mr. Wm. Arnold, but found that he had gone to Colorado Springs. This is a beautiful city, and if any one wishes to locate in the mid-weather states, they should look at Denver. Kansas is the state for farming, and the ground is rich and productive.

After leaving Denver we crossed the Rocky Mountains, then the great desert which no man can understand. It is different from any other land I ever saw. We next passed through a portion of Utah, and then over the Siera Nevada Mountains. This is one of the most magnificent views in the world, and we crossed the mountains about nine o'clock on Sunday morning. Here we found plenty of snow, and we snow-balled each other and had lots of fun with our bald-headed fried, "Cheap John," and his bald head became the grand attraction as a mark to throw at. We then commenced going down the mountain, and in sixty minutes we had gone from the eternal snows into a wilderness of flowers, grass, and trees, in full summer garb, with bright sunshine all around, and I felt as though I could live there forever. Another hours' ride brought us to where the grass was being cut and hay making going on.

We arrived in San Francisco Sunday evening about six o'clock, feeling very well; even the little ones were as lively as could be, and did not seem to mind the trip one bit. But on Monday my little daughter was very sick, and for a week there was no change for the better and we feared she would never recover, but a change for the better came at last, and now she is well,

The country along the Sacramento river is lovely, and if I had one of the farms along its banks and all my Maryland friends around me, I think I would be the happiest man in America. The fruit trees are one size having been planted about the same time, and they stand in rows as straight as a line can be drawn. Large vineyards meet the eye in every direction and everything is bright and green. Sacramento City is very fine and is a large place. Oakland is another beautiful place, and the name sounded very dear to us, as it brought to our minds the little town of the same name on the other side of the continent. But this Oakland is a far larger and finer place than the one in Maryland, and here we have no winter, no snow, but sunshine and flowers the whole year through.

San Francisco is a city only about thirty-six years old, and is full of great buildings and lovely homes, surrounded with the comforts and beauties of this grand country and climate. With 400,000 people it also has 60,000 Chinamen who are a curse to the place. If the people of the East could see them as they are here, they would join in an effort to rid the country of them. The city is growing fast, and will some day be a second New York. Work is plenty and wages good. The climate is the same all the year. Stoves are not known, and no place to put them, as there is no need for them. The weather here just now is cool and pleasant and I put on my overcoat every evening, and yet it is summer, and we have plenty of strawberries and new potatoes. Cherries are just in season. I have not been in the Southern part of California and have no desire to go there, as land is too high for any poor man to buy it, and no demand for workers of any kind and no chance to go into business. Mr. Michaels went down to see and was to send for me if prospects were good. He spent a week and went to the great city of Pomona and this is what he wrote to me about it: "I am disgusted with the business here. All the merchants are doing nothing. You did more business in Oakland than all of them here put together." It is a good place for a rich man to go to spend the winter, and that is all there is in it. If I had money to invest would put it into land in the Northern part of the State, and around this city as I feel confident it will double in value in a short time. But I would stay away from every town that has a "boom," or in other words that has been built up in one or two years.

I find some good men in this place, as in all places, but religion is a form in most cases and don't touch the hearts of the people. They go to the theatre on Sunday then to church. Stores and saloons are open all day Sunday, and I am told that ministers go to see base ball played on Sunday.

If anyone wants a farm, this is the place for them. If they want work on a farm or work around at anything, this is the place because wages are good and people can work more days in the year than anywhere else, as there are no rains for six or seven months at a time. If anyone wants to come here and engage in business, move slow, as they will find things pretty well taken up, and I think business is in bad shape, but I will write more about this in my next.

If anyone in Garrett thinks of moving to California, come before you sell out, and see the country for yourself, and you will never regret having spent the money, because this trip is worth all it costs. Don't be afraid about the climate. You can have any kind you desire. Some places are so warm no one could live in them, others where the snow remains all winter, and other places like the East. Here it is delightful and towards afternoon the wind is cool and I feel like wearing a light overcoat. And don't forget that California has counties twice as large as the whole State of Maryland. J. S.

Letter From Iowa.

CEDAR RAPIDS, May 14, 1888.

MR. EDITOR:—Many of my Garrett county friends asked me to write to them, giving them information about this city and State, and by your permission I will use the columns of your paper for that purpose.

It is now a little more than two years since I left Cedar Rapids and returned east, during which time it has been dull here and still continues so. When I say dull, I mean what they call dull in the West. Real estate has come to a fair value; lots range in the most desirable parts of the city from $1,000 to $2,000. In the suburbs they can be bought from $300 to $600. The following is a list of the city improvements during the past two years: About fifteen miles of street has been payed, with cement sidewalks; two lines of street cars have been added, and a sewerage cistern has been constructed at a cost of $76,000. In the way of public works there have been erected a large grain elevator, boiler and engine works and milk condensing establishment. There have also been erected two large brick and terra cotta blocks and a number of private residences. Building prospects for this summer are good.

A number of our citizens went to California, but nearly all have returned not at all pleased with the outlook there.

The weather here has been pleasant during the months of March and April. May set in with cold rain and last Saturday night we had a heavy frost.

There are no saloons here. No beer and no whiskey, and consequently no drunkards. I have seen but one intoxicated man since I came here. The large brewery has gone dry, and it is reported that the building will be used as a locomotive works. Moody and Sanky gave our people a warming up.

I have just received the largest line of pipes that ever came to Oakland. Call and examine them before you go elsewhere.

THOS. LITTLE.

Elkins, Md.

James Beswick was killed Sunday evening, May 13th, one mile north of here, by train No. 6, running over him. On Saturday night and Sunday he had been drinking excessively. About half an hour before he was killed he was seen staggering down the railroad. The engineer said he was lying across the track on his stomach when he saw him, but he could not stop the train till it ran over him. He was terribly mangled and cut up. Deceased was a young man of 23 years, and no known relatives in this country. An inquest was held on Monday by Justice Browning.

To-day, (Tuesday,) finds it snowing and quite cold.

The little boy of Mr. Charles Jamison is still very sick.

Mr. G. W. Moon is also on the sick list.

Mr. J. F. Nydegger is erecting a new store house opposite the depot. Success to our new merchant.

Mr. Beckman, we understand, intends closing his store out this summer, and will leave Elkins. He and Mrs. Beckman will be greatly missed by their many friends, should they leave us.

The store room of the depot will be changed into a waiting room, which will make it much more convenient for passengers.

Mr. Lyons, of the Elkins House, has been making considerable improvement on his premises.

Miss Fannie and her cousin Miss Sue Beckman are visiting relatives and friends here.

Miss Della Savage is with us again. Hope she will remain all summer.

Mountain Lake Park, Md.

Mrs. Dust and family, of Keyser, W. Va., moved into the Hamill cottage last Wednesday, and on Thursday Prof. Armstrong, of Wheeling, W. Va., moved into the Baumgardner cottage.

The long pending suit against the Association was non-suited at Cumberland a few days ago on account of the claimant not having an indisputable title, which strengthens the deed held by the Association. Then it has been in lawful possession for over sixty years, by the Hoye heirs, from whom the Park Association bought it.

Kemphfer & Jamison have completed a well for Rev. W. J. Sharps at his cottage here. They are now sinking two for Major J. C. Alderson.

The material for Miss M. A. Sherman's cottage has arrived. Mr. Jas. Anderson, of Keyser, has the contract.

Dr. Davis is cleaning up the grounds and has commenced grading on Deer Park Ave. and H. street.

Work has commenced at Lake View to burn two kinds of brick.

We have been having some splendid growing weather, but this morning the snow is falling again.

J. A. E.

Flatwoods.

Fine growing weather.

The west weather somewhat retarded the farmers in planting their corn.

The winter grain through this section looks favorable.

A good appearance of abundance of fruit.

Mr. J. E. McGettigan reports business in Oakland last week brisk.

We are sorry to learn that R. M. Alexander, one of our most practical teachers of Garrett, has gone to Frankville. He will be much missed in the community.

Mr. Fries, our miller, left for his home on Saturday last.

Quite a number of our citizens attended court last week.

Mr. J. F. let us hear from Cherry Tree Meadows.

The Cigarette Evil.

A great many people are disposed to laugh at the cigarette as a weak imitation of a cigar, and on indulgence in cigarette smoking as something too trivial for sober talk. The fact is brought out, however, by the recent discussion in the United State Senate, that cigarette smoking is "a very great and very serious evil," to quote the words of Senator Chace, of Rhode Island, who presented a petition from 257 Washington physicians, praying for the passage of the bill to prohibit the selling or furnishing of cigarettes, or of tobacco in any of its forms, to any youth under 16 years of age, in the District of Columbia. Senator Stewart declared that "cigarettes are destroying more youths than any other one thing that is affecting the prosperity of the country."

It is a fact that the cigarette habit has been added to the causes of death among American youth. The newspapers each week chronicle instances, and it may readily be understood that the vast majority of the cases never get into the papers. They are chronicled under the head of "heart trouble," "nervous disease," or something similar, rather than as the result of over-indulgence in cigarette smoking. Not long ago the estimate of a number of New York physicians was published that there were in that city at least 3,000 cases of impaired health, chiefly among boys and young men, as the result of the cigarette habit. In chicago the habit became so general among schoolboys, and girls as well, that the teachers petitioned for a state law against the sale, which the legislature passed.

It may be asked, why the smoking of cigarettes is so particularly harmful to youth, and whether it is any worse than the smoking of full-sized cigars. The testimony of those of the medical profession who have made a study of the tobacco habit is that it is particularly harmful to all persons during the period of growth, stunting their physical development, destroying the tone of the nervous system, and laying the foundation of obstinate lung and throat diseases, dyspepsia, heart disease, etc., which do not develop until later in life. The cigarette is worse than the cigar, because the cheaper grades are made up of tobacco of the cheapest quality; old cigar stumps, loaded with nicotine and the dried saliva of their former smokers; and then the whole abominable mess doctored with opium of other drugs to mask the nauseous taste and render palatable.

Altogether there seems to be strong reasons why the law should interfere and protect the rising generation from the physical evils which come from the use of cigarettes. If people wish to smoke, let them wait until they have reached maturity, when the harm that can be done is reduced to a minimum. The sale of cigerettes has become something enormous in this country. There are 1,200,000,000 made every year at home, and 50,000,000 more imported, which gives an average of 50 a year to evry male person in the country. Several states have already passed laws forbidding the sale or furnishing of tobacco in any form to miners under 16 years of age under heavy penalty, including Ohio; and the general public should be aroused to the extent of the evil in order that the law may be properly enforced.—Toledo Blade.

THE WATERFALL.

Not far away, in a quiet spot,
Where oft I go when my head is hot
And my feet are tired, is a waterfall
That dashes over a garden wall,
And this is the song it sings to me:
"True, true to eternity."

Sometimes I go in the winter snow,
When the icicles hang like coral row,
Chiseled and planned by a master hand,
Greater than any magician's wand:
And then, as ever, it sings to me:
"Pure, pure to eternity."

Sometimes when meadows are fair to see
And the bride of the zephyr, anemone,
Is nestling under the leaves of spring,
With the violets blue as a bluebird's wing,
'Tis then the waters sing sweet to me;
"Hope, hope to eternity."

And oft in summer at sunset hour,
When the soul communes with a higher power,
And the foaming waters are gold and red,
Taking the hue of the heavens o'erhead,
Then softer than ever it sings to me:
"Peace, peace to eternity."

I should like when I go to the world above,
Where the birds will sing, and the trees I love
Will shade me ever, to hear the song
Of the waterfall, as it glides along,
Unchanging ever, the same to me:
"True, true to eternity."

DANIEL BOONE.

Biographical Sketch of This Remarkable Pioneer.

This hero of the wilderness was born a Quaker. His grandfather, George Boone, with his nine sons and two daughters, emigrated from England in 1717, and settled upon a farm in Buck's County, Pennsylvania, upon the banks of the Delaware, near where the city of Bristol now stands. The family joined the ruling religious denomination of the region, and thus became Quakers.

One of the sons, named Squire Boone, married a fair Quakeress of the wilderness, and in the records of the vicinity may still be read the names of their children, and the dates of their birth. From one of these entries we learn that Daniel Boone was born on the 22d of "eighth month" (August), 1734.

That was about the time when Benjamin Franklin was beginning to thrive in business at Philadelphia, as printer and editor, Philadelphia being then little more than a pleasant, shady village of five or six thousand inhabitants. Indians were continually seen in its street, and bears, wolves, wild turkeys and deer were shot within ten miles of the State House. Where Daniel Boone grew up, twenty miles above Philadelphia, the country was still almost a wilderness, in which were to be found panthers, wolves and bears, as well as abundance of smaller game. He was wholly a child of the woods. He lived and died a pioneer.

By a fortunate chance an Irish school-master came into the neighborhood during his boyhood, and his father engaged him to teach his own and his neighbor's children to read and write. Daniel must have improved this opportunity, for the letters which we have from his pen are very well written and composed. But it was in the lore of the woods that he became most deeply versed. He was an excellent shot. He learned to track the panther to his hiding-place. He became an adept in all the arts by which life is maintained in the wilderness against savage men, savage beasts and wild nature.

It is a strange thing, and fortunate for the development of the country, that a pioneer becomes discontented when the first difficulties of the situation are overcome, and neighbors begin to gather about him. He then has an unappeasable desire to break up his home, move westward, and go again through the hardships of creating a farm.

When Daniel was fourteen years of age the mania to remove seized his father, and they went seven hundred miles to the southwest, and settled upon the Yadkin river, in the northwestern part of North Carolina. The party consisted of father, mother and nine children, most of whom must have been transported on horseback, and all of them maintained on the way by the rifles of the father and his elder son. There was a considerable movement of emigrants in that direction at the time, the lands in that region being extremely fertile and attractive, as they remain to this day.

It was here, in the wild woods of Western Carolina that Daniel Boone grew to manhood, and, at the age of twenty-one, built his own log hut, established his own farm, and married the daughter of his father's nearest neighbor. This happy event occurred just as he had begun his twenty-first year.

But now again neighbors began to be unpleasantly numerous, and they were of a kind by no means congenial with this family of Pennsylvania Quakers. Most of them were Scotch-Irish, and among them were the relatives and ancestors of Andrew Jackson and John C. Calhoun. They brought with them a strong Scotch accent, and various habits and notions offensive to the Boones, besides introducing a more expensive style of living than that to which the pioneers were accustomed.

From the door of his log hut Daniel Boone could see the peaks of the Alleghany mountains, six thousand feet above the plain, a barrier which had yet been seldom crossed by white men. Of the regions beyond, the Indians brought glowing accounts; and, at length, John Finley and two or three companies crossed the mountains, and brought back such a description of the land beyond (Tennessee and Kentucky) that Daniel Boone determined to see it with his own eyes, and select a home for himself in that garden of the world. With five companions he set out and spent several months in leisurely traversing the country, in the course of which they had all the usual adventures, including a week's captivity among the Indians.

In due time he led forth a little band of emigrants, consisting of four families, twenty-six men, four women, and four or five children, who settled at a place on the Clinch river, which they named Boonesborough. Here he lived for several years, defending himself and his family with admirable vigilance, courage and tact against the wiles of the Indians. During the Revolutionary War all the Indians on the continent were in agitation, and for the first three years of the contest, British influence being paramount, the Western settlements were never safe from attack. Only a few days after the Declaration of Independence a daughter of Daniel Boone and two of her playmates were paddling in a canoe opposite Boonesborough, when five Indians sprang from an ambush and carried them away with them into the wilderness. Boone being absent at the time, it was not until daybreak the next morning that he and three friends could start in pursuit. But by ten o'clock they came upon the party of Indians while they were halting for breakfast. They gave one fire, rushed upon them, put them to flight, and recovered the terrified and sobbing girls.

During that bloody time two of his sons and a brother fell under the rifles of the savage foe, and he himself spent considerable time as a prisoner among one of the tribes, escaping just in time to conduct the defence of Booonesborough against a most formidable attack. For about ten years the settlers of Kentucky waged almost incessant war against the Indians, and wherever the danger was greatest, there Daniel Boone was sure to be, conducting the defense or heading the attack.

He stood six feet two; his chest was broad, his limbs muscular, and his whole form powerfully and symmetrically developed. His temperament was tranquil and cool, incapable of worry, anxiety, or fear; a man of few words and quiet demeanor, who never could be disconcerted or pertubed. He could stick a nail into a board, and at a distance of forty paces drive it home with a bullet. He could bring a squirrel down from a lofty tree, without hitting it, by the mere shock of the bullet passing close to its head.

In a dark night he could snuff a candle at a distance of forty paces, three times out of seven—a peculiarly difficult feat. He was equally expert in all the ways of capturing game, tracking Indians and guarding against surprise. At the same time he had a constitution that could endure incredible fatigue and privation. On one occasion he walked a hundred and sixty miles in four days and nights, upon only one meal.

The last years of this heroic man were at times clouded with misfortune. When he and his brave companions had rendered Kentucky a safe and inviting dwelling place, he was astounded one day by the sheriff coming to his cabin and telling him that he had no legal right to the lands upon which he had lived so long. And so, indeed, it proved. He could not understand how any man could have a right to his farm superior to his own.

"My footsteps," he wrote upon this subject, "have oft enbeen marked with blood. Two darling sons and a brother have I lost by savage hands, which have also taken from me forty valuable horses and abundance of cattle. Many dark and sleepless nights have I been a companion for owls, separated from the cheerful society of men, scorched by the summer's sun and pinched by the winter's cold, an instrument ordained to settle the wilderness."

All true. And yet the case went against him in the courts, and he lost his farm. After this he went to Virginia, and lived some years a hunter's life in the woods. But, by and by, the spirit of the pioneer revived within him, and, at the age of sixty-one he traversed the whole breadth of Kentucky, and joined his son who had opened a farm near the junction of the Mississippi and Missouri rivers, not far from the village of St. Louis. He was now a subject of the King of Spain, and the Spanish Governor made him commander of his district and gave him eight thousand acres of land.

But ill-luck pursued him, A few years after, when all this country was ceded to the United States, he lost his land through not having complied with some formalities; and, of course, he lost his office as well. Congress, however, some years later, when he was seventy-nine years of age, made him a grant of eight hundred and fifty acres of land in Missouri, upon which he lived in peace and plenty, surrounded by affectionate grandchildren.

Audubon, who visited him in Missouri, speaks of him as a magnificent specimen of manhood; and another son of the wilderness who visited his cabin when Boone was past eighty, testifies to his venerable and winning appearance, neatly dressed in garments woven and made in his own cabin.

"His countenance," says this friend, "was pleasant, calm and fair; his forehead high and bold; and the soft silver of his hair was in unison with his length of days. He spoke feelingly and with solemnity of being a creature of Providence, ordained as a pioneer in the wilderness to advance the civilization and the extension of his country."

To the end of his days he repaired rifles, carved powder horns, made moccasins and snow shoes, and liked no feast so well as a slice of venison toasted at the end of a ramrod. He even made his own coffin, and kept it under his bed for several years. He died in 1820, aged eighty-six. His remains now repose at Frankfort, in Kentucky, where a monument marks his last resting-place.—James Parton, in N. Y. Ledger.

AMERICAN EXPLORERS.

What They Have Done and the Wonders They Have Revealed.

Explorers from America are in every land and on every sea. Already she has contributed her quota of martyrs in the frozen North, and has led the way to the torrid regions of Africa. The people of Europe, through Columbus, opened up a new world for us; and we, through Stanley, have discovered a new world in the old for them.

Much has been done on land, little on the other three-forths of the earth's surface. But here Americans had laid the foundations of a new science—the geography of the sea.

Our explorers have mapped out the surface of the ocean and discovered the great movements of the waters. They have traced the southward flow of the Arctic waters to temper the climate of the torrid zone. They have followed the northward set of the heated waters of the equator and have shown how they form these wonderful rivers of warm water that flow, without walls, through the colder waters of the sea until they strike the western shores of Euope and America, and how they render habitable the almost Arctic countries of Great Britain and Alaska. They have even followed these currents further and shown how they penetrate the Arctic Ocean to lessen the rigors of the Arctic cold. Bravely but vainly have they sought for the ignis fatuus of explorers—the open polar sea—produced by the action of the warm waters from the south.

American explorers have sounded the depths of the ocean, and discovered mountains and valleys beneath the waves. They have found the great plateaus on which the cables rest that bring us into instantaneous communication with the rest of the world. They have shown the probable existence of a vast submarine range of mountains, extending nearly the whole length of the Pacific ocean—mountains so high that their summits rise above the surface to form islands and archipelagoes in the Pacific, and all this vast region of the earth, which, a few years ago, was considered uninhabitable on account of the great pressure, they have discovered to be teeming with life. From the depths of the ocean they have brought living things, whose lives were spent under conditions of such pressure that the elastic force of their own bodies burst them open before they could be brought to the surface; living creatures, whose self-luminous spots supplied them with the light denied them in the deep abyss from which they sprang—abysses so deep that the powerful rays of the sun could only feebly penetrate to illuminate or warm. —Prof. G. G. Gardiner.

TOWERS OF SILENCE.

How the Parsees of India Dispose of the Bodies of Their Dead.

Much has been told of the "towers of silence," and very much of exaggeration. One writer speaks of the dismal surroundings and death-like silence; another of the fetid atmosphere; and still another of his having climbed up on the wall and accidentally dropping his hat and then following it, ending with an amusing account of his escape from the birds and the watchful eyes of the keeper. All pure imagination and pretty writing. The towers are five in number, twenty-five feet in height, and the largest from seventy to one hundred feet in diameter. These dimensions may be all wrong, but they will convey a true idea of these singular structures. Within the outer wall, some five or more feet below the top, are three tiers of a sort of trough—the outer tier for men, the next for women, the inner one for children. Within the inner tier is a large well-like chamber covered by a grating. Leading from this well are drains into outside wells. The dead, whether high or low, rich or poor, approach these solemn precincts on a perfect equality. All are borne by mourners afoot, no pageant or evidences of worldly vanity being displayed. Two men regularly employed for this purpose (none others ever enter the tower) bear the body through a small opening into the tower. All garments and ornaments are then removed. "Naked you came into the world, naked you must go out," said Zoroaster.

The garments covering the corpse are then at once burned. "Fire cleanses from all impurities," said Zoroaster. The bearers then retire, and in one hour every vestige of flesh is removed from the bones by the mouruful birds. The bones are afterward dropped or are washed down to the grating, and, falling below, are under the action of the sun and water and chemicals, in a year or two dissolved into lime, and flow out into the outer wells. "The earth is a good mother to all and should not be contaminated by the fetid remains of her children." Thus taught Zoroaster. The lime which flows into and becomes a part of the earth-mother does not contaminate. There can be no noxious odors, for the dead are brought here before decay sets in. There are about five hundred vultures hovering about the locality. The average burials are four to five a day, but small food for so many voracious birds. There is nothing awful about the premises more than about an ordinary graveyard. But to the contrary there is a beautiful garden, bright with cheerful and sweet flowers and many trees. No traveler could climb upon the wall, for it is as smooth as any plastered piece of masonry, and there is nothing close to them to permit any one to mount upon. No Parsee even, other than those employed for the purpose, ever enter the towers. Which tower the dead of any day will enter is decided by the regular committee, and simply on sanitary grounds, so as to enable each one to take care of its proper proportion.—Carter H. Harrison, in Chicago Mail.

LACK OF ADAPTABILITY.

The Cause of Many Failures in Business and Private Life.

We see it on every side the lack of adaptability; in the professions, in business, in the home; and the cry is echoed at failures in the different channels which are open to the use of energy. "Why did that one fail with all his ability?" In ninety-nine cases out of a hundred perhaps it would be found that the one who missed success was not able to adapt himself to the conditions of his field of labor.

Sometimes it is an overestimate of one's self, sometimes it is simple modesty that holds one from adapting his ability to certain conditions. A friend oftentimes with true insight has been able to make this adjustment for another, and help him into a channel from which his lack of self-confidence would have kept him.

George Eliot would have missed her great literary mission in life if the far-seeing Lewes had not discovered it for her and advised her to try her powers as a novelist. It surely was not that Marian Evans lacked the quality of adaptability that she did not find her instincts pointing to this field before her friend opened her eyes; it was that she was not fully conscious of her own resources, and dared not to hope for the wide and true success that she afterwards won in her works.

The world would have never known so much of the genius that now graces the different departments of art, if some one had not discovered it for its owner, or rather inspired him with the courage to make it available. We would not say that genius is not in a sense very vague, it may be conscious of its undeveloped gift. Its possessor feels its stirrings but can not understand or use it. So he blindly beats the air; happy is he if then the friend puts him in the way of expression.

Business men who lack the essential quality—adaptability—are inclined to lay their lack of success to fate, when it usually belongs a their own door. Shakespeare was a wise man surely, and spoke with an all-comprehensive philosophy when he wrote:

"There is a tide in the affairs of men,
Which, taken at the flood, leads on to fortune;
Omitted, all the voyage of their life
Is bound in shallows and in miseries."

It surely is not alone in the professions, in public affairs, in business, that we need this adaptability. Perhaps nowhere is it needed more than in the home; its loss here is a calamity, and creates confusion and much of that alienation that arises from what seem to be very slight causes. If a man marries one who in her girlhood's home was attractive in dress and manners, who could talk entertainingly and wisely of books, and of the affairs of the day, who could appreciate and even interpret the finest things in music and in art, and if in taking her as a wife he finds that as mistress of his home she seems entirely out of place, that she can not put herself to the conditions and surroundings of a humbler home than was formerly hers, he may chafe and mourn as he will, but so long as this wife lacks the power of fitting herself to this sphere, she lacks an essential quality for the creation of home-happiness. This leads us to say that young men had better clear their vision of love's illusions, so that they may discern before it is too late whether the divinity in the richly appointed parlor of the home of her maidenhood would become a divinity through the years of small things in a struggling man's experience.—Christian at Work.

THE CANDY HABIT.

Girls Have Excuses for Indulging in It for Every Day of the Year.

"American girls eat more candy than the girls of any other nation," said an observing traveler recently. "They commence on New Year's Day and then continue until New Year's eve. Always candy, sometimes because it is birthday, sometimes because they meet a friend, sometimes because it is sent to them. They have as many excuses for eating candy as a man has for drinking whisky."

"Don't foreign girls eat candy?"

"O, yes; they are learning very fast to follow the example of the fair sex on this side of the water. In this country the Yankee girls were the first to start the fashion or habit, as it should be more properly called, and from the East it has spread all over the country. Now I think the Western girls can hold their own against all comers. In Europe Germans, Italians and Spaniards are great eaters of pralines, chocolates a la creme, sugared almonds and crystalized fruits. French women eat fondants, and there a man, when he escorts a lady to the theater, must carry with him a packet of douceurs. In England, candy-eating started with sucking caramels or nibbling cremes. Now the well-to-do Briton eats sweets with his wine after dinner. They are fond of fondants, nougat, candied mandarins or tangerines and other kinds. Butterscotch, barley sugar and chocolate are the ordinary everyday candies. Soldiers suck almond rock while doing sentry duty, the policeman on his beat usually has a bull's-eye or brandy ball in his mouth, and the British tar chews an American caramel instead of the quid of pigtail that used to distend his swarthy cheek in the good old days of England's 'wooden walls.'"—N. Y. Mail and Express.

—A will filed at Washington, D. C., Thursday was as follows: "In the name of God, amen! I, John A. W. Waters, being of sound mind and memory, but knowing the uncertainty of human life, do now make and publish this my last will and testament, that is to say, that all my property I give to my wife."

TEMPERANCE.

RIGHT PLACE FOR A SALOON.

A Problem Difficult of Solution—A Few Pertinent, Practical Questions.

The right place for a saloon is evidently not an easy matter to determine. Those who have been attempting a solution of the problem are met with even more difficulties than the judges of Pennsylvania who are now engaged in searching for honest and reputable saloon-keepers. The legislators of Minnesota assumed the authority to determine the question by passing a license law which confines the saloons in cities to a certain defined area. But this provision has not given general satisfaction, particularly to the unfortunates who live within the saloon limits. The new license law in Illinois has a clause which forbids the opening of saloons within two hundred feet of churches and schools. In this State, as well as many others, the license laws contain no provisions concerning the location of saloons, this matter being left wholly to the discretion of the licensing authorities. In this city the Excise Commissioners have exercised their discretionary powers so far as to refuse licenses in some cases to saloons opened in the immediate neighborhood of churches and schools and have also attempted to draw a line of discrimination between the localities where liquor licenses, in their opinion, might properly be granted and those where they should be denied. A case of this kind has recently occurred which has attracted more than usual attention. A short time ago a man applied for a license to open a drinking place on the corner of Fourteenth street and University place, in the very heart of the fashionable shopping district. When the fact of the application became known a perfect deluge of remonstrances and petitions from the business men and property owners of the neighborhood came flowing in upon the Excise Board. It was represented that the opening of a saloon at that point would be nothing less than a public outrage. Nothing, it was declared, could be more obnoxious and injurious to the reputable business interests of Fourteenth street than the establishment of a resort for loafers in that vicinity. Several large mercantile firms located in the block where it was proposed to open the saloon declared that if the license was granted it would practically ruin their business. In view of this opposition the Excise Board refused a license. The applicant, however, has carried his case before the courts, demanding a mandamus compelling the board to grant his petition.

A case like this is full of suggestion. It brings many question to the lips. The merchants of Fourteenth street were undoubtedly right in resisting the opening of a new drinking resort in that quarter, and the reasons urged against the granting of a license were strong and just. But would it not be easy to find reasons fully as sound and and just against the opening of saloons in a thousand other places in the city. It would be impossible, of course, in most cases to back up a remonstance against a saloon with as much capital and influence as were brought to bear in the case on Fourteeth street; but there are many other things to be considered in the determination of such questions besides capital and influence. Where is the right place for a saloon? Where is the saloon wanted? If not the fashionable mercantile establishments, what other kinds of business are likely to be helped by the proximity of gin-mills? Let some one name them. Is it the baker, the tailor, the shoemaker, the butcher, the milliner, the bookseller? Do any of these find it any particular advantage to their trade to have a grog-seller come and open shop beside them? What surroundings are necessary in order to justify the opening of resorts for loafers, of drunkard-mills, of dens for the propagation of vice and crime? What neighborhoods shall be selected for the establishment of places for the debauchment and ruin of men, for the destruction of families, for the making of paupers and felons? Which is worse, to open a saloon within two hundred feet of a church or a school, or to open one next door to a home, in front of a home, over a home or under a home? What is there that should make a grog-shop a stench in the nostrils of the public on one street and a sweet-smelling savor on another? What should make it an ugly blot on the landscape in one locality and a thing of beauty in another? Is a saloon on Fifth avenue calculated to do greater harm than a beer dive on Mulberry street? If the wealthy and the powerful can not endure the presence of the grog-shop, will they help to thrust them on the poor and the weak? Are the tenement districts—the homes of those who are already deep down in poverty, squalor and misery—are these the proper places to set the saloons? Are they needed here to help men live purer lives, to make happier homes, to strengthen the weak, to cheer the downcast, to guide the erring? Who shall take upon himself the responsibility of declaring where the people shall be cursed with the presence of the grog-shops and where they shall not be cursed? These, it seems to us, are practical questions, and we should like to have them answered.—N. Y. Observer.

LET there be an entire abstinence from intoxicating drinks throughout this country during the period of a single generation, and a mob would be as impossible as combustion without oxygen.—Horace Mann.

A STRIKING CASE.

From Affluence and Honor to Vagrancy, Poverty and Degradation—The Fate of Thousands Every Year.

A few days ago the New York dailies chronicled the arrest of what the policeman called a "bum." This is not an occurrence worthy of record, of itself. There is not a day but there is a less or greater number brought before every police judge in any city of the land. The only reason that we refer to it here is because it is one of the, alas! too numerous instances of the fall of a man from affluence and an honored place in the estimation of his fellow-men, to vagrancy, poverty and want through his slavery to the devil of rum.

* * * * * * *

Edward E. Palmer was at one time one of the most honored private citizens of Brooklyn. He was a capitalist, a man of excellent business abilities, trusted and honored by his friends and the public generally. For several years he was the president of one of the city's banks. He transferred his investments to the De Kalb Avenue Street Railway Company, of which corporation he became president. He had a charming wife and pretty children, and a home of which any man might be proud, in De Kalb avenue. All things were prosperous, and he was one of the favored ones of earth apparently.

He was a companionable man, with hosts of friends; but he, like thousands and tens of thousands of others, dallied with rum. The wine-cup sparkled at his board. He testified his good fellowship by inviting his friends to the saloon, or by accepting similar invitations. The path of life was strewn with flowers; in the sun of prosperity all things were pleasant; his business prospered, and he was accumulating still greater wealth. Under the stimulus of rum, he made the mad resolve to take a short cut to becoming a millionaire. Safe and conservative in his business methods up to the time he began to become the slave of rum, thereafter his business acumen deserted him, and he plunged boldly into the sea of speculation, selecting the cotton market as his field. The speculator is like the gambler. He must have a cool head. Rum worked his ruin by depriving him of his judgment. The market went against him, and he failed.

Rum, hitherto looked upon as his inspirer, now became his solace. It had destroyed his mental energy, and all those powers which he needed at the time of adversity. Instead of seeking some occupation whereby he could maintain his wife and children, and endeavoring to regain the wealth he had lost, he became a sot. Rum had undermined his moral nature, made him its slave, and he could not shake off the chains which bound him. He removed to an obscure suburb, where, amid the direst poverty, his heart-broken wife essays to provide enough to care for her little ones, while her husband is a saloon loafer, arrested on the street as a vagrant!

It is all well enough for others to point the finger of scorn at this man, and show up his shortcomings in the hour of his adversity. But the fact remains that rum was responsible for it all. He is but one of the thousands of examples of the fact that when rum gains dominion over a man, it destroys every manly quality. It deprives him of courage, destroys his self-reliance, dulls his brain so that his business sagacity is destroyed, and renders him a weak, vacilating creature, unfit to cope with the world, doomed to failure in every undertaking.

So long as rum can be had, so long will man fall, and the history of this one man be repeated over and over again, ten thousand times. The case of this man is no worse than that of the humblest working-man who becomes the slave of rum. It is only because there is so mighty a contrast between his former and his present condition that makes it so striking. The fate that has overtaken him is the fate of thousands every year, whose degradation is unnoticed because the distance traversed is not so great.—Toledo Blade.

TEMPERANCE ITEMS.

ACCORDING to Dr. Richardson there are one thousand deaths every week from alcoholism in England and Wales.

THE Bishop of Liverpool attributes the deplorable increase of drunkenness among English women to "grocers' licenses."

IT is estimated that $78,200,000 is spent every year for liquor in Pennsylvania, while the output in anthracite coal, their greatest industry, amounts to only $69,995,000.

THE Chief Constable of Liverpool lately said that if the public houses were shut on Saturdays there would not be provisions enough in the town to meet the extra-purchasing power of the people.

NEWS comes from Berlin that sixteen young men of the university, some of them Americans, some English, and some Scotch, have formed themselves into an International Total Abstinence Society. An American, J. Warren Forbes, of New Mexico, is president. Prof. Bunge's pamphlet, "Die Alkohol Frage," is their hand-book of Temperance doctrine.

THE Excise Board of this city has invited suggestions for a proposed revision of the excise laws of the State. Would it not be just as well to drop out that clause which requires that a liquor dealer shall be a man of "good moral character?" The joke was a good one originally, but it is getting a little old now, and besides that, jokes are out of place in a statute book.—N. Y. Observer.

A clerk in the store declares his belief that the frog descended from the clouds.

A Chapter on Taste.

Taste is the power to perceive the beautiful. Experience is needed for this, and, therefore, the formation of taste is not only varied, but gradual. No one would be content to adhere to his childish judgment, for in most cases it would be but an imperfect one. In the period of youth all is novelty and the estimate of every thing is naturally exaggerated. A young man goes to the theater for the first time; the actors are by no means talented, the scenic arrangements are any thing but realistic, but it is of no consequence, the youth is enchanted—it is a new world to him and he is, therefore, so carried away that he is absolutely incapable of forming a sound judgment; it is not that his taste is bad, but it is simply unformed.

But besides experience, cultivation is required. To acquire a good style in composition, and, therefore, to thoroughly appreciate the best writers, it is by no means sufficient to have written a great deal, experience is not enough here; there must be a careful study of the best authors, and this study will be a great assistance to the acquirement of a sound literary taste.—London Queen.

AMERICAN SAILORS.

Where the Few Now in Active Deep Water Service Came From.

"Deep-water sailors? Why, we have none. There are plenty of tailors and shoemakers to be found on board ship, but mighty few of the old-style sailors," said a shipping agent of New York to a reporter. "Steam has revolutionized the duties of seamen. In old times a sailor could make a sail, shape a block and make his own spun yarn or mats for chafing gear. Nowadays all a sailor need know is how to scrub paint or holystone the deck.

"Half the crew of a steamship are landsmen, who ship as ordinary seamen, and they are very ordinary seamen. A fast mail steamship seldom carries more than two or three trysails, and that only when there is a favorable wind. There are always a few able seamen shipped who can direct the 'land lubbers' in case an emergency arises. Tramp steamers set more sail, as they endeavor to burn as little coal as possible.

"I tell you it is very different now to what it was twenty or thirty years ago, when fast American clipper ships were to be met in all ports, and American sailors were the boast of the country. There are a number of these last named still to be found before the mast, but when they die out the genuine American deep-water sailor will be only a memory.

"What are the causes of it besides the practical stoppage of American ship building? Well, one cause is that boys in this country are too shrewd to go into business that has so little future to it as that of being a sailor. Life ashore has too many pleasures to permit this. Another reason is that ship owners can get Italians and Scandinavians for wages that an American would not look at, and, moreover, the former can be fed much cheaper, and that is an important item in a vessel's expenses. Scandinavians make good, reliable, sober seamen, but they lack the enterprise and energy of a Yankee sailor.

"Most native seamen come from the Eastern States, the nursery for American sailors. They come here on lumber schooners or fishing smacks, and take a fancy to make a long voyage. The best school at present for would-be sailors is whale fishing. The whalers are cruising all the time, and the men all given a chance to learn every part of a seamen's business. Every voyage a number of green hands are shipped, and he must be a very green one indeed who could go through a three years' cruise, without learning all there is to the business. An attraction for American boys about a whaler is that every one on board is part owner of whatever profit may result from the cruise, so that there is united work and an independence that is very alluring to Yankee boys, especially from the vicinity of New Bedford and Cape Cod.

"A singular thing in connection with whaling is that the record of every sailor that has shipped for that purpose is kept by the captains of whalers, and when one of them applies for a place in a few hours his character and ability and past history will be in the hands of the owner or shipping agent.—N. Y. Telegraph.

WASHINGTON CHURCHES.

Some of Those Which Great Men of the Past and Present Have Attended.

"To the memory of General Winfield Scott, who was for many years a member of the vestry of this church."

That was what I read on one of the windows of St. John's Episcopal church of this city, as I passed out with the congregation that had been packed within that grand old church edifice alongside Lafayette Square. On other windows were similar inscriptions commemorating other distinguished officers of army and navy, who had been connected with the church. One of them indicated that it had been erected to the memory of Mrs. Arthur by her husband, Chester A. Arthur, who was a regular worshiper at this church during his Presidency. This suggested a query as to whether or not the prominent people of the nation, those who make and administer the laws, are church-goers. Looking about I saw in the congregation Senator Edmunds, with his white beard and the black skull cap which he always wears in the Senate Chamber; Senator Evarts, with his hands clasped behind his back; Congressman Blanchard, of Louisiana, who had sought a seat in the gallery but had been unable to find one, and a number of grizzled old army officers. A look over the records of the church shows that President Madison and a number of other occupants of the White House between his term and that of the present incumbent. There are a half-dozen or more churches in Washington which boast one or more Presidents among their members or regular attendants at various times. The oldest church in the city of Washington, "Christ Church," Episcopal, which, by the way, is as old as the city of Washington itself, having been built in 1795, five years before the seat of government was transferred here, was the religious house of President Monroe, as it was of other Presidents of early days. Its cemetery was known as "Washington Parish Burial Ground," but when it had been used as the resting place of many Congressmen who died here, it was rechristened "Congressional Cemetery." The Presbyterian church, where the President now attends, was attended by Presidents Jackson, Polk, Pierce and Buchanan. Another Presbyterian church, nearer to the White House, was President Lincoln's church. President Grant attended the Metropolitan Methodist Episcopal church. Hayes attended the Foundry Methodist church, nearer the Executive Mansion.—Washington Letter.

CURIOUS PHENOMENON.

A Body Found in Perfect Condition Eight Years After Burial.

In 1880 the Mexican man-of-war Mexico left San Francisco—having put into this port for repairs—for a cruise along the coast of Lower California. She was commanded by Captain Ascuerega, as true a gentleman and as good a sailor as ever trod a deck, who is yet well remembered here among the Spanish residents. Added to his other good qualities, he was a kind commander, and was the idol of his crew. But whom the gods love die young. Captain Ascuerega was only twenty-eight years old when he left here, and about a month later he was killed by a strange accident.

The Mexico was lying off Port San Bartalome, from where a little bay runs in at a distance of about thirty miles south of the Cerros Islands. The weather was warm and the captain was enjoying his daily siesta on deck, when the vessel gave a sudden lurch and sent a heavy gun out of its place backward on top of the unfortunate commander, crushing him terribly. He lingered for a few hours, but never spoke again, and at nightfall his soul took its flight.

The next day the vessel put into the little bay, and the remains of the beloved captain were borne ashore, followed by the sorrow-stricken crew. The surroundings were well calculated to inspire feelings of reverence and regret. There were no signs of civilization to be seen, except the vessel which lay in the stream. The beach on which the little procession landed was one of sand, which stretched back in its dreary waste to a low chain of mountains on which nothing grew but a small shrub. The nearest habitation to this lonely spot is a settlement of Chinese fishermen, which is fourteen miles away to the north.

A grave was dug in the sand several hundred yards away from the beach, and the last that was mortal of Captain Ascuerega, wrapped up in a shroud, was laid therein. A wooden cross, with his name inscribed thereon, was placed deep in the sand to mark his last resting place. A parting salute was fired over the lonely grave, and his companions in life wended their way back to the ship. The anchor was weighed and the vessel was soon out on the ocean heading for home. Captain Ascuerega was unmarried, but he was the pride and joy of his aged parents, who were bowed with grief on learning of their loss.

In Mexico the laws do not permit the disinterment of a body until five years after burial. In due time the circumstances of the death was nearly forgotton, but to passing vessels the grave of San Bartalome had become a legend. A short time ago the friends of Ascuerega determined to remove the remains and have them placed in the family vault in the City of Mexico, which place had been his home. A vessel was chartered for that purpose, and the grave was visited for the first time in eight years. And now comes the remarkable part of the story.

The grave was opened, and instead of finding the captain's skeleton as the seekers expected, they found a perfect form with the skin closely drawn to the bone. The hair and teeth were found in a perfect condition, although the skin was drawn in such a manner as to render the features unrecognizable. The shroud and clothes in which Ascuerega was buried had fallen into decay. The shoes were still in place, but fell off upon lifting up the body, and the bones were found inside them. The body was "varnished" so as to prevent decay in its removal, and the remains were closed in a hermetically sealed casket and taken to Mazatlan. Here the strange occurrence was reported, and the remains were exposed to the view of medical men and others who had curiosity enough to look upon them.

The cause assigned for this curious phenomenon is that the atmosphere on the beach is very dry and the ground contains no moisture.—San Francisco Chronicle.

SIGHT AND MOTION.

Two Examples of the Illusions to Which Our Senses Are Subject.

The senses are subject to illusions in proportion to the remoteness of the information that they give from the immediate necessities of the organism. Touch, the most immediate and least inferential of the senses, is least subject to illusions; while sight is so very much so, that the blind often say they have an advantage over the seeing in being free from visual illusions. The illusions of bodily motion are much nearer to those of touch than to those of sight, and yet they can under certain conditions be induced through visual impressions. Of this the writer has recently had two interesting examples. He was standing upon the floor of a railroad depot, the boards of which were laid with a considerable open space between them; and the shadow of an electric light was moving up and down by the swinging of the light in the wind. Looking at the floor, it seemed as though the shadow were stationary, and the floor-boards moving. From this it followed that the person on it was moving, too, and the writer distinctly felt the swinging sensation; in fact, his attention was called to the phenomena by this feeling of motion. The other observation was as follows: while riding in the cars and looking out of the window, the trees and all are seen to move in the opposite direction. If, now, one looks in a mirror so situated that it reflects the passing landscape, which, however must not be visible except in the mirror, one has the illusion of moving in the opposite to the real direction of motion, owing to the reversal of the image in the glass. In both these cases an immediate bodily sensation is induced by a more or less unconscious inference through visual sensations.—Science.

BABY'S REQUIREMENTS.

Valuable Suggestions for Young Mothers and Inexperienced Nurses.

When baby begins to creep, which it ought to do at seven or eight months old, its white skirts will get very much soiled unless they are protected. The most effectual method of doing this is to provide creeping dresses which can be worn over the other clothes. They are straight slips made of pretty calico, not too light. The skirt is about a yard long, finished with a broad hem in which a band of wide, flat elastic is run. When it is put on this elastic is brought up under the petticoats so that the skirt of the creeping dress encloses them in a bag as it were. This keeps them perfectly clean and can be slipped off in a moment in case of need, leaving the baby in a fresh white frock instead of the begrimed one which would certainly present itself if it had been scrubbing the carpet, uncovered. Some babies have a comical habit of pushing themselves along the floor in a sitting position; in this case it is well to protect the napkins with a square of flannel.

It is a waste of money to buy expensive toys for a baby. A string of empty spools, an India rubber rattle, a knitted doll, will give as much real pleasure and amusement as far more valuable toys. The smooth handle of a broken knife, on which it can bite with comfort, or some equally trifling article picked up at haphazard and given to the baby, is often adapted as the favorite plaything and prized far beyond some costly toy. It is natural to wish to lavish on very best on these little darlings for whom nothing seems too good, but if the money thus foolishly spent were put away for the child, either in a savings bank or some safe receptacle, it might be of substantial use to it in after years. At least it would then be spent for something that would give it conscious enjoyment.

A delicate baby, of a nervous temperament, should be kept as quiet as possible; never started by loud noises, nor excited in any way. A healthy, robust child should be talked to and played with; taught the cunning little tricks that are so amusing in the tiny natures, and its faculties developed in every way possible. Some mothers, although devoted to their children and scrupulous in giving the necessary attention to their bodily wants, never seem to remember that a baby has a mind, although in a rudimentary condition. Nursery songs and stories, the baby plays in which it soon learns to take its part, all help to exercise its intellectual faculties. While a baby should not be smoothered with kisses and overwhelmed with caresses, nor indeed be permitted to be kissed by everyone indiscriminately, these tokens of love should not be withheld from it on the plea put forward by some Spartan mothers that they are bad for the child. Babies bring love with them; tenderness is their natural atmosphere, the [illegible] in which they can grow and thrive properly. Undemonstrative mothers should remember this and not spare these outward signs of affection, lest in after years they long in vain for them from their children.

If a child can be trained to obedience and truthfulness, all the other graces and virtues can be reared on this foundation. Wise parents do not need advice as to the education of their children in these matters, their own common sense has taught them these fundamental truths. Unwise ones will not profit by any advice, however sound, being confident that they know how to manage their own children better than any one else.—Elizabeth Robinson Scovil, in Good Housekeeping.

A STATESMAN'S JOKE.

An Amusing Anecdote of General Sibley and Stephen A. Douglas.

I heard a new story on General Sibley the other day which loses none of its force because it happens to be authentic.

In the early days when he was a Territorial delegate, the naming of the capital for Minnesota came up in Washington and General Sibley prepared the proper bill, in which St. Paul was duly nominated as the future seat of government. He carried it to Stephen A. Douglas to be put through the Senate. The Little Giant was a good friend of the General and took the bill with a sly twinkle in his eye. It had its reading in due course of time and was referred to the Territorial Committee. Here General Sibley happened to get hold of it once more. Horror! The elegantly engrossed "St. Paul" had been erased and "Mendota" written in its place. The work looked suspiciously like Senator Douglas'. The General hunted him up and asked why the change.

"You ought to have some benefit from this," replied Douglas. General Sibley owned considerable land at Mendota, be it understood.

"Well change it back to St. Paul," replied the General. "It would never do for me to go back to my constituents with the capital at Mendota."

The Senator yielded to urging and the change was made, which was a close shave for St. Paul.

A year or so later there was an excursion down the Potomac. Most of the Senators were on board; also General Sibley. Soon Senator Douglas sought him out.

"Come into the cabin and let me introduce you, General."

Within sat the most eminent members of the American house of lords. Standing before them with his hand on the General's shoulder, Douglas solemnly said: "Gentlemen, this is General Sibley of Minnesota, and the biggest fool of my acquaintance. I wanted to make him rich once and he would not have it."—Minneapolis Journal.

CULTURE OF ROSES.

How Refined Farmers May Propagate These Beautiful Flowers.

Florists who propagate roses by the ten or hundred thousand plants a year endeavor to have every facility for the work, but the farmer who has no greenhouse and requires only a few more roses each year to keep up his stock, must have recourse to ruder means of increasing his plants. All sorts of rose bushes root freely from layers; that is, from shoots forced into the ground so as to bury the edges two or three inches deep with soil, holding it in place there with a peg. This had better be done in July or August. If at a joint near the elbow a break or slanting cut is made half through the shoot, but no deeper, it will assist in the formation of roots. Let the layers stay as they are for a year before you sever them from the parent stock, and treat them as independent plants. Moss roses or Persian yellow roses have to be propagated in this way, or by budding them in other roots, as they will not readily strike from cuttings. A good many varieties of our bedding roses, as Baroness Rothschild, root from cuttings with such difficulty that we should also layer them; but what sorts root easily and what with difficulty can be ascertained only by individual practice.

The great mass of bedding roses can be propagated from cuttings. In November select strong, ripe wood, and cut it up into pieces about six inches long, and preserve these in the cellar in moist sawdust or earth as you would apple or pear tree cions. In early spring plant them out in rows six inches apart and one or two inches between the cuttings in the row. One or two eyes above ground will be enough. Pack the earth very firmly about the cuttings. Shade them a little by laying a few evergreen branches over them, and never allow them to get dry. In five or six weeks a good many will begin to root and grow. But you must expect a good many to die.

Cuttings of roses may also be cut off in the spring and put in at once; many will grow. They may also be secured and put in at any time between spring and winter. The important thing to observe in propagating roses from cuttings is never to allow the cutting to shrivel or become dry in the least before it begins to root; and for this reason summer cuttings had better be put in shady places.

In the case of tea and china roses and others of that type which we grow as pot plants, we can clip them at any time; merely cut off a bit with two or three eyes and the leaves attached, remove the lower leaf and stick the slip into the ground, be that out of doors or into a pot in the house.

While we florists use sand for rooting rose cuttings in, I would not recommend it to farmers because it gets dry so quickly; sandy loam is all right and keeps the moisture better and holds the cuttings firmer. Keep the cuttings moist and shaded enough to prevent the leaves from wilting.

All points considered, the Mannetti is the best stock for budding on, but any vigorous-growing, hardy rose is good enough. Every kind of rose can be propagated by budding. Insert the buds close down near the ground. But on account of the persistent efforts of the stocks of budded roses to throw up suckers, I would advise farmers to stick to layering and cuttings. Grafting roses is a method in common practice by florists, but not to be recommended to any one not having suitable greenhouse accommodation.—Rural New Yorker.

CURING OF GRASS.

The Relative Value of Hay Made in July and September.

I once laid up a mow of timothy and redtop, with a small percentage of clover. One part of the hay was cut as soon as the herdsgrass was in bloom; the rest in the same field was allowed to ripen. The early-cut hay produced milk and growth without meal. When it was half gone we changed to the late cut hay, and fed the whole mow. The stock survived the change, but when the early cut hay was resorted to again, began to show signs of life, and the growth and milk produced was all in favor of the early cut hay. I have often regretted that the figures were not preserved, but I have had the experience and shall not soon forget it, and shall never doubt the value of hay cut in the early part of July, nor the almost worthlessness of September grass. An important matter to consider is the condition of the field after the hay is removed. That portion of the mowing which I cut early, started a heavy aftermath, and held out to several good crops of hay in subsequent years, while the latter-cut portion failed much sooner. Hay may be cut too soon, but had I only one piece of grass to cut, that would be cured as soon as the stalks had attained the natural growth and begun to show by blossoming that the further efforts of nature would not be in the making of hay, but in the reproduction of plant life, by perfecting seed. Hay seed is good feed, but costs too much by the bushel. All grasses native to our soil and all weeds and other coarse matter in the hay is of far greater value cured before the deposit of bitter matter in the fodder.—E. C. Bailey, in Farm and Home.

—Increasing demand for good butter with the certainty of its continuance, is the best assurance a farmer can get for engaging in dairying. It also gives steady employment throughout the year, is a constant source of income, rapidly enriches the soil, may be carried on with small capital, and is profitable on high-priced land.—Prairie Farmer.

WORKING WOMEN'S PAY.

Difficulties in the Way of Adjusting Piece Work.

When work such as sewing is done by the piece, the rate paid depends on the sample maker. If she is very expert in point of time her standard is good for the employer, but very hard on the girls. There are only a few in every work-room who can equal the sample maker. The slower workers are degraded in consequence, although the work done may be equal in quality. As a rule the sample maker is not loved. A conscientious sample maker, the sewing women say, will consider the average speed practicable.

Piece work is one of the most difficult matters to adjust in the labor market. It is conceded that it is greatly in the employer's interest. It is certain that the nervous strain produced by it tears down the health of women. A woman confesses to working from eight in the morning until midnight, lifting her eyes anxiously every little while to the clock. In factories the strain of competition carried to excess is one of the dangers. Notwithstanding these admitted evils, the system is upheld by women workers, for they always have the possibility of earning more than by weekly wages, whether they avail themselves of it or not, and trades unions in England have made an effort toward establishing a weekly wage based on piece work. One method of relieving the strain of piece work is by limiting the hours of labor, forbidding night work, and by prohibiting the slow workers from working for less than a living wage. This can be done through organization, and of course does not apply to the idle and incompetent, who doubtless would and ought to be discharged.—N. Y. Evening Sun.

What's the Matter With Your Blood?

Cleveland Press.

As much blood goes through the kidneys as goes through the heart.

There is nothing startling about this fact except it be a revelation. Many people have but a dim idea of the real work of the kidneys. They not only drain the water from the system, but also the poisonous matter which that water holds in solution to carry out of the system. Over half the time, however, the kidneys fail to do this work.

What is the result?

Gradual failure of strength and health and eventually death by Bright's Disease or some unexpected kidney disease.

But particularly in the spring of the year, when one's blood is filled with poisonous waste, as it invariably is at that time, you feel depressed, tired, languid, do not seem to have any disease, but your system does not respond to the genial warmth of summer and spring as formerly.

You had better look out!

The kidney poison is accumulating in the blood. Tonics won't do any good, they simply treat effects. You can only secure a radical, thorough renovation of the system by the prompt use of Warner's safe Cure, which is the only reliable, scientific specific for the blood, because it is the only known specific in the world for the kidneys, which are the only great blood purifiers.

GEO. F. RIDGEWAY, 94 Murison St., Cleveland, O., Ex-Deputy Sheriff, from uric acid poisoning of the blood became, at times, totally blind, and was troubled with great giddiness. In 1883, after suffering for many years, and being distressed beyond measure, he thoroughly purified his blood by means of Warner's Safe Cure, and says: "I have never had a day's trouble since, and have fully recovered my health. Warner's Safe Cure saved my life."

REV. J. P. ARNOLD, of Camden, Tenn., in '78 and '81 was grievously afflicted with many abscesses, caused by kidney poisoned blood. The abscesses were alive for many months and caused great distress. After thoroughly purifying his blood with Warner's Safe Cure in 1882, he reported that in 1883 he was strong and well, over 71 years of age, and able to preach regularly.

CAPT. W. D. ROBINSON, United States Marine Inspector for the chain of lakes, residence Buffalo, N. Y., in 1881 had a slight eruption on his hands. It soon spread to his face and he was almost blind. His body was covered with light, flaky scales. His skin itched excruciatingly. For two years he gradually grew worse, trying almost everything imaginable. In 1883, after having given up hope of recovery, he began using Warner's Safe Cure. "Twenty bottles," he says, "completely cured me, and to day I am strong and well as ever."

JAMES WIGHT, 295 Fifth Ave., New York, suffered for years from inflammatory rheumatism—a blood disorder—but in 1883 was fully restored to health by Warner's Safe Cure and remains well to-day.

The four above cases are as good as a million. They prove what is stated, that the organ that removes the impurity from the blood most effectually is the kidney, and for this when impaired there is but one sound, rational method of treatment.

Dr. Dio Lewis, who was opposed to the use of medicines in general, thought so highly of this remedy that he said if he had a serious kidney disease, he should use it.

Ask your friends and neighbors what they think of it.

In the spring of the year, when debility is so prevalent, and the seeds of disease are sown that may have a fatal blossoming before the fall, the prudent man and woman will give the system a thorough cleansing and purification.

If is a little funny, isn't it that draught causes a cold, cures a cold and pays the doctor's bill?—Philadelphia Call.

Special Land Excursions.

On May 8th and 22d, and June 5th and 19th, 1888, the "Burlington Route," C. B. & Q. R. R., will run Special Land Excursions from Chicago, Peoria, St. Louis and all stations on its line to points in Nebraska, Kansas, Minnesota and Dakota, and to points in Colorado east of and including Akron and Sterling on the B. & M. R. R. and Sterling on the U. P. Ry., at greatly reduced rates. This will afford homeseekers, land buyers and others an excellent opportunity for the inspection of the Government Lands and fertile country of central, northwestern and southwestern Nebraska, northwestern Kansas and northeastern Colorado, reached by the new extensions of the Burlington & Missouri River R. R. in Nebraska. Also, to visit the rich agricultural districts of Dakota and Minnesota reached by the Burlington Route. A great reduction in rates will also be made to Texas, New Mexico, Tennessee, Mississippi, Alabama, Louisiana and Arkansas points on May 8th and 22d, and June 5th, 1888. Tickets good for 30 days to Nebraska, Kansas, Colorado, Minnesota and Dakota points; and to all other States mentioned, 60 days. Liberal stop-over privileges will be accorded passengers beyond terminal points of this line. For tickets, general or further information regarding the above, apply to any ticket agent of its own or connecting lines or address, PAUL MORTON, General Passenger and Ticket Agent, C. B. & Q. R. R., Chicago, Illinois.

A Thrilling Experiment.

OAKDALE, NEB., April 17.—Special.]—The people of Oakdale and Neligh and their vicinities during the last three days have been intensely excited over an accident which happened on Saturday last to a family by the name of Detwiler. Living on a farm three miles north of of Oakdale, Mr. Detwiler had occasion to draw out the wooded tubing from a deep bored well on his place, and had drawn out seventy feet of it, leaving an unknown number of feet of tubing set in the well. This left a hale about a foot in diameter. During last Saturday forenoon a 3-year-old boy of the family was missed, and a search being made for him, his hat was found near this hole. The mother called down, and the child from an immense depth, finally replied, The extreme horror of the situation can now be better imaged than described. Appeals for help were at once sent to Oakdale and Neligh, and though all possible haste was made, all the appliances for sinking a shaft down alongside the bored hole could not be got onto the ground and the work of digging begun, until late in the afternoon Saturday. Stenson & Stratton, wellborers and diggers from Oakdale, and a firm of men in the same line of business from Neligh undertook the job, and there was no lack of helping hands. But, as the supply of air down in this deep narrow hole might be insufficient to supply the child with air, an iron tube was sunk down and a hand-bellows was inserted, through which fresh air was constantly pumped down during the forty hours while digging was going on.

From time to time the child's cries could be heard, and often during Saturday afternoon it called for 'mamma," and for food and water. The process of digging went slowly during Saturday night on account of lack of light, and rapid diggers had at times to give place to slower workers, All this time the father and mother were enduring untold torture of mind; the former sometimes raving, and gray hairs momentarily increasing on the heads the distracted parents. About three o'clock the child seemed to lose all patience and filled his narrow, circular tomb with his loud crying. It was a hard matter for strong men to endure the extremely distressing condition of affairs with anything like composure. All the time, day and night, crowds of men, women and children, were standing around with horror, and the hearts of the men digging in the shaft and those on the windlass on top were bleeding at the cries of the helpless babe imprisoned below. During all Saturday and Sunday nights perhaps half the people who knew of the affair slept little or none.

On Saturday morning an unfortunate experiment was made in the way of grappling for the child with a "wormer," It is supposed that the wormer caught onto the tubing below and raised it a little when its hold released, and something was heard to drop. Then there was a new distress in the minds of the waiting crowd lest the wormer had caught onto and lacerated the flesh of the child or had inflicted bruises on it, for its voice thereafter was less often heard, and much weaker. As the diggers down in the shaft went deeper, they heard the child moaning in pain.

By Sunday noon they had dug to a depth of about fifty feet, and the child yet twenty-five feet, at least below them. By night-fall the work was necessarily going on slower, for more time was being consumed in hauling up the dirt. Besides, the most delicate and dangerous part of the job was now at hand, and Will Stenson and James Strallen of Oakdale, both experienced men in underground operations, were sent down, and they remained there from 11 o'clock Sunday night until 9 o'clock Monday morning, when the awful scene was ended. Stenson, as a miner and well digger, had many narrow escapes in his lifetime, and as he was now down sixty-five feet in a partially dry shaft, with treacherous walls of earth above and around him, his situation was very perilous, for no time could be spared to construct and sink down wooden curbing in the shaft. Soon after Stenson and Shallen went down into the shaft, at 11 o'clock Sunday night, they struck loose sand and gravel. A few of the impatient crowd above urged Stenson to dig on down through the gravel the remaining seven feet supposed to be yet intervening between him and the child, but he withstood them and began to tunnel in toward the circular hole right on top of this gravel bed, so he could have a firm clay roof to his tunnel. He was then about eight feet to one side of the circular hole. He tunnelled in a few feet and then dug another shaft, closer to the circular hole, down to where he thought the child might be lodged. His object was to strike a spot underneath the spot where the child was lodged, for it would have been fatal to have disturbed the earth wall of the circular hole above the child. Finally he tunneled toward the circular, and tapping it was surprised to find himself yet above the child. He was able then to reach down and tie a rope around the feet of the child and by the same device hold him secure there, but he dared not yet risk an attempt to draw him up for fear he might break down the crumbling walls of the hole and of his tunnel and thus bury both himself and the child alive. So he sank another and second small shaft down a few feet yet further until he knew he was below the child. Under these circumstances the work had to be very slow. Stinson worked like a mole with trenches of sand all around him, passing dirt out by handsful to Strallen in the first small shaft, and Strallen doing the same to Sheriff Elwood, who was out in the main shaft. The extreme peril of the situation at this time can be better imagined than described. Victor Hugo might describe it, but no ordinary pen can do it. All this time Stinson burrowed like a mole and literally working like a mole through so treacherous an element, could hear the child moaning faintly. Whenever a loose board rattled overhead he could feel the shock, and he did not known but that the walls of the shaft were coming in on him, and whenever the furious wind which was then, on Monday morning, raging over the earth's surface, rattled down loose earth and pebbles on top of the child, it seemed to feel it. Indeed, the child seemed to be as sensitive to the least jar as Stinson was, for it would moan the stronger and more piteously. The three men, unnerved by the horror of their situation, worked and wept and the sun arose yet Monday morning with these men handing out dirt by handfuls—practically burned ashes, and with no hand but that of God to trust to, to ever bring them and the child to the earth's surface again. Finally, by the most delicate manipulations, Stinson was at last able to grasp the child, and let himself and the precious burden into the main shaft. At 9.20 Monday morning, after the child had been in the well forty-eight hours about, Stinson was hauled up to the top of the shaft with the child in his arms. A hasty examination of the child was made, when it was found to be not only alive, but bright of the eye and conscious though very weak. Apparently it had slid down the circular hole slowly, rumpt first, but was found with its rump wedged into the top of the circular tubing set in the hole, its feet a little above its head and its hands extended upwards and some six or eight inches above its head.

When the child was brought up to the surface, the scene was indescribable. Stinson staggered unnerved and exhausted, but very many of the 200 people there sank to the ground prostrated by emotion. There were no noisy demonstrations; the hearts of the crowd of lookers-on were too full for utterance.

Although all the parties who helped so faithfully are worthy of unstinted praise, yet under the circumstances, it is natural that Stinson especially, and his partners in the depths of what might have been their tomb should now be the heroes of the hour. While Stinson is lying at his home exhausted, his fellow citizens are contributing to a fund for a testimonial to be given to him.

The Truth of Weather-Lore.

The persistent survival of weather-lore in these days of intellectual emancipation is not at all remarkable when we consider the extent to which the vulgar sayings embody real truths. A few years ago Messrs. Abercromby and Marriott embarked on an extremely interesting inquiry and with the view to determine, by actual comparison, how far the popular proverbs express relations, or sequences which the results of meteorological science show to be real. The investigation proved that something like a hundred of the more popular sayings are, under ordinary conditions, trustworthy. Such being the case, we need not be surprised that simple country folk prefer familiar couplets to all the "isobars," "cyclones," and 'synchronous charts' in the world. "If hills clear, rain near," means the same as "the presence of a wedgeshaped area of high pressure, accompanied by great atmospheric visibility, is likely to be followed by the advance of a disturbance with rain and southernly winds, which for all practical purposes it does, the preference is justified on the mere ground of breath economy. The thirty-one words demanded by science stand no chance against four.

But it is unfortunate that along with the limited number of folk-sayings founded on truth, there has survived a very large number founded on the grossest error. These latter have borrowed credence and respect from the proved credibility of the others, and apparently they are all destined to sink or swim together. Hammer as we will at certain favorite proverbs which we know to be based upon error, it is all in vain. The reverence for tradition is too much for us. And of all the superstitions, pure and simple, which defy our attempts at destruction, the most invaluable are those ascribing certain effects to the influence of the moon.

"Mamma," said a wicked youngster, "am I your canoe?" "No, my child; why do you ask?" "Oh, because you always say you like to see people paddle their own canoe, and I didn't know but maybe I was yours." The boy went out the door with more reference to speed than grace.

Paine's Celery Compound

CURES Nervous Prostration, Nervous Headache, Neuralgia, Nervous Weakness, Stomach and Liver Diseases, Rheumatism, Dyspepsia, and all affections of the Kidneys.

WEAK NERVES

PAINE'S CELERY COMPOUND is a Nerve Tonic which never fails. Containing Celery and Coca, those wonderful nerve stimulants, it speedily cures all nervous disorders.

RHEUMATISM

PAINE'S CELERY COMPOUND purifies the blood. It drives out the lactic acid, which causes Rheumatism, and restores the blood-making organs to a healthy condition. It is the true remedy for Rheumatism.

KIDNEY COMPLAINTS

PAINE'S CELERY COMPOUND quickly restores the liver and kidneys to perfect health. This curative power, combined with its nerve tonics, makes it the best remedy for all kidney complaints.

DYSPEPSIA

PAINE'S CELERY COMPOUND strengthens the stomach, and quiets the nerves of the digestive organs. This is why it cures even the worse cases of Dyspepsia.

CONSTIPATION

PAINE'S CELERY COMPOUND is not a cathartic. It is a laxative, giving easy and natural action to the bowels. Regularity surely follows its use.

Recommended by professional and business men. Send for book.
